Eleazar is willing to die for God's holy laws (v. 28). This is a mystery to the pagan-minded, who only see blind fanaticism in the righteous. St. Paul explains why unbelievers do not understand (1Co 2:14).
Like 6:18–31, ch. 7 bears a likeness to the early Christian accounts of the deaths of martyrs for Christ. The details of each death serve to portray the depths of faith in the story of the seven brothers and their mother. St. Cyprian, in a letter designed to strengthen one who was on the verge of martyrdom, wrote extensively of the martyrdom of each of these seven men and their mother.
Shortly before his death, Moses sings to Israel in Dt 32. The quote here is from Dt 32:36.
The King of the world is the Son of God, who is the source of resurrection and eternal life for those who follow His commandments.
In the Gospel of St. John, Jesus speaks of two paths for the resurrected: eternal life for those who have done good and condemnation for those who have done evil (Jn 5:29).
A basic hymn and prayer of the Orthodox Church is “Memory Eternal”—that the righteous departed will be kept in God's memory for all eternity. The mother and the seven brothers bring to mind the fullness of God's mercy and love.
7:22 It is the Spirit of God who gives breath and life to all people who come into the world (see Gn 2:7).
The tactics of Antiochus were often used by executioners to tempt Christian martyrs to reject Christ.
That God created the universe out of nothing is a fundamental teaching of the Holy Scriptures (Gn 1:1; also see Heb 11:3).
The mother clearly confesses the bodily resurrection from the dead.
While condemning King Antiochus' actions, the youngest brother also hopes that he will eventually repent and confess that He alone is God.
The lowest point of the book has been reached, and now the people of Israel begin to revolt against the Gentiles under the leadership of Judas Maccabeus.
The revolt gains momentum and the early successes attract six thousand Jews, who form an army in order to enter full-scale warfare against the Gentiles.
The outmanned army of Jews with its watchword is not unlike the army of the Emperor Constantine, who fought in the name of Christ to defeat a superior foe in the early fourth century.
8:26-27 Even in the heat of battle, keeping the Sabbath took precedence over all else.
There is a song of peace in Isaiah wherein no one but the Lord can weigh the high mountains (Isaiah 40:12); but Antiochus is so absorbed in superhuman arrogance he is seen as making himself equal to God (see 9:12).
9:9 Note that Herod was inflicted with a similar condition (Acts 12:23).
Antiochus' repentance is a classic case of too little too late. “It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God” (Heb 10:31).
The twenty-fifth of Chislev on the Hebrew calendar corresponds with December 25, bringing to mind the coming of the Son of God in the flesh for the purification of mankind.
The Feast of Tabernacles is a September Jewish feast, mentioned in Lv 23:43 as the Feast of Booths, when the Jews would live in booths constructed out of palm branches.
The scene is reminiscent of Palm Sunday (Jn 12:13).
Antiochus Eupator inherits the kingdom in 9:25. He is a young boy who reigns for only two years before being murdered (see 14:1, 2; 1Mc 7:34).
The Jews begin (10:16) and end their task in prayer.
It was a pagan Greek practice to sell the high priesthood annually in order to raise money for the government.
11:8  See 3:25.
December, 164 BC.
12:2 Timothy: See 8:30–33.
See Jos 6:1–21.
12:22 A manifestation of God, who sees all things.
This is a wheat harvest feast celebrated seven weeks after Passover when men were required to be present in Jerusalem.
Pentecost is used here as another name for the Feast of Weeks.
These tokens are pagan charms that are idolatrous to the Jews.
This is a clear statement that the righteous Jews prayed for the departed so that the sin they had committed might be blotted out.
It is hope in the resurrection of the departed that forms the basis for prayers for them. In Christ all are alive. The power of these verses clearly indicates the depth of belief the Jews had in both the resurrection and the power of prayer for those gone before us to their rest.
Judas Maccabeus leads the Jews in praying for the release of their compatriots who had sinned.
13:4 The King of kings is the Eternal Son and Word of God (see Rev 19:13, 16).
To pray in a prostrate position was a sign of great need to be freed from acts of sacrilege (see 3:15; 10:4). The fact that they made prostrations for three days and then arose reminds us of the third-day resurrection of Jesus Christ.
This is about the year 161 BC. The invaders kill both Antiochus and Lysias (see 1Mc 7:2–4).
By offering the crown of gold Alcimus concedes that Demetrius is the new king, and the palm branch is an emblem of his victory. Our Lord is offered palm branches in Jerusalem emblematic of His Kingship (Jn 12:13).
The parallels between Alcimus and Judas Iscariot are noteworthy. Alcimus attempts to destroy Judas Maccabeus as Judas Iscariot betrays Jesus.
Sprinkling earth on the head is a sign of humility and a recognition of God the Creator (see Gn 3:19 and also Jos 7:6).
Since the Jews had recent memory of the cult of Dionysus, this oath would have had profound impact (see 6:7).
This petition reflects the traditional patterns of Jewish liturgical prayer.
Nicanor was aware the Jews would not fight on the Sabbath.
These Jews were conscripted into Nicanor's army and wished to keep the Sabbath (see Ex 20:8–11).
The Jews believed departed saints like Jeremiah were alive before the general resurrection. This is clearly revealed in the New Testament when Moses and Elijah appear with Christ on Mt. Tabor (Mt 17:1–4).
15:18 The Jews' main concern is to protect the temple (see 14:33).
15:22 See 4Kg 19:35.
One of the prayers the Jews may have used in battle is Ps 68, the verses of which the Orthodox Church uses to begin Paschal Matins, Liturgy, and Vespers. They announce Christ's defeat of death and the devil.
This is Nicanor's right arm, which he used to point at the temple sanctuary and threaten to level the altar and erect a shrine to Dionysus (see 14:33; 15:32).
Delights the ears indicates this work was meant to be read aloud.
1:1 Philopator is Ptolemy IV (see 3:12). The battle near Raphia is dated by most at 217 BC. Arsinoe was the sister of Philopator, who married her and later had her murdered.
Antiochus III ruled Syria in the years 223–187 BC.
The Almighty God can also be rendered “God Most High” (1:16; see also 4:16) or even “the Greatest God.” The place is a reference in late Jewish antiquity to the temple (v. 10) at Jerusalem.
Inner sanctuary is a reference to the holy of holies. For a Gentile to enter this area would ritually defile it and be a great offense against God. Israel and especially the priests would be held accountable.
Evidently, Ptolemy thought the Jews were making up the law to keep him out. They read him the law to try to convince him (Ex 30:10; Lv 16:2, 11, 12, 15, 16). The king feels slighted and sees the high priest as beneath him.
The other shrines are various places in the temple.
The response of the Jews to Ptolemy's plan is telling. The priests, caring nothing for appearance, immediately supplicate God Most High for help, and do so loudly with cries and tears. The priests were fully vested for sacrifice and thanksgiving; sackcloth and ashes were for penitence.
1:17  This is an activity repeated in 2Mc 3:20–30.
Aggressive citizens is likely a reference to young men filled with zeal for the Lord and the traditions of their fathers. They were barely restrained by the older and wiser men who prevailed over them. The older men convinced the younger to join in prayer instead, knowing their uncontrolled fervor would result in the slaughter of all present.
The elders were Ptolemy's guides in the temple as well as his advisors.
1:27 Even those accompanying the king now joined together in prayer to God.
The cacophony is so intense that it seems even the temple walls themselves rebel against such blasphemous action.
Simon was the son of Onias II and high priest from 219–196 BC. According to Sirach, he was a great spiritual leader of the Jews who repaired and fortified the temple at Jerusalem (WSir 50:1–21). His prayer follows Jewish tradition, beginning with praise and doxology, glorifying God as the ruler of the universe. Then follows a commemoration, calling to remembrance God's past mighty deeds on behalf of His people. A fervent petition for divine favor and action punctuates its closure.
References to God as King of the heavens include Dan 4:37; 1Ez 4:46, 58; Jdt 9:12; Tb 13:7, 11.
Punishment on . . . Pharaoh: See Ex 5–12; Rom 9:17.
Chose this city: Jerusalem is specifically mentioned throughout the Old Testament as having been the city God has chosen for His name (see 3Kg 8:44, 48; 11:32, 36; 14:21; 4Kg 23:27; 2Ch 6:34, 38; 12:13; WSir 49:6).
Simon does not excuse the Israelites' responsibility for their current situation, but rather acknowledges their plight is the result of their manifold sins. Israel is lying in helplessness if they face Ptolemy without God's help.
The heaven of the heavens is a superlative indicating the true dwelling place of God is beyond the temple, in the highest of all heights, the most heavenly heaven.
Your glory is a reference to the shekinah, or the manifest glory of God to Israel, who dwells in the tabernacle and the temple, showing His presence among the people. For Christians, the manifest glory of God to Israel is none other than our Lord Jesus Christ, who before His Incarnation made Himself present among the Israelites (Ex 24:16, 17; 40:34, 35; Lv 9:23; 2Ch 5:14; 7:1–3).
2:18 The final indignity to a defeated people was to destroy their houses of worship.
Ptolemy, because of his arrogance before God, shook and became as powerless as the idols of vanity (see also 2Mc 3:27–29 for God's similar treatment of Heliodorus).
Ptolemy slinks away, humiliated but unrepentant.
2:25 Returning to Egypt only served to strengthen Ptolemy's resolve to get revenge on the Hebrews.
The battle lines are drawn in this unseen warfare. The Jews must not worship their God, and everyone in Alexandria must sacrifice to Dionysus. (For a similar battle of powers, see Dan 3.) The census is of slaves and servant classes, seemingly unique to Alexandria. The Jews are effectively becoming the property of the state.
Those registered are those who willingly comply. They will be branded, and this mark of allegiance will be permanent. Some people in ancient times would mark or brand themselves with the symbol of their god, here the ivy leaf. St. John predicts a similar mark of the beast (Rev 13:16, 17) in the end times.
Worshipping the one true God was fine, but not if it involved suffering.
Like Jacob, who struggled with God and prevailed (though he did not “win” the fight with the angel), the Jews are prevailing because they will not abandon their faith. They also paid bribes to save their lives.
These dissenters have not only denounced their God, but are considered betayers to the whole nation of Jews.
King Ptolemy IV was well known for his profanity and rage.
The pretext for destroying the Jewish nation will be their alleged oppression of others—which is also an excuse set forth by those opposing Christians today.
The Greeks in Egypt understood that if the Jews, who had done nothing wrong, have fallen under tyranny, surely no one else is safe either. They act honorably to defend the Jews and aid them.
King Ptolemy IV is living off his father's political and material capital and reveling in it.
The king's anger and spite are clear from the self-justifying style of the letter.
3:21 For many years, Jews had been entrusted with positions of authority, influence, and management in Alexandrian society because they were trustworthy and honest fulfillers of their duty. Many faithfully manned the fortresses that guarded Ptolemy's kingdom (see 6:25).
Citizenship in Alexandria could not be purchased, as could later Roman citizenship, but instead was granted as a royal favor.
The king is calling for the destruction of fathers.
Rather than putting forth an exact copy of the actual letter, the author states this is a paraphrase, containing the manner and tone of the original letter.
A public ceremony was held in Ptolemy's typical style, allowing inhabitants to drink heavily and revile the Jews.
Death and the great fragility of human life carries a spiritual, emotional, and psychological uncertainty for men (WSir 7:36).
4:5 The easiest Jews to identify and arrest would be the elders with gray hair, who were to be led away first.
The Jews cannot even protect their newlyweds from seizure and arrest, a terrible disgrace. The whole scene gives the impression of incredible despair.
Schedia is a small peninsula not far from Alexandria, about three miles. There are so many Jews, they must be interred in the enormous hippodrome or stadium at the east gate of Alexandria.
Up until now, the Jews of Alexandria have been spared such shameful treatment.
Such an unusual command can only demonstrate Ptolemy's irrational rage at the Jews. Recall that at the time of the Nativity of Christ, the Jews were called to be registered and enrolled, each with his own tribe (Lk 2:1–4).
Forty days: A traditional time of preparation, mentioned with great frequency and rich symbolism in Holy Scripture.
4:17-18 The job was too big to complete. This failure was due to God's providence (4:21).
War elephants usually were associated closely with their trainers, and watching over this group would be the master trainer, Hermon.
Five hundred elephants would ensure that not one Jew in the hippodrome would escape a frightful death. Ancient war elephants were specimens of extraordinary size and power. They were used not only for battle, but also as beasts of burden. Wine in ancient times was thick and potent, like a syrup, which was mixed with water to give it a drinkable consistency. Frankincense was a medical remedy for poisoning. To keep the elephants healthy, Ptolemy ordered that they be given this antidote to the wine so they might not later suffer the effects of inebriation.
References to God as Father exist several times in the Old Testament (2:21; Ps 88:26; Tb 13:4; WSol 2:16; WSir 23:4; 2Ez 1:29).
According to WSir 31:20, healthful sleep depends on moderate eating. This deep sleep is a godsend for the Jews and a blessing for Ptolemy.
Their execution should have taken place in the morning.
This would be 4:30 p.m. The king has slept away the entire day.
Phalaris was the ruler of sixth-century BC Agrigentum. His savagery and cruelty were legendary. The godless Jews were those who did not sacrifice to the official gods of Greek or Roman cities. They were considered atheists by the locals.
Ptolemy's friends are preparing to revile those whom the king clearly wants destroyed in order to gain his favor.
Through riotous feasting, Ptolemy is not only still drunk, but he cannot recall his former commands. The king is exhibiting more than his characteristic impulsiveness. God is at work, first bringing the king sleep and now removing his memory of his vicious orders.
The king himself declares the Jews innocent. He has not forgotten the loyalty they have shown as faithful citizens of Egypt for generations.
Ptolemy's drinking friends have no desire to stay and bear the brunt of his anger. The party is over, and one by one they take leave.
5:35 Someone reports to the Jews what is happening. They give praise to God.
The king has sobered up enough to begin the whole cycle of revelry as before.
Finally, the royal family administrators speak up, warning that the city is in chaos. These episodes of Ptolemy's are riling up the growing crowds.
Ptolemy is now adding his characteristic promises to utterly destroy his enemies. It borders on royal hyperbole because he never fulfills his threats.
The Jews have bade each other farewell (v. 49), but still call on the Lord for help even against all odds and cry out for mercy. In the Gospels, there are seven instances of someone calling on Jesus for mercy (Mt 9:27; 15:22; 17:15; 20:30, 31; Mk 10:47, 48; Lk 17:13; 18:38, 39). In every case, they receive it.
The name Eleazar means “God has helped.” His prayer follows the pattern of Simon’s earlier prayer (see notes on 2:1–20).
Eleazar likens Israel to that portion of the sacrifices which was set aside for Aaron and his sons (the priests) as their perpetual due from Israel (Lv 7:34, 35; Nm 18:8–18). The Jews have become the inheritance of the Lord (Ps 27:9; 32:12; Is 19:25). More than a chosen nation, they have been set apart for holiness. Sennacherib (v. 5) was the king of Assyria during the reign of Hezekiah, king of Judah. The episode noted is the occasion when, at the supplication of Israel, God sent an angel who in one night slew 185,000 of Sennacherib's forces, sending him home to Nineveh in humiliation and defeat. He was assassinated shortly afterwards (4Kg 18:13; 19:35–37; WSir 48:18–21).
Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah (their pagan names were Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego) are the three young men in the fiery furnace recorded in Dan 3.
The deliverance of the Prophet Daniel here is a type of the Resurrection.
Jonah is well known as a typological prophecy of the Resurrection of Christ. For the Lord, upon His Resurrection, was given back to His people, His disciples, His kin, and His mother.
The statement You are with us (Is 8:10) is of such importance that it is repeated at Great Compline services. The ultimate experience of this reality is Immanuel, “God with us,” our Lord Jesus Christ.
Almighty in Greek is pantocrator. In Orthodox theology the title Pantocrator is reserved for Christ, the Ruler of all Creation. Manifested in Greek is epifanas, from which we get the English word “epiphany.” The heavenly doors open to reveal angels or heavenly mysteries. These angelic powers are usually arrayed for battle. They terrify the enemy and strike with impunity those adversaries God sent the angels to destroy (see 2Mc 3:25, 26; 10:29, 30).
The fate intended for the Jews has been visited upon their enemies, just as it was with Pharaoh's army in the Red Sea.
A great number of Ptolemy's armed men were slain. Ptolemy has repented of attacking the innocent Jews, not of his cruel and arbitrary behavior.
6:26 They differed in that they worship only the one true God.
6:32 Ode of their fathers: Undoubtedly a psalm or the song of the three young men in the fiery furnace (Dan 3:23–91). This would have become a regular feature in Jewish liturgical practice. How much more appropriate at such a celebration—and everyone would know the words!
The number forty represents a period of preparation, exercise, and readiness. Here the Jews were waiting for their salvation. In light of this pattern, both Advent (Nativity fast) and Great Lent (Paschal fast) are periods of forty days, in preparation respectively for the Incarnation and Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ.
6:41 Unlike the previous letter (3:12–29), which was paraphrased in content and tone, the author states that this letter has been copied.
Though changed, Ptolemy still does not take full responsibility for his own actions, perhaps in order to make his previous royal order not seem ridiculous.
The Scythians were infamous for their savagery and brutality.
God the most High: Another ancient way of referring to the God of Israel, and one frequently used in localities where non-Jews abound (see Gn 14:19–22; Dan 3:26; Mk 5:7; Lk 8:28; Acts 16:17).
While living under Gentile dominion, the Jews had to ask permission of the king to enforce their own laws with regard to putting someone to death (see Jn 18:31).
Alleluia is the Greco-Roman version of the Hebrew hallelujah, meaning “praise the Lord.” Even after aggrandizing the king, the Jews give praise to God for all that He in His power has accomplished on their behalf.
The Jews now seek out, punish, and publicly humiliate the apostate Jews who dared to receive the branding mark of Dionysus (see note at 2:29).
The coastal city of Ptolemais, southwest of modern-day Cairo, was an easily defensible harbor on the Egyptian coast and a popular anchorage for the Alexandrian fleet. (There were many cities named Ptolemais, one near Thebes in Egypt and even one in Israel, the modern city of Akko on the Mediterranean Sea, on the north coast of the Bay of Haifa.)
A column: A common commemorative to memorialize a military victory or other exceptionally significant event.
In their absence, their possessions were plundered. No one expected them to be reclaimed. This was unprecedented.
The Man in Ps 1 is the Lord Jesus Christ (JohnChr, AmbM, Eust, CyrAl, Aug, and Cass). Thus, the Incarnation sets the tone of Psalms, and in the Psalms the Incarnate Lord teaches His Church how to pray. This is why Psalms is the prayer book of the Church.

Ps 1 presents how Jesus lived His life in this world by showing the contrast between His godly life and the life of the ungodly. The Church, then, is to follow His example: His behavior in relation to the ungodly (v. 1); His zeal for the truth (v. 2); and His holy and virtuous life (v. 3).
The Lord in Ps 2 is God the Father, and Jesus is called His anointed (v. 2), which means “His Christ.” Jesus is also called King (v. 6), which is declared by the Father's eternal decree. Jesus is King without beginning and without end, and He is King over His holy hill of Zion, which is the Church. Jesus is also the Son of God the Father (v. 7), for He was begotten from the Father outside of time and “before all worlds” (Creed). He was also begotten in these last times by the Holy Spirit and the Virgin Mary, “for us men and for our salvation” (Creed). Then again, He was begotten in the sense of His Resurrection from the dead (Acts 13:32, 33). But Jesus is also the King over the nations (v. 8), which in due time, He will shatter like a potter's vessel (v. 9) when He restores heaven and earth, and reigns eternally with His saints in “the world to come” (Creed). Therefore, the rulers of the nations are called to serve this King, or they will be judged; but blessed are all who trust in Him (v. 12).
The historical account in Ps 3 is that of King David fleeing from his son, Absalom (2Kg 15–18). But prophetically, Ps 3 is speaking of Jesus as the Son of David according to the flesh (Mt 1:1; Rom 1:3). Thus, Jesus is praying to the Lord, who is God the Father (vv. 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9). And the many . . . who rise up against me (v. 2) are the fallen angels, of whom Absalom and his army were a type. These angels, which number ten thousands (v. 7), always lie in their denial of man's salvation through Christ (v. 3). But just as Jesus always rejected their lies (vv. 4–9), so He is teaching His Church to do the same.
Ps 4 emphasizes the End (vv. 1, 2). Christ “is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone who believes” (Rom 10:4), and He is “the Alpha and the Omega, the Beginning and the End” (Rev 1:8). He exhorts people not to be slow of heart, and not to love vain things, nor to seek after lies (v. 3). Rather, they should realize that the Lord, who is the Father, has made His Holy One, who is Christ, to be wondrous (v. 4) in His death and Resurrection (v. 9).
Ps 5 is similar to Ps 4, again emphasizing the End (v. 1). Christ is the End concerning the inheritance (v. 1), which is the Church and the world to come (Creed). For Christ and His inheritance are the end to which God's eternal purpose is moving (Eph 3:11). And in His prayer to the Father, whom He calls Lord and King and God (vv. 2, 3, 5, 7, 9, 11, 13), He is teaching the Church how to pray and worship in her morning prayers (v. 4) as she travels through this present lawless world (vv. 5–13).
Ps 6 teaches the Church the spirit of humility the faithful should have when they pray, “Lord, have mercy,” for this petition is repeated again and again in the services of worship. This spirit of humility is characterized by (1) a request for mercy, rather than a stern reproof and discipline because of our sins (v. 1); (2) a recognition of the weakness and frailty of our mortal nature (vv. 3, 4); (3) a request for deliverance and salvation (vv. 5, 6); (4) a contrite spirit, characterized by tears and the need for help with respect to sinful passions (vv. 7, 8); and (5) a firm stand against the fallen angels and the Lord's needed help in this warfare (vv. 9–11).
The historical background of Ps 7 is Absalom's rebellion against his father, King David. This history is found in 2Kg 14–18. King David and his army prefigure Christ and the Church, whereas Absalom and his army represent the devil and his angels.

Thus, Ps 7 teaches the Church how to pray in this warfare: (1) The faithful place their hope in God for deliverance from the enemy, that is the devil, called a lion (v. 3; see also 1Pt 5:8). (2) Personal virtue in the Church is essential for successful warfare against this enemy (vv. 4–17). (3) The credit for any victory achieved goes to the Lord (v. 18).
Ps 8 speaks of the Incarnate Lord: (1) His name is wondrous . . . in all the earth, and He is exalted far beyond the heavens (v. 2; see also Php 2:9–11). (2) He brings forth praise from His humble people, who are likened to little children (v. 3; see also Mt 18:1–4; 21:15, 16). (3) He is the Creator of the universe (v. 4; see also Heb 1:10–12). (4) He remembered man and his mortal nature, for example, his fall into death and decay in the grave, and thus, became incarnate to redeem him from death and to crown him with glory and honor (vv. 5–9; see also Heb 2:6–10). (5) Because of the things mentioned above, the incarnate Lord's name is wondrous in all the earth.
At Ps 9 the numerical divergence begins between the Septuagint (LXX) and the Masoretic Text. In the LXX, Ps 9 and 10 are combined.

Ps 9 is concerning the hidden things of the Son. Now this Son is the Only-begotten Son of the Father, and He is the judge of all mankind. As the Creed says, “He shall come again in glory to judge the living and the dead.” And at the End, that is, in the coming judgment, He shall reveal “hidden things.” Thus, the theme of judgment runs throughout the psalm (vv. 5, 8, 9, 17, 20, 26, and 39), and things now hidden will be revealed, some of which are prophesied by David in this psalm. For example, all the deeds of the ungodly will be remembered, exposed and judged (vv. 32–35), for everything will be brought into the light. However, the godly now give thanks to the Lord with a repentant and grateful heart (vv. 1, 2), for they know the Lord will reign over His kingdom forever (v. 37). For His “kingdom shall have no end” (Creed).
Ps 10 shows what it means for the Church to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ (v. 1), for He is the End. (1) Trusting in the Lord overcomes cowardice (Flee to the mountains like a sparrow, v. 1). (2) Trusting in the Lord overcomes the devil and his angels (vv. 2, 3; see also Eph 6:16). (3) Trusting in the Lord makes the Church a dwelling place of God (v. 4a; see also 1Co 3:16, 17; Eph 2:21, 22). (4) Trusting in the Lord keeps one poor in spirit (v. 4b; see also Mt 5:3). (5) Trusting in the Lord helps one love virtue and hate vice (vv. 5–7; see also Heb 1:9; 1Pt 3:10–12).
Ps 11 presents a contrast between the godly who live in light of Christ (the End, v. 1) and the eighth day (v. 1), that is, “the coming of Christ, the resurrection from the dead and the life of the world to come” ( Creed); and the ungodly, who walk in a circle (v. 9), that is, who live only within the confined vision of their seven days each week. And as the godly journey through this present world, (1) they pray for deliverance from the ungodliness around them (vv. 2, 3); (2) they ask the Lord to destroy the ungodly attitudes and behavior around them (vv. 4, 5); and (3) they groan to the Lord in the midst of their suffering (v. 6a). And because of their prayers and groaning in this way, the Lord, through His Resurrection (I will arise, v. 6), (1) boldly establishes them in salvation (v. 6); (2) purifies them in virtue with His words (v. 7); (3) guards and preserves them from the ungodly generation (v. 8); and (4) through His Ascension (exaltation, v. 9b), highly exalts His godly ones (v. 9b; see also Php 2:9–11; Eph 2:6, 7).
Ps 12 teaches the Church how to attain to an exceedingly joyful heart in singing to the Lord (v. 6b), who is the End (v. 1): (1) by godly sorrow and repentance over sins committed, lest the devil and sinful passions (my enemy) be victorious (vv. 3, 5; see also 2Co 7:10); (2) by petitioning the Lord to enlighten the eyes of the heart, lest the sleep in death overtake one (v. 4; see also Eph 1:18; 5:14); and (3) by hoping in the Lord's mercy (v. 6a).
Ps 13 describes both Jews and Gentiles who say in their hearts, “There is no God” (v. 1; see also Rom 3:9–18). For although they may claim to know God, nevertheless, they are actually denying He exists, because of (1) their total involvement in a state of moral depravity (vv. 1, 3); (2) their refusal to seek God (v. 2); (3) their persecution of God's righteous people (vv. 4–6); and (4) their denial of the Incarnate God, the Lord Jesus Christ (v. 7).
Ps 14 teaches the Church the transfigured life the faithful are to live (v. 1), as they “look for the resurrection from the dead and the life of the world to come” (Creed). They are (1) to be holy inwardly and outwardly (v. 2); and (2) to love their neighbor (vv. 3–5).
And those who live this way shall never be shaken (v. 6), either in this world or in the world to come.
Ps 15, similar to Ps 14, teaches the Church the transfigured life in the Person of God Incarnate, who assumed the weakness of mortal flesh (but without sin) for the sake of the inheritance (vv. 5, 6), which is “the world to come” (Creed). And as Man, He interceded to the Father on behalf of the Church, (1) to preserve those who hope in the Father (v. 1, 2); (2) to magnify His will in them amid the fallen world (vv. 3, 4); (3) to enlighten them (v. 7); (4) that they should keep their eyes on the Father (v. 8); (5) that they should hope in the resurrection from the dead, because the soul of Jesus was not left in Hades, nor did His body decay in the grave, and therefore, they should not fear death (vv. 9, 10; see also Acts 2:25–31; 13:35–37); for He was raised from the dead for the sake of their life (v. 11) “in the world to come” (Creed).
Ps 16 was prayed by the Lord Jesus to the Father, to teach the Church to pray righteously and not with deceitful lips (v. 1); for the Lord gives ear to those praying in truth (vv. 1, 6). And we (1) see things the way the Lord sees them (v. 2); (2) pass the test in the furnace of obedience to the Lord's words (vv. 3–5); (3) hope in the Lord in the face of adversity (v. 7); (4) experience protection from enemies, such as the devil and his angels (vv. 8–14); and (5) are satisfied by beholding the Lord's face, that is, His glory (v. 15).
Ps 17 is set in the historical background of David's deliverance from the hand of all his enemies and from the hand of Saul (1Kg 19–31). However, this psalm is forecasting and magnifying the salvation (v. 51) of the Father's King, who is called Christ (His anointed) and David, for He is the Son of David. The seed of the Son of David is the Church.

Man's enemies were death and the decay of the body in the grave, Hades, and the devil. And these held man in great fear and dread and in bondage to sinful passions (vv. 1–6; see also Heb 2:14, 15). But in His Incarnation, Christ descended from heaven (v. 10) and destroyed these enemies (vv. 7–16), and brought everything into the light (v. 29; see also 2Ti 1:10). He ascended on high and called the Gentiles (vv. 17–50).
Ps 18 reveals God the Word (the End, v. 1) becoming Man in the womb of the most holy Mother of God. For on His Nativity, all creation bore witness to the glory of God revealed in His Incarnation (vv. 1–5). And in His birth from the womb of the Virgin, He was likened to the sun rising from the east, to a bridegroom coming from his chamber, and to a strong man ready to run a race, to bring salvation to the world (vv. 6–15).
Ps 19 is a royal psalm, for it is a prophecy made on behalf of Jesus Christ the King (v. 10), who is the End (v. 1). Also, v. 7 identifies Jesus as God's Christ (His anointed) and as His right hand. For the name “Christ” shows the Father anointed the human nature of Jesus with the Holy Spirit (see Heb 1:9; Lk 1:35; Is 61:1); and the names “right hand” and “King” show Jesus is one in essence with the Father and coequal with Him.

This prophecy is first a prayer to the Father, who is called the Lord and the God of Jacob (v. 2). Numerous petitions are made on Christ's behalf (vv. 2–5), one of which regards His death and Resurrection (vv. 4, 7; see also Heb 5:7). Secondly, the prophecy reveals the response of the Church to His salvation (vv. 6–10), one element of which is great joy (v. 6).
Ps 20 is also a royal psalm, because it is a prophecy of the King's triumphal Ascension, in which He is also the End.

The Father is identified as the Lord (vv. 2, 8) and as the Most High (v. 8); and the King is also called the Lord (v. 10), who is exalted (v. 14) in His Ascension, as well as the Father's hand and right hand (v. 9). In being called by these names, Jesus is shown to be one in essence and coequal with the Father.

Jesus asked the Father to raise Him from the dead and to enthrone Him at His right hand for the sake of our salvation (vv. 1–8; see also Heb 5:7–9). And in His death, Resurrection and Ascension, He destroyed all the enemies, namely, the devil and his angels (vv. 9–13). So, in response to all the Lord's mighty deeds, the Church sings and praises Him (v. 14).
Ps 21 is a prophecy of the Lord's death and Resurrection, and of His Church. Thus, this psalm may be outlined as follows: (1) the Resurrection (v. 1); (2) the Crucifixion (vv. 2–22); (3) the Church (vv. 23–33).

(1) Christ is the End, and He was resurrected early in the morning (v. 1; see also Mk 16:2; Lk 24:1). (2) The New Testament quotes several verses from this psalm in relation to the Crucifixion: for example, v. 2, quoted in Mt 27:46 and Mk 15:34; v. 9, quoted in Mt 27:43; and v. 19, quoted in Mt 27:35. (3) The New Testament also quotes v. 23 in Heb 2:12, referring to the “one, holy, catholic and apostolic Church” (Creed).
Ps 22 is the Church speaking about the Lord Jesus (vv. 1–3) and to the Lord Jesus (vv. 4–6). In speaking about the Lord, the Church (the sheep; see also Jn 10:1–5) identifies Him as my shepherd (v. 1; see also Jn 10:14), thus indicating a close relationship with Him. And in this relationship of Shepherd and sheep, the Church lacks nothing, for example, the green pastures of kingdom life (v. 2; see also Jn 10:10); the still waters of baptism (v. 2; see also Jn 3:5); and the conversion of the soul to the paths of righteousness (v. 3; see also Jn 10:3, 4, 7). And in speaking to the Lord, the Church is grateful to Him (1) for deliverance from the fear of death (v. 4; see also Heb 2:14, 15); (2) for the Eucharist (v. 5; see also Lk 22:14–20); and (3) for a lifetime of mercy (v. 6; see also Lk 1:50, 54).
Ps 23 is a prophecy of the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ (the first day of the week, v. 1; see also Mt 28:1; Mk 16:2; Lk 24:1; Jn 20:1).

His Resurrection proves (1) He is the Creator of the world, which He owns (vv. 1, 2); (2) He is worthy to ascend on high as the Forerunner of the Church (vv. 3–6; see also Heb 6:19, 20; 7:26; 9:24); (3) He is the King of glory, who destroyed death and Hades (vv. 7–10; see also Rev 1:18; 4:8–11).
Ps 24 is a priestly intercession by the Lord Jesus Christ on behalf of His Church, which is the Israel of God (v. 22; see also Gal 6:16). He identifies Himself as only-begotten and poor (v. 16), for He was the Virgin Mary's only Child, and He was born into poverty. And although He was hated unjustly (v. 19), nevertheless, He established the New Testament (His covenant, vv. 10, 14). So in His New Testament, He intercedes for the Church in prayer, and by lifting up His soul to the Father (v. 1), He also lifts up the Church to Him in priestly intercession (see also Heb 7:25). And because of His intercession, the Church is taught the ways of the Father (vv. 2–21).
Ps 25 is a priestly intercession of Jesus Christ to the Father at the heavenly altar (v. 6; see also Heb 7:25) on behalf of His churches (v. 12). And since this Priest is innocent (Heb 7:26), He intercedes on behalf of His churches, so they, too, will be innocent through God's merciful redemption (v. 11), as they worship around His altar (vv. 1–11).
Ps 26 is a prophecy concerning baptism, which is a declaration of war (v. 3) against the devil and his angels. This war is declared by the Church in the prayers at the reception of catechumens. In this psalm, these fallen angels are called the wicked (v. 2), my enemies (vv. 2, 6, 11), an army (v. 3), and unjust witnesses (v. 12). And in this war, St. Paul describes them as “principalities,” “powers,” “the rulers of the darkness of this age,” “spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places” (Eph 6:12).

Therefore, in baptism, the Lord Jesus Christ becomes my light, my savior, and my defender in relation to this war (v. 1). And with the Lord's help, these enemies are overcome in battle (weakened and fell, v. 2). So as a result, the fruit borne in the Church is freedom from the fear of death (my heart shall not be afraid, v. 3; see also Heb 2:14, 15); a strong relationship with the Lord (vv. 4–12); and an earnest expectation for the land of the living (vv. 13, 14), which is “the resurrection from the dead and the life of the world to come” (Creed).
Ps 27 is a prophecy concerning the death and Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ and the inheritance He won for Himself (v. 9), which is the Church. Thus, in His death on the cross, Jesus destroyed death and Hades (the pit), for He is God the Word, to whom the Father was not silent (v. 1). And on the cross, the Lord's outstretched hands were lifted up toward the Father's holy temple (v. 2), which is the inheritance. Also, His death destroyed the devil and his angels (vv. 3–5). Therefore, blessed is God the Father (v. 6) for raising Christ (His anointed, v. 8) from the dead (my flesh revived, v. 7), and for protecting the salvation of His people (v. 8), and also for shepherding them in this world and resurrecting them into the world to come (forever, v. 9; see also Creed).
Ps 28 is a prophecy concerning the baptism of Jesus Christ in the Jordan River, celebrated in the services of Theophany (Epiphany). Both words, epiphany and theophany, mean “manifestation” or “revelation,” and theophany has the additional meaning, “revelation of God.” The God who is revealed in Christ's Baptism is God the Trinity: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Thus this event also reveals that Jesus Christ (the Son) is one of the Trinity.

Ps 28 reveals the Father as the voice speaking from heaven at Jesus' Baptism (vv. 3–5, 7–9; see also Mt 3:17; Mk 1:11; Lk 3:22). It also reveals the Son (His beloved, v. 6) and the Holy Spirit (fiery flames, v. 7; see also canticles four and five of Compline in the Forefeast of Theophany). Unicorns (v. 6) are often symbols of purity.
Ps 29 speaks of the Resurrection of Christ, who is the End (v. 1), and together with Him, the resurrection of the Church. Man's dilemma is the death and decay of his body in the grave (v. 10) and the dwelling of his soul in Hades (v. 4). As a result, these enemies rejoiced over him (v. 2), and his life was filled with weeping (v. 6), trouble (v. 8), lamentation and sackcloth (v. 12), and sadness (v. 13). But through Christ's Resurrection (lifted me up, v. 2), (1) the Church will be healed (v. 3), that is, the body will be raised in beauty and power (v. 8) to immortal life forever (vv. 7, 13) at “the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come” (Creed); (2) the souls of the righteous in Hades were brought out from there at His Resurrection (v. 4); and (3) the Church is filled with praises (vv. 5, 13), thanksgiving (vv. 5, 13), great joy (v. 6), dancing and gladness (v. 12).
Ps 30 is a revelation (ecstasy, vv. 1, 23) of Christ (the End, v. 1) in relation to the extreme humiliation (v. 8) He suffered before the Father on the cross for mankind. For example, v. 6 is quoted by Him as His last words to the Father on the cross just before He died (Lk 23:46). Verses 2–23 describe this humiliation, and vv. 24, 25 emphasize the fruit His humiliation bears in the Church, e.g., love for the Father. And v. 24 also speaks of those who act with great arrogance, that is, who reject the Lord's extreme humiliation with their extreme arrogance.
Ps. 31 is a prophecy concerning enlightenment (understanding, vv. 1, 8), which is fulfilled in the Sacrament of Baptism. For this sacrament is known as the Sacrament of Enlightenment, in which sins are forgiven (vv. 1, 5). And on the Day of Pentecost, St. Peter urged those listening to “be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins” (Acts 2:38). Thus, the Creed also says, “I acknowledge one baptism for the remission of sins.”

Verses 1, 2 emphasize the blessings of baptism; vv. 3–7, the responsibility of the one baptized; and vv. 8–11, Christ's response to the faithfulness of the one baptized. This explains why Ps. 31 is read when the newly baptized are brought up out of the water and given their white garments.
Ps 32 is a prophecy revealing the Trinity as the Creator of the world. The Lord refers to the Father (vv. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 18, 20, and 22). The Word of the Lord is the Son of the Father (vv. 4 and 6), and the Holy Spirit is the breath of His mouth (v. 6). Therefore, the Father created the world through His Son and His Spirit, who are His coequals. And v. 9 reveals that the Father spoke and commanded the words in Gn 1, and the Son and the Holy Spirit fulfilled that which was commanded.

Therefore, the saints (righteous ones) worship the Trinity (vv. 1–3) as the Creator of the world (vv. 4–17), and they hope in the Trinity to raise them from the dead in the world to come (vv. 18–22; see also Creed).
Ps 33 is a prophecy teaching how Holy Communion (v. 9) is to be received in the Church: (1) with a gentle spirit (v. 3); (2) as a sojourner in the world (v. 5); (3) with a poor, broken, and humble spirit (vv. 7, 19); (4) with the fear of God (vv. 8, 10, 12); (5) with hope in the world to come (vv. 9, 23); (6) with clean lips and a peaceful heart (vv. 13–17; see also 1Pt 3:10–12).
Ps 34 is a prophecy regarding the Lord's sufferings and death on the cross in Holy Week. For example, v. 11 refers to the false witnesses at the Lord's trial. He endured these things on behalf of and with His Church in mind (My only-begotten, v. 17; the great church and a mighty people, v. 18). And His people greatly rejoice and magnify Him (v. 27) because of what He did for them.
Ps 35 reveals the right and wrong uses of free will and the fruits that result in either case. First, it shows that sin or evil is an action of man's free will (says within himself, v. 2; acts deceitfully, lest He discover, v. 3; is unwilling, v. 4; devises, sets himself, and does not abhor, v. 5). Therefore, sin or evil is not a part of human essence or nature, for God created human nature good in itself. Sinning is altogether the wrong use of free will, and the most dangerous wrong use is arrogance, which often comes against the saints (v. 12). But such a wrong use ultimately brings down the lawless (fall there and unable to stand, v. 13).

Second, this psalm reveals the proper use of free will, which is to seek out and hope (v. 8) for God's mercy (vv. 6, 11), His truth (v. 6), His righteousness (vv. 7, 11), and His judgments (v. 7). Also with free will, the upright in heart (v. 11) may be intoxicated by drinking the abundant water (v. 9) that flows from the fountain and by seeing the light which is in light (v. 10). The fountain is the Father, and the Son is the water, the light, and the life that goes forth from this fountain. Those who willingly drink of this water in baptism, and who see this light, partake of life and light (see also Jn 1:4), and also become intoxicated with the Holy Spirit (the fatness, v. 9; see also Jn 7:37–39; Acts 2:13–17; Eph 5:18).
Ps 36 shows why the martyrs were willing to die (v. 32): they were “looking for the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come” (Creed). The world to come is the theme throughout this psalm (vv. 3, 9, 11, 18, 22, 27, 28, 29, 34, 39, 40). Prior to their martyrdom, the martyrs lived a godly life in light of the new world (vv. 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 16, 19, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 31, 37). Therefore, they are the best examples to encourage God's people to live the Christian life in the same anticipation of the world to come. But the ungodly shall not inherit that world (vv. 2, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 20, 22, 28, 34, 35, 36, 38).
Ps 37 reveals the great love of Christ for mankind in His sufferings and death on the cross, especially v. 18: For I am ready for wounds, and my pain is continually with me. And although He was “separate from sinners” (Heb 7:26) and “knew no sin” (2Co 5:21), yet out of His great compassion for sinners, He prays this prayer in a relative sense as though He were one of them. Thus, He takes the place of sinners as one of them, and intercedes to the Father for their salvation in the midst of His sufferings and death on the cross.
Ps 38 reminds the Church of its pilgrim status in the present world (a sojourner and a stranger, v. 13; see also 1Pt 1:1). For God's people are “to look for the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come” (Creed). For Christ is the End (v. 1). Meanwhile, (1) the tongue is to be kept from sinning (vv. 2, 3); (2) the heart is to be on fire with meditation on the things of God (v. 4); (3) man, made by God (v. 10), is to grow in divine knowledge, so as not to lack (v. 5) or be deadened (v. 3) by transgressions (vv. 9, 12). Rather, he is to revive before he departs in death (no longer here, v. 14). A handbreadth (v. 6) is an ancient unit of measure of about 4–1/2 inches, here used to show the brief span of our lives.
Ps 39 is a prophecy of the Incarnation (vv. 7–9; see also Heb 10:5–7). In His Incarnation, the Lord assumed a mortal body (v. 7) and a rational soul. But here the body is emphasized, because man's body is mortal and subject to death and decay in the grave (a miserable pit, v. 3). So by His death in the body, Christ destroyed death, and by His Resurrection (brought me up and a rock, v. 3), He overcame the decay that held man's body in the grave. He was able to do all this because of the two wills in His one Person. For He willed (v. 9) by His human will and energy. And the phrase Your will (v. 9) shows that He possessed within Himself the same will and energy as God the Father, because He is “one in essence” with Him (Creed). Therefore, by means of His two wills and energies, He destroyed death and decay, and put a new song in the mouth of the Church (v. 4).
Ps 40 is a prophecy of Christ (the End) and of His death and Resurrection, which brings healing to the Church (from sickness to wholeness, v. 4, and heal my soul, v. 5). When the Lord Jesus says, for I have sinned against You (v. 5), He is taking our part, although He Himself is sinless (innocence, v. 13; see also Heb 7:25, 26).

Verse 10 speaks of the betrayal by Judas (see also Jn 13:18); vv. 6, 9 of Christ's sufferings and death; and vv. 2, 3, 11–14 of His Resurrection.
Ps 41 speaks of Christ (the End, v. 1) and His Baptism in the Jordan (from the land of the Jordan and Hermon, v. 7). His Baptism is celebrated in the Church as the Feast of Theophany. It is celebrated as a festival with great joy and praise (v. 5). His Baptism in the Jordan is our salvation (vv. 6, 12), which produces (1) a longing and thirst for union and communion with God (vv. 2, 3); (2) tears of joy in the midst of suffering (vv. 4–6, 10–12); and (3) enlightenment (understanding, v. 1) concerning the unsearchable riches of Christ (vv. 8, 9; see also Rom 11:33; Eph 3:8).
Ps 42 is a prayer of Christ on behalf of His Church for enlightenment in the midst of the ungodly (an unholy nation, v. 1; my enemy afflicts me, v. 2). For He Himself is light and truth (v. 3), who was sent into the world in His Incarnation (see also Jn 8:12; 14:6). Thus He guides (v. 3) the Church to the heavenly holy of holies (the altar of God, v. 4). So this enlightenment puts joy in one's face (v. 5). In hymns of the Church, Your holy mountain and Your tabernacles (v. 3) are seen as referring to the Mother of God and to the saints.
Ps 43 describes (1) the daily praise and thanksgiving (v. 9) the Church offers God in the midst of sufferings and persecution (vv. 2–17); the steadfastness of the Church in the midst of sufferings and even martyrdom itself (vv. 18–26; see also Rom 8:36); and (3) the Church's hope in the Lord to be raised from the dead at the general resurrection (v. 27).
Ps 44 is a prophetic description of the Word Incarnate, the Lord Jesus Christ (the End), and His Church, composed of both Jews and Gentiles. The Beloved One is the Word Himself, and His Incarnation brought about changes (things that shall be changed, v. 1). For He established His Church (the peoples), and even changed His enemies into friends (v. 6). Thus, vv. 2–9 describe Him (see also Heb 1:8, 9); and vv. 10–18 describe His Mother, the Mother of God, who is both His queen (v. 10) and His daughter (vv. 11, 14). These verses also describe the Church begotten from her (daughters, v. 10; the daughters of Tyre, v. 13— the Gentiles; the virgins, v. 15; sons, v. 17). Myrrh and stacte (v. 9) are sweet-smelling fragrances or incense. Cassia was used in ancient medicines, a reference to healing.
Ps 45 is about hidden things concerning the End, who is Christ. These hidden things are “the treasures of wisdom and knowledge in Christ” (Col 2:3), which are now revealed in His Incarnation and made known among the Gentiles (Col 1:26, 27). Here, before His Incarnation, the earth was troubled with fear (vv. 3, 4, 7), which was the fear of death. But after His Incarnation, the Church no longer fears death (v. 3), because His works (v. 9), that is, His death and Resurrection (early in the morning, v. 6), opened up the torrents of the river of God's grace to the Church (v. 5). Thus, hatred (wars) ceased among the Gentiles to the ends of the earth, and the Church was established among them. For stillness in prayer replaced the tumult of hostility between them (vv. 10–12).
Ps 46 is a prophecy of Christ (the End) and His ascension to the Father (v. 6). And the Man who ascended is called God (vv. 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10), Lord (vv. 3, 6), Most High (v. 3), and King (vv. 3–5, 7, 8–10); therefore, Jesus Christ is coequal with the Father. Also, the ascended Christ is worshiped by the Church both as God and Man (vv. 2, 7, 8), and with joy (rejoicing, v. 2), with fear (fearsome, v. 3) and with intelligence (understanding, v. 8).
Ps 47 is a prophecy of the Church as heaven on earth (see also Heb 12:22, 23). In this respect she is described as a city (vv. 2, 3, 4, 9, 14), as Mount Zion (vv. 2, 3, 12, 13), and as a temple (v. 10). And Jesus Christ is called Lord (vv. 2, 9, 12), King (v. 3), and God (vv. 2, 4, 9, 10, 11, 15).
Ps 48 is a prophecy that presents a contrast between the children of the body and the children of the kingdom (prayers at the reception of catechumens). Children of the body live under the reign of death and the fear it instills in them; therefore, in an attempt to overcome this fear, they become occupied with objects of the senses, especially wealth and the power it brings with it (v. 7). But their riches cannot redeem their souls and bodies from the grave and decay, and from death and Hades (vv. 8, 9, 11–15, 18–21). Therefore, all peoples should hear this and give ear (vv. 2–5) to the End (v. 1), who is Christ our God. For He became incarnate to ransom mankind from slavery to sense objects and to the reign and fear of death (v. 16). However, by way of contrast, the children of the kingdom are delivered by Him from this slavery (vv. 6, 10, 17).
Ps 49 is a prophecy of the awesome Second Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ and the Day of Judgment. It is awesome, as emphasized in the phrases beauty's splendor (v. 2), a fire and a mighty storm (v. 3), and it is awesome because heaven and earth will be present (vv. 1, 4). But most of all it will be awesome because Christ's divinity will be fully shown to the universe (openly, v. 2). In contrast to this, at His First Coming, He did not show Himself “openly” but remained hidden by His humility, as for example, He lived in poverty and lowliness. However, the full splendor of His glory will be seen by all at His “coming to judge the living and the dead” (Creed). For He will come as God in the flesh (vv. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 14, 16, 22, 23) and judge all, including the Jews (vv. 7–22).
Ps 50 teaches the nature of genuine repentance, which is the reason it is used so often in the services of the Church. Historically, King David committed the sins and transgressions of adultery and murder (vv. 1, 2; see also 2Kg 11; 12). However, He obtained mercy from God because of his repentance. Yet many fall into sins but never come to repentance; therefore, no one can use David's sins as an excuse to sin. For sins and transgressions in themselves do not draw down the mercy of God. Genuine repentance, however, does attract His mercy, for He sees it and responds accordingly (v. 3). So genuine repentance is characterized by such things as confession to God (vv. 4–8); inward purity (vv. 12–16); and inward humility (vv. 17–21).
Ps 51 reveals who will be in “the world to come” (Creed), which belongs to Christ (the End, v. 1). It is also called the land of the living (v. 7), that is, the land occupied by the resurrected righteous ones (vv. 8–11). And that world is also said to be forever and unto ages of ages (vv. 10, 11). But the unrighteous, such as Doeg, will not be there (vv. 2–7).
Ps 52 revolves around two questions, both of which relate to Christ (the End, v. 1). The first question asks: Do all the workers of lawlessness not know? (v. 5), and the second, Who will grant from Zion the salvation of Israel? (v. 7). The answer to the first question is yes, for they willfully reject Christ as God, and therefore are fools (v. 1). But, in answer to the second question, their rejection cannot prevent Him from granting salvation to the Church (“Israel,” v. 7; see also Gal 6:16).
Ps 53 is a prophecy concerning the betrayal of Christ. For just as the Ziphites betrayed David (see 1Kg 23:15–21), so also Judas and the Jewish leaders betrayed Christ. These leaders are called strangers and the powerful (v. 5). Nevertheless, Christ's sufferings and sacrifice on the cross were voluntary (v. 8), for no one could take His life from Him without His consent (see also Jn 10:18; 18:6). And He thanked the Father (O Lord, v. 8) for His Resurrection (v. 9), to teach us to do the same.
Ps 54, similar to Ps 53, is a prophecy concerning the betrayal of Christ, who is the End. In the midst of His sufferings and betrayal by Judas (vv. 13–15), He prays on behalf of the Church. For within the Church there is suffering and betrayal, sometimes even to death. For example, when He prayed, And the terror of death fell on me (v. 5), He was not saying this because He Himself feared death. Rather, He intercedes for us, for our fear of death fell on Him, that we might not fear it. Therefore, when death fell on Him on the cross, He, in turn, destroyed it once for all by the power of His divinity.
Ps 55 describes the war between Christ (the End) and the devil (he, v. 2). Christ fought and won this war as a Man on behalf of the Church, and this victory is inscribed like a pillar in the Church's memory (v. 1). Through this inscription, the Church is able to wage a successful war against this same enemy. (This same phrase, pillar inscription, is used to introduce Ps 55–59, in v. 1 of each.) Now this war is not only against the devil but also against his angels (those who war against me from on high, v. 3; see also Eph 6:12). Verses 4–14 tell the Church how to fight the enemy; for example, the faithful will not fear death when facing the enemy (vv. 4, 5, 12, 14).
Ps 56 prophesies the death and Resurrection of Christ (the End, v. 1). He did not corrupt (v. 1), that is, His holy body did not decay in the grave (the cave, v. 1; see also Ps 15:8–11; Acts 2:25–32; 13:34–37). Verses 2–12 give the Church the hope of “the resurrection from the dead and the life of the world to come” (Creed).
Ps 57 concerns Christ (the End). It underscores the reality that Christ's holy body did not corrupt in the grave (v. 1). For with His incorrupt body, He destroyed death, the devil, and sin (vv. 2–10). Realizing these things, the Church is glad and bears fruit for God (vv. 11, 12).
Ps 58 is also concerning Christ (the End, v. 1). For the Church remembers that Christ's holy body did not decay in the grave (corrupt not, v. 1), and the Father raised Him from the dead (vv. 2, 3, 10, 11, 14, 17, 18). In contrast to the Lord's sinless life, which is the reason He was raised up by the Father (vv. 4, 5), those who work lawlessness are not shown mercy (vv. 6–9, 12–16).
Ps 59:1  Ps 59 is also concerning Christ (the End, v. 1). For the Church remembers the changes (things yet to be changed, v. 1) brought about by the cross (a sign, v. 6), and the teaching (for teaching, v. 1) it brings to the Church. For the Incarnation brought about the mystery hidden before time, namely, that Christ would burn down (he burned, v. 1) the dividing wall between Jew and Gentile (vv. 1–14), and form them into one body (Eph 3).
Ps 60 reveals Christ (the End, v. 1) as the King (v. 7) and Great High Priest leading the Church in hymns of praise to the Father, and therefore, to the Trinity (see also Heb 2:12, 13).
Ps 61 is a prayer of Christ (the End, v. 1). He is praying this prayer on behalf of the Church, which is His body (congregation of people, v. 9; see also Eph 1:22, 23). He is encouraging His members to be submissive to God (vv. 2, 6), and the psalm gives numerous good reasons to do so.
Ps 62 is a prayer of Christ the King (v. 12), instructing His Church in morning prayers. For this world is like the desert of Judea (v. 1), which is desolate, impassable, and waterless (v. 2). And the soul that remembers God during the night on his bed will also learn to meditate on Him in the morning (v. 7). Such a soul will be filled (v. 6) and cannot be injured by the devil and his angels (they, v. 10).
Ps 63 is a prayer of Christ (the End, v. 1), instructing the members of His Church how to wage a good warfare against the devil and the fear of death (fear of the enemy, v. 2) in times of persecution and martyrdom.
Ps 64 is a prophecy concerning Christ (the End, v. 1) and concerning His Church in relation to the theme of sojourning in this world (the situation of the sojourners, when they were about to depart, v. 1). See 4Kg 24 for the historical background, when Jerusalem was carried away captive to Babylon. These two cities focus attention on the theme of sojourning, for the Church is, so to speak, sojourning in the city of Babylon. Babylon means confusion, as can be seen from Gn 11, for the Church is sojourning in a confused world. But Jerusalem means peace, for the Church is looking for the resurrection from the dead and the life of the world to come (Creed). For peace will inhabit the new world, and this psalm instructs the Church in how to sojourn in anticipation of this world to come.
Ps 65 prophesies the Resurrection of Christ (the End, a psalm of resurrection, v. 1). All the earth is invited to worship the risen Christ (vv. 1–4). All are invited to come and see the works of God (v. 5), which He wrought in abolishing death and rising again from the dead, as typified by the Exodus in Israel’s history (v. 6). And His Resurrection demonstrates that He will rule in His power forever (v. 7) over His Church, consisting of both Jews and Gentiles who believe in Him (vv. 7–20).
Ps 66 prophesies the Resurrection of Christ (the End, v. 1). Verses 3 and 5 in particular emphasize the incorporation of the Gentiles into the Church through the Resurrection.
Ps 67 prophesies the Resurrection of Christ (the End, v. 1) and His Ascension into heaven (v. 19; see also Eph 4:8). In hymns of the Church, the mountain of God (v. 16) is seen as referring to the Mother of God. Throughout the psalm, the blessings given the Church by the Resurrection are enumerated. For example, Christ trampled death (v. 21) and crushed the satanic hordes of fallen angels (v. 22).
Ps 68 prophesies the Passion of the Lord Jesus Christ (the End, v. 1) and the changes it would bring about (concerning things that shall be changed, v. 1). The changes His Passion would bring are noted throughout the psalm. Examples are: (1) the Church would become a house of prayer for all peoples (v. 10; see also Jn 2:19; Mt 21:13; Mk 11:17; Lk 19:46); (2) the cross would bear our reproaches against God (v. 10; see also Rom 15:3); (3) the cross would destroy death (gall and vinegar, v. 22; see also Mt 27:34, 48; Mk 15:23, 36; Lk 23:36; Jn 19:28–30); and (4) the Jews would be rejected for their unbelief, and the believing Gentiles brought to salvation (vv. 23, 24; Rom 9:9–11).
Ps 69 is a prayer of the Lord Jesus Christ (the End, v. 1). Prayer is the ascent of the heart and mind to God (in remembrance, v. 1). In this ascent, prayer focuses a person on the Lord and His salvation (that the Lord may save me, v. 1). The early Desert Fathers used v. 2 as a text of ceaseless prayer (O God, make haste to help me, v. 2), thereby living out the exhortation of St. Paul in 1Th 5:17 to “pray without ceasing.” Also, this prayer, “O God, make haste to help me,” is often seen as the precursor to the Jesus Prayer: “O Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy on me a sinner.” Verses 3–6 show some results of receiving God's help.
Ps 70 teaches the Church about deliverance from captivity (taken captive, v. 1) to the devil and his angels (my enemies, v. 10; see also Eph 6:12). For these enemies ensnared mankind in the fear of death and the lifetime of bondage it engendered (see Heb 2:15). But from birth to death, we are delivered by the Lord Jesus Christ from this fear (from birth, v. 6; to old age and to my last breath, v. 18). For we are delivered and set free in His righteousness (v. 2), on which we meditate . . . all the day long v. 24).
Ps 71 is a prophecy concerning Solomon, who is Christ Himself, the King of Peace, for the name “Solomon” means “peace.” And the Father (God) gave all judgments to Him (v. 1; see also Jn 5:22), and in the world to come (forever and unto ages of ages), all the earth shall be filled with His glory (v. 19).
Ps 72 teaches the upright in heart (v. 1) not to be jealous of people who prosper in this life but who have no vision of “the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come” (Creed). For their vision of life is limited to this present world, and they have no upward gaze of the judgment hanging over them at their death (v. 4). But the upright have a vision of God in their heart (O God of my heart) and of the world to come (forever, v. 26). Therefore, they cling to God and put their hope in the Lord (v. 28).
Ps 73 is a prophecy for understanding (v. 1). An understanding of what? That all human history is incarnational in nature. Therefore, human history may be called “the history of the Incarnation of the Word.” For this history, from the beginning (v. 2) to the end (vv. 1, 3, 10, 11, 19), speaks of the Word of God Incarnate and His lordship throughout history. And this Incarnate God is our King before the ages (v. 12) and the Creator of the world (You created, v. 16). He worked salvation in the midst of the earth (v. 12) through the cross, and crushed the heads of dragons (vv. 13, 14) at His Baptism. He also arose from the dead (Arise, O God, v. 22).
Ps 74 is a prophecy concerning the Judgment Seat of Christ (the End, v. 1; see also 2Co 5:10, 11). Therefore, all men are commanded not to corrupt (v. 1), that is, do not transgress the law, nor exalt yourselves in sin (v. 5). For God Incarnate is judge (God is judge, v. 8), and the Lord's cup of judgment is in His hand (vv. 8, 9). Then the horns of corrupt men shall be crushed, but those of the righteous man shall be exalted (v. 11). And this man shall greatly rejoice forever in the world to come (v. 10; see also Creed).
Ps 75 is a prophecy contrasting two opposing kingdoms. The Assyrian (v. 1) is the devil, who leads his kingdom: the fallen angels (v. 4; see also Col 2:15) and fallen people (vv. 6–9, 13). The End is God Incarnate (vv. 2, 7, 8, 10, 12, 13), who leads His kingdom: the holy angels (vv. 5, 9) and holy people (vv. 3, 10, 11, 12). The final outcome in this battle is obvious: Who shall stand against You? (v. 8).
Ps 76 is Christ (the End, v. 1) teaching the importance of using the memory, especially in the day of affliction (v. 3). For one is to remember God (v. 4), the eternal years (v. 6), and the Lord's works (v. 12). Verses 5–21 describe the numerous benefits of this remembrance.
Ps 77 concerns understanding (v. 1). What needs to be understood is that Christ is speaking to His Church (vv. 2, 14; see also Mt 13:34, 35; 1Co 10:4, 14), called children yet to be born (v. 6), His sanctuary . . . founded forever on the earth (v. 69), and His people . . . His inheritance (v. 71). The content of His instruction is the entire psalm itself, an overview of the history of Israel.
Ps 78 is a prophecy concerning the suffering and martyrdom (vv. 1–4) that would face the Church in this present age (to the end, v. 5; from generation to generation, v. 13). It also shows the Church's response to all this (vv. 5–12), because the Church knows herself to be the people of God and the sheep of His pasture, and also has her eyes on the world to come (forever and “from generation to generation,” v. 13).
Ps 79 is a prophecy of the Incarnation and the changes (things that shall be changed, v. 1) that it would bring about. For Christ (the End, v. 1), who sits upon the cherubim (v. 2), will reveal Himself (vv. 2, 3, 4, 8, 20) in the Incarnation for our salvation (v. 3), and establish His vineyard, the Church (vv. 9–17). This vineyard would consist of those who are changed through conversion to Him (vv. 4, 8, 15, 20) and who are saved from the Assyrian (v. 1), who is a wild swine and a solitary wild beast (v. 14)—that is, the devil.
Ps 80 is a psalm regarding Christ (the End) and His Church (the winepresses, v. 1). For His Church is the new wine (the new covenant), formed in the Sacrament of Baptism (Mt 9:16, 17; 1Co 12:13). And Israel's deliverance from Egypt (vv. 1–11) is a type of baptism (1Co 10:1, 2). However, after baptism, the Christian is to be careful to walk in God's ways and heed His voice (vv. 12–17).
Ps 81 reveals Christ God as present and judging in the midst of His Church (v. 1). This prophecy calls church members gods, which is the same thing as calling them sons of the Most High (vv. 1, 6). For they were made gods and the sons of God by the new birth in baptism. However, these gods are warned by their God to take care of the poor and needy (vv. 2–7). For Christ rose from the dead (v. 8), and “He shall come again with glory to judge the living and the dead” (Creed).
Ps 82 prophesies that all who hate Christ (v. 3) will also persecute His saints (vv. 4–9; see also Jn 15:18; 2Ti 3:12). Various nations mentioned (vv. 7–9) represent the kinds of persecutors who seek to destroy the Church. Even avowed enemies find a common ground of unity in order to persecute the Church (v. 6). But the Church is taught how to pray in times of persecution (vv. 10–19), and even some of these enemies are converted to the Lord (v. 17).
Ps 83 regards Christ (the End) and His Church (the winepresses, v. 1). For His Church is the new wine (the new covenant), formed in the Sacrament of Baptism. And those who keep their baptism (walk in innocence, v. 12) long to see God and the world to come (vv. 2–9). As the Creed says, “I look for the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come.” For one day in this new world and its life is better than a lifetime (a thousand) in this present fallen world (the tents of sinners, v. 11).
Ps 84 is a prophecy of the Incarnation (the End, v. 1). His Incarnation (vv. 10–14) gives His holy ones (v. 9) deliverance from captivity (v. 2), the remission of sins (v. 3), deliverance from God's wrath (vv. 4–6), joyous life (v. 7), mercy (v. 8), and peace (v. 9).
Ps 85 reveals the prayerful spirit of a servant of God (vv. 2, 4, 16), for the Lord will incline His ear and hear him (v. 1). This spirit is characterized by humility (v. 1), hope (v. 2), ceaseless prayer (v. 3), a lifting up of the soul to the Lord (v. 4), the glorification of God (vv. 5–10), godly fear (v. 11), and thanksgiving with one's whole heart (vv. 12–17).
Ps 86 is a prophecy regarding the meaning of the Nativity. This connection is found in the Incarnation of the Most High (v. 5) and the City of God (vv. 2, 3). The city's inhabitants, consisting of both Jews and Gentiles, are those who were born again in her (vv. 4–7).
Ps 87 is a prophecy concerning Christ (the End) and His death, burial, and Resurrection (v. 14) on man's behalf. The prophecy focuses especially on His burial, for when He was buried, His body was placed in a grave, and His soul descended into Hades (v. 4). Both the grave and Hades are described as the pit (v. 5), the dead (vv. 5, 11), the grave (vv. 6, 12), the lowest pit, the shadow of death (v. 7), darkness, a forgotten land (v. 13), and despair (v. 16). From all this, Christ, in His great love for man, saves all who respond to Him and understand (v. 1) what He did for them.
Ps 88 concerns understanding the Lord's mercy and truth (vv. 2, 3, 6, 9, 15, 25, 29, 34, 50). This mercy and truth is in the new covenant He made with the Church (vv. 4, 6, 29, 35, 40). In His Incarnation, the Lord is called “the seed of David” (see vv. 4, 21, 50; see also Mt 1:1), the Lord God (vv. 7, 8, 9; see also Jn 20:28), the Firstborn of God the Father (vv. 27, 28; see also Heb 1:6), and the King (v. 19; see also 1Ti 6:15). His throne is established in the Church through the works of His Incarnation—for example, through His Transfiguration on Mt. Tabor (vv. 6–19), through His sufferings and death (vv. 39–46), and through His Resurrection (vv. 47–52).
Ps 89 is a morning prayer (vv. 5, 6, 14) designed to keep one focused on the Lord rather than on this temporal life and its hopelessness (vv. 5–11). For He exists outside time, and is therefore our only refuge (vv. 1, 2). Every morning is an opportunity to return to Him in repentance (Return, you sons of men, v. 3), and He is very patient, because a thousand years in His sight are like yesterday, which passed, and like a watch in the night (v. 4; see also 2Pt 3:8). He is very patient, because He does not will that anyone should perish (2Pt 3:9). Therefore, when we focus on the Lord every morning, we look for His return at the Second Coming (v. 13), and for His mercy, joy, enlightenment, and prosperity throughout each day (vv. 14–17).
Ps 90 describes the intensity of spiritual warfare the Church wages against the devil and his angels, both in life and in death. These enemies are called hunters (v. 3), things moving in darkness, mishaps, demons of noonday (v. 6), sinners (v. 8), evils, scourges (v. 10), asps, lions, and dragons (v. 13). They seek to ensnare us with every troubling word (v. 3). These words are like arrows that try to pierce the soul with unnatural fears (v. 5), especially the fear of death. Their numbers are many (a thousand and ten thousand, v. 7).

Success in this warfare is called salvation (v. 16), which comes through God and our hope in Him (My God and I will hope in Him, v. 2). God is called the Most High (vv. 1, 9), the God of heaven (v. 1), and the Lord (vv. 2, 9). He also commands His angels to help us (vv. 11, 12; see also Heb 1:14). His salvation is described as help (v. 1), shelter (vv. 1, 14), protection, refuge (v. 2), freedom (v. 3), overshadowing (v. 4), the shield of truth (v. 4), deliverance (v. 14), glorification (v. 15), and satisfaction (v. 16).
Ps 91 concerns the Sabbath day (v. 1), which speaks of rest. In this psalm, the rest is that of the soul. The Lord offers us this kind of rest (Mt 11:28–30). What then is our part in achieving such rest? Our part is to give thanks day and night for God's mercy and truth (vv. 2, 3), and to greatly rejoice in God's works in both creation and salvation (vv. 4–6). God the Father wrought these works by His two hands (v. 5), that is, by His Son and His Spirit.

But who does not experience such rest of soul? People without discernment (v. 7), who work lawlessness (vv. 9, 10). What are the fruits of a soul at rest? Divine exaltation and rich mercy, especially in old age (v. 11); victory over enemies and evildoers (the devil and his angels, v. 12); and the flourishing, multiplication, blossoming, increasing, and prospering of the virtues of righteousness in one's life as one grows older (vv. 13–15).
Ps 92 concerns the day before the Sabbath, when the earth was settled (v. 1). The Sabbath is Saturday, the seventh day of creation. The day before this is Friday, the sixth day of creation. On this sixth day, the Holy Trinity created numerous living creatures, but especially man himself (“when the earth was settled,” v. 1; see also Gn 1:25–27). God created man in His image and likeness. But man fell away from God, and Ps 92 is about the renewal of this image and likeness. Thus, this psalm is the praise of an ode concerning this renewal (v. 1).

The Lord reigns . . . from of old; . . . from everlasting (vv. 1, 2). In His Incarnation (clothed and girded Himself, v. 1), He prepared His throne in the hearts of the faithful (v. 2). At Pentecost, He sent the Holy Spirit (the rivers, vv. 3, 4; see also Jn 7:37–39) to renew us with the living waters of baptism. In these living waters the saints lift up their voices in praise of the Holy Trinity. They also believe the Lord's testimonies (the Scriptures) and live in holiness, which things are proper to His house, the Church (v. 5).
Ps 93 is a psalm for the fourth day of the week (v. 1), which is Wednesday, the fourth day of creation in Gn 1:14–19. On this day, God created the sun, the moon, and the stars to give light on the earth and to rule over the day and the night. The sun speaks of Christ; the moon, of the Mother of God; and the stars, of the Church (Php 2:15; Rev 12). The light of the sun, the moon, and the stars speaks of the light given the fallen world by Christ through the Mother of God and the Church. This light enlightens the fallen world concerning the eternal kingdom of God.

However, evil people in the fallen world oppose and persecute Christ, the Mother of God, and the Church (vv. 5–7). Throughout Church history, many martyrs have suffered for the faith. Thus, the question arises: “How long, O Lord, will this continue?” (see vv. 3, 4). The answer is, the God of vengeance (v. 1) will bring persecution to an end when He judges the fallen world in righteousness (vv. 8–23; see also Acts 17:31), at which time He will repay their lawlessness to them (v. 23). Meantime, He is patient with people, giving them the opportunity to turn to Christ and the Church in repentance and faith before the Great Day of Judgment (v. 15).
Ps 94 is an invitation to worship (come, vv. 1, 2, 6). This worship is called the praise of an ode (v. 1). An ode emphasizes great joy (v. 1), and praise is offered with thanksgiving (v. 2). The object of our worship is the Lord (vv. 1, 3, 6), God (vv. 1, 3, 7), and the King (v. 3). This Lord, God, and King is God the Father. His hand is the Son, who holds the ends of the earth (v. 4) and the people and sheep of the Father's pasture (that is, the Church, v. 7). The Father created the world by His two hands, that is, by the Son and the Holy Spirit (v. 5). Therefore, Ps 94 is an invitation to worship the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

But those who refuse this invitation will never find rest for their souls (v. 11; see also Mt 11:27–30; Heb 3; 4). For those who hear this invitation (hear His voice, v. 7) but refuse it are like Israel during their forty-year wanderings in the desert (vv. 8–10). They hardened their hearts in rebellion by their own free will (v. 8), and we are warned not to harden our hearts (v. 8).
Ps 95 is a prophecy about the building of the house after the captivity (v. 1). The house is the Church, which includes the Gentiles (vv. 3, 5, 7, 10). The Gentiles were the captives of the demons (v. 5). The Lord (vv. 1, 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13) is the Lord Jesus Christ, who freed the captives. These former captives now worship Him (v. 9), and He will come again to judge the world and its gods in righteousness and truth (v. 13).

This psalm was composed and sung by King David when he placed the ark of God in the tabernacle he set up (1Ch 16). This ark was a type of the Mother of God with Christ in her womb. For the Lord was conceived in her womb at the Annunciation for our salvation (Lk 1). Thus, v. 2b is sung as a refrain in the First and Third Antiphons of the Divine Liturgy at the Feast of the Annunciation, celebrating the freedom of the captives.
Ps 96 is a prophecy concerning the restoration of the earth (v. 1), when the Lord Jesus Christ returns to raise the dead and establish the world to come (Creed). Virtually everything in this psalm points to this restoration, which reveals Christ as the all-powerful Lord and universal Ruler over all things (vv. 1, 5, 8, 9). Creation will be restored, the dead will be raised to see His glory, His enemies will be destroyed, and the righteous will rejoice exceedingly (vv. 1–9). In light of this coming restoration, we should love the Lord, hate evil, be glad, and give thanks (vv. 10–12).
Ps 97 prophesies the first and second comings of Christ to save both Jews and Gentiles in His Church (vv. 2, 3). This salvation will cause a new song (vv. 1, 4–6) to be sung to the Father (the Lord, v. 1). It would be accomplished through the First Coming of Christ, who is called the Father's right hand and His holy arm (v. 1). He is also called the Father's salvation and righteousness (v. 2), and His mercy and truth (v. 3). At His Second Coming, He will come to judge the world in righteousness and uprightness (vv. 7–9).
Ps 98 prophesies the enthronement of the Lord Jesus Christ at the Father's right hand to reign over mankind both as God and Man. Man's anger cannot alter this (v. 1). He also reigns over the angels, the highest order of which is the cherubim (v. 1). However, before His enthronement, He humbled Himself in becoming Man and going to the cross (Php 2:8). Now He is highly exalted (vv. 2, 6, 9; see also Php 2:9, 10). Before His Incarnation, He also reigned over Israel as their God (vv. 6–8). Now He is reigning both as God and Man at the Father's right hand, and the Church worships at His footstool (v. 5), which is the cross.
Ps 99 is a psalm of thanksgiving to the Lord Jesus Christ (vv. 1, 4). We thank Him for the privilege to serve Him with gladness and great joy (v. 2). We thank Him that He is our God, and that He created us and made us the sheep of His pasture (v. 3). We thank Him for His goodness, mercy, and truth (v. 5).

This psalm is popular for devotional reading, but has no special liturgical use apart from its place in the weekly psalm cycle.
Ps 100 is simply called a psalm by David. It is a morning prayer, and the key to understanding this psalm is the statement, O Lord, I will sing to You of mercy and judgment (v. 1). We need the Lord's mercy and judgment each morning that we might give Him glory all the day. The Lord's mercy is His helping grace, and His judgment is His discernment, the crown of the virtues. We need both to fight against the devil and his angels. These enemies are identified as those who commit transgressions (v. 3), the evil man (v. 4), slanderers (v. 5), arrogant, insatiable, and unjust (vv. 5, 7), and the sinners of the earth (v. 8). We need the Lord's mercy and judgment to slay them each morning (v. 8). We also need the saints (the faithful of the earth, v. 6) to intercede for us.
Ps 101 is about a poor man, when he was depressed and poured out his supplication before the Lord (v. 1). This Man is Jesus, who became poor for our sakes and interceded with the Father for our salvation (see also 2Co 8:9; Heb 5:7). The Lord to whom He prays is the Father (v. 2), and vv. 3–12 describe Jesus' extreme anguish for us (see also Mt 26:38). He also rose again for our salvation, for He is the Lord over death (when You rise up, v. 14). He is the Creator of the world (vv. 26–28; see also Heb 1:10–12), and He also created the Church (vv. 19, 23, 29), composed of Gentiles as well as Jews (v. 16).
Ps 102 begins and ends with, Bless the Lord (vv. 1, 22). Verses 2–14, 19 give us many reasons why the Lord should be blessed, and vv. 15–21 explain who is to bless Him. Man is to bless Him (vv. 15–18), and His angels as well (vv. 20, 21). Man is to bless Him for His covenant (v. 18), and the angels, for the privilege to be His ministers (v. 21).
Ps 103 opens and closes with, Bless the Lord, O my soul (vv. 1, 35). Everything in between gives many reasons why the Lord is to be blessed. He is to be blessed because He is the lover of man, of angels, and of creation. His care runs through all creation, which is filled with His goodness (v. 28). But the visible creation fell into death and decay (return again to their dust, v. 29); however, He sent forth His Spirit at Pentecost to renew man and creation (v. 30).
Ps 104, 105, and 106 form a trilogy, each with the heading, Alleluia, which means “praise the Lord.” This heading emphasizes praising the Lord and giving Him thanks for His works of mercy (104:1–3; 105:1, 2; 106:1, 2). These works are traced in great detail from Abraham on, and are fulfilled in the coming of Christ to save mankind: He sent His word and healed them, and delivered them from their corruptions (106:20). The Father sent His Word, who crushed the gates of bronze and shattered the bars of iron (106:16). He trampled death by His death and Resurrection, bestowing life on those in the tombs (those sitting in the darkness and shadow of death, bound in poverty and fetters, 106:10; He brought them out of darkness and the shadow of death, and broke their chains to pieces, 106:14).

The response of those who are wise and shall keep these things, and shall understand the mercies of the Lord (106:43) is “Alleluia.”
Ps 107 is a prophecy concerning the ascension and enthronement of Christ at the Father's right hand (Be exalted above the heavens, O God, v. 6; I shall be exalted, v. 8). From this enthronement He is now singing to the Father in the midst of His Church (vv. 2–4).
Ps 108 is for the End (v. 1), who is Christ Himself. It speaks of the unbelieving Judas, who betrayed Him to the unbelieving Jews. Judas the son of perdition is lost (Jn 17:12), fulfilling this Scripture. Verse 8 is quoted in Acts 1:20 as referring to Judas, who loved cursing and rejected blessing (v. 17). He cursed Christ and rejected His blessing. This was the ultimate betrayal, described especially in vv. 6–19. But the Father raised His Son from the dead, and He now leads the Church in praise of the Blessed Trinity (vv. 30, 31).
Ps 109 is a prophecy concerning the Melchizedek Priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ, which explains the true meaning of the Nativity. In Gn 14:18–20, Melchizedek is called the king of Salem and priest of the Most High God (see also Heb 7:1). His priesthood was not based on genealogy (Heb 7:3). It was based on himself alone, for no one preceded him in priesthood, nor succeeded him (Heb 7:8). On this basis he was a type of Christ, whose priesthood is based in His endless life, for He rose again from the dead (Heb 7:16).

The Lord [the Father] said to my Lord [Christ], “Sit at My right hand” (v. 1). For Christ is not only Man, but also the Lord God, coequal and one in nature with the Father. For He is begotten from the Father before all time (before the morning star, v. 3), and is therefore His eternal Son (v. 3; see also Creed). He is the Son of David according to the flesh (Mt 1:1), but He is also the Lord of David according to His divinity (see also Mt 22:41–45).

At the Father's right hand, this Melchizedek Priest rules and reigns over all things, including His enemies (vv. 1, 2, 5–7), and leads His Church in heavenly worship of the Blessed Trinity (v. 3).
Ps 110 has the heading, Alleluia (v. 1), which emphasizes praise and thanksgiving to the Lord with one's whole heart (vv. 1, 3, 10). The Church (the assembly, v. 1) praises and thanks Him for all His works (vv. 2, 3, 6, 7), especially those related to His eternal covenant (vv. 5, 9). The beginning of wisdom is the fear of the Lord because of all His works. Those who practice this fear have a good understanding (v. 10) and therefore will offer continual praise to God.
Ps 111 is another Alleluia or praise psalm (v. 1) that blesses the Lord Jesus Christ and His Church. He is the Man who is blessed. His seed, the generation of the upright, and his house refer to the Church (vv. 2, 3). He gives the gift of his righteousness to the Church (v. 3) and teaches the Church by example how to live in this righteousness (vv. 1, 4, 9). But the sinner, the devil, is angry with Christ and His Church; therefore, the desire of this sinner and the desire of sinners like him shall perish (v. 10).
Ps 112 is an Alleluia psalm that continually praises the risen, ascended, and enthroned Lord (vv. 1–3). Verses 4–9 give a series of reasons He is to be praised and blessed: (1) He is high above all the nations, and His glory is above the heavens (v. 4); (2) All created things in heaven and earth are humble compared to Him (vv. 5, 6); (3) He exalts the poor in spirit (vv. 7, 8); and (4) He is establishing His Church and her children (v. 9).
Ps 113 speaks of Israel's history in their exodus from Egypt across the Red Sea and the Jordan River into the promised land (vv. 1–11). The lifeless idols of the nations in this land could neither will nor do anything to stop Israel (vv. 12–16). By contrast, the believers in Israel were those who feared the Lord and hoped in Him (vv. 17–26). Therefore, the history of believing Israel was the history of their salvation.

More importantly, Israel's exodus from Egypt and crossing the Jordan River speak of Christ's Baptism and our subsequent Christian baptism. For Christian baptism is Christ's Baptism. He was baptized in the Jordan River for our sake. He was also the rock from which we drink the waters of salvation (v. 8; see also 1Co 10:1–11).
Ps 114 speaks of the person who loves the Lord because the Lord loves him by hearing his prayers (v. 1; see also 1Jn 4:19). The love of God matures in this believer through (1) answers to prayer (vv. 1, 2); (2) deliverance from the fear of death and the dangers of Hades (vv. 3–5); (3) humility and rest in the Lord (vv. 6, 7); and (4) looking for the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come (vv. 8, 9; see also Creed).
Ps 115 speaks about “the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come” (Creed). St. Paul interprets the psalm in this manner in 2Co 4:13–18. The psalmist recognizes the futility of this life (every man is a liar, v. 2). But by the vision (ecstasy, v. 2) of faith, we wait for the resurrection of the dead and our future life in the kingdom of God. Our faith is the reason the death of His holy ones is precious to God (v. 5). The bonds (v. 6) of death are broken apart by our resurrection, and we will offer a sacrifice of praise (v. 7) in the world to come (O Jerusalem, v. 9). By way of foretaste, we now take up the cup of salvation (v. 4) in the Eucharist, and offer it as a sacrifice of praise (v. 7) to God.
Ps 116 is the shortest of all the psalms. It is quoted by St. Paul in Rom 15:11 to show that the Gentiles are included in the promises made to Israel (Rom 15:8). It also reveals that our salvation is based in the Lord's mercy and truth. God's mercy rules over those who walk by faith, and His truth is the substance of faith that endures forever (v. 2) in them.
Ps. 117 sets forth the theme, Give thanks to the Lord, for He is good; for His mercy endures forever (vv. 1–4, 29). Verses 5–28 are rich in teaching and give many reasons we are to give thanks to the Lord Jesus Christ for the salvation He provided us through His sufferings, death, and Resurrection (v. 28). The following verses are some of the reasons for thanksgiving: (1) v. 6 (quoted in Heb 13:6) emphasizes deliverance from the fear of man; (2) vv. 22, 23 (quoted in Mt 21:42; Mk 12:10, 11; Lk 20:17; Acts 4:11), show the Lord becoming the Chief Cornerstone of the Church; (3) v. 24 reveals the exceeding joy of the Resurrection; and (4) vv. 25, 26 (quoted in Mt 21:9; Mk 11:9; Lk 19:38) refer to the original Palm Sunday.
Ps 118 is the longest of all the psalms, and its headings are the letters of the Hebrew alphabet. The key to its understanding is vv. 1 and 2, for they explain who are the blessed people. These people are those who are blameless; who walk in the law of the Lord; who search out His testimonies; and who search for Him with their whole heart. The statements describe a dynamic spiritual life and set the stage for progressing through all the truths revealed in vv. 3–176: that with God's help and by continual repentance, a blameless walk with Him is possible. This blameless walk is the way for one to prepare for the day of his death. Christ Himself lived and died this way; and through Him, we who believe are to live and die in this way also.
Ps 119–133 are called odes of ascents. These are also known as “graduals.” In her services of worship, the Church ascends by degrees to the heavenly holy of holies, for worship is an ascent of the heart and mind to the Holy Trinity in adoration, praise, and thanksgiving. For example, the word Eucharist means thanksgiving. The climax of the Church's ascent is when the celebrating priest says in the Divine Liturgy, “Let us give thanks unto the Lord,” in offering up the body and blood of Christ. Historically in Israel, these songs were sung by the faithful as they walked from great distances up to Jerusalem for the Feasts of Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles. From this usage, the principal liturgical use in the Church comes as we progress through Lent toward Pascha. For these are the psalms sung each Wednesday and Friday at the Presanctified Liturgy as we make our pilgrimage to the Resurrection of Christ our Passover.
Ps 134 and 135 go together both in content and in use. In the Church, they are called the Polyeleos, or “Many Mercies.” Ps 134 is similar in content to Ps 113, rehearsing the salvific history of Israel. Ps 135 is a responsive psalm, with the choir and the people singing antiphonally or alternately; it is an Old Testament “Great Litany.”
Ps 136 was sung in exile in the Old Testament, while Israel was in captivity in Babylon. In the Church, it is prayed by the Christian community as being in exile in this world.
Ps 137 shows worship to be heaven on earth, for the Church sings to the Lord in the presence of angels (v. 1). Heaven and earth are united in Christ; therefore, the Church is heaven on earth. The Church consists of believing Gentiles as well as believing Jews (v. 4), singing and giving thanks with all their heart (v. 1).
Ps 138 is for the End (v. 1), who is Christ. He is God in the flesh, and as Man He descended into Hades (v. 8), trampling death by His death on our behalf. He also arose from the dead (v. 18) that we might be led in the way everlasting (v. 24). Therefore, we do not fear death, for His Holy Spirit is present with us (v. 7), and we are not separated from Him even in death.
Verses 13–16 reveal the sanctity of life of an unborn child and explain why, both in ancient Israel and in the Church, aborting a babe in the womb is seen as the sin of murder.
Ps 139 is for the End (v. 1), who is Christ. He prayed this prayer during His sufferings and death on behalf of the Church. In so doing, He delivered and rescued us from the evil man and the unjust man (v. 2). This man is the devil, and the unjust men (v. 5) are his angels. We are in a continual war with these fallen angels (v. 8), but our victory of thanksgiving is through the Lord Jesus Christ (v. 14).
Ps 140 and 141 are the psalms of the evening incense. These two psalms are both sung at Vespers. Ps 141:2 was sung in Israel, and now in the Church, during the offering of incense to God. As Rev 5:8 teaches, incense is the visible sign of the prayers of all God's people. The prophet Malachi foretold its continued use in every place, including in the offering of worship by the Gentiles (Mal 1:11). Incense was brought to Christ as a gift at His birth, and it has been used in the worship of the Church from her very beginning.
Ps 142 teaches God's righteousness (vv. 1, 11) in contrast to man's futile efforts to attain righteousness based on the Law (v. 2). For the enemy (v. 3), who is the devil, overcomes my feeble efforts at righteousness (vv. 3–5). But with the gift of God's righteousness through faith, the Holy Spirit guides me in the land of uprightness (v. 10). King David knew God's righteousness through faith, and so do all who walk by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.
Ps 143 describes our war against Goliath the giant (v. 1). Goliath was arrogant and vainglorious against the Lord and Israel; David slew him and cut off his head. This is a picture of our war against the powerful sinful passions, especially arrogance and vainglory, the most destructive of sins. This psalm sets forth arrogance and vainglory in their true light, for the arrogant and vainglorious man is become like vanity, his days like a passing shadow (v. 4), and he speaks empty things (v. 8). But the truly joyous and blessed people are those who bless the Lord with a humble spirit (vv. 1, 15). And the Father sent forth His Hand [the Son] from on high to deliver us from the great waters of arrogance and vainglory that destroy the soul (v. 7).
Ps 144 describes the Church's blessing and exaltation of the Lord Jesus Christ (vv. 1–3). The Church (generation and generation, v. 4; and His kingdom of all the ages, v. 13) blesses and exalts the Son of God for all His works in the Incarnation and the power of his deeds (vv. 4, 5, 6, 9, 11, 13, 17). We fear and love Him for all His works on our behalf (vv. 19, 20). We bless His name every day and will bless and exalt Him into the world to come (vv. 1, 2, 13, 21).
Ps 145 praises the Lord, the Creator, for His eternal reign in the Church (vv. 1, 2, 6, 10). For He is our helper, our hope, our freedom, our restorer, our wisdom, and our keeper (vv. 5, 7–9). No earthly rulers can provide these things, for death overtakes them (vv. 3, 4).
Ps 146 describes a psalm as a good thing and as something sweet to God the Father (v. 1). This is true because He is building Jerusalem (v. 2), which is the Church. He is doing this through His Son, whom He sent to renew His people and His creatures (vv. 2–11). For example, through the sacraments of the Church, He heals the brokenhearted, and He binds up all their wounds (v. 3). He is pleased with those who fear Him, and with those who hope in His mercy (v. 11).
Ps 145 exhorts the Church (O Jerusalem and O Zion, v. 1) to praise God the Father for sending His Son to earth (vv. 4, 7). His wind is the Holy Spirit, and from Him the waters shall flow (v. 7). Thus, the Church glorifies the Blessed Trinity in her worship.
Ps 148–150 are called “the Praises,” and they form the conclusion to the Psalter. These three psalms exhort all creation to praise the Blessed and Holy Trinity. The climax of the Psalter is reached in Ps 150, where humanity and creation, everywhere and in all circumstances, are called upon to make this doxology to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, our one God.
Ps 151 is outside the number of the Psalter, but written with David's own hand (v. 1). It concerns the slaying of the giant Goliath. Historically, David slew him as recorded in 1Kg 17. He slew him through humility (I was small, v. 1) and through the Lord (v. 3).

From a spiritual standpoint, Goliath stands for the sinful passions of arrogance and vainglory (see also Ps 143). Thus, with the Lord's help, we slay these giants with humility.
Job was originally called Jobab (42:19). Thanks to the LXX text he is no longer the mystery man “from the land of Uz.” He is from the land of Ausitis, which was located on the borders of Edom and Arabia (42:19). He is also a descendant of Abraham through Esau, and his first wife was an Arab (42:20). This makes him a Gentile, and Esau the unbeliever was his forefather. St. John Chrysostom, quoting Ecc 7:21, notes that the text qualifies Job as blameless, that is, “just,” but that it did not say, “without sin.” Only Christ was without sin (Heb 4:15).
Heaven is inaccessible to the devil; yet he came with them because he is an angel with a nature similar to the angels of God. However, writes St. Gregory, “He was in the Lord's sight, but the Lord was not in his sight. When a blind man stands in the sun, he is bathed with the sun's rays, but he still does not see the light by which he is lit.” And St. John Chrysostom teaches that “he came with them’ means nothing else but that [the devil] too is dependent upon God.”
The devil accuses the righteous before God “day and night” (Rev 12:10). With God's permission, he pummels our minds with evil thoughts and weakens our bodies with pain and illness, ever seeking to influence us towards evil. But through hardship, the righteous are clothed in the “whole armor of God” (Eph 6:13). We are called to “glory in tribulations” (Rom 5:3), knowing that we are to walk in obedience to Christ's commands (Mt 5:10).
St. John Chrysostom remarks that Satan's will is his own, but he derives his power from God, who does not allow him to act except with justice. He cannot bring harm to the faithful, and even profits those who wage war against him, “for tribulation makes the strong man stronger.” Jesus conversed with evil spirits and even granted their request to be sent into a great herd of swine (Lk 8:32, 33).
St. Gregory compares the elder brother to the Jews, and the rest of Job's sons and daughters to the Gentiles. The collapse of the house (v. 19) points to the Final Judgment, when we will either be crushed by Christ the Rock or take refuge in Him (see Lk 17:26–30).
Job did these acts, according to St. Hesychius, less as a sign of mourning than to get rid of what possessions were left with him, thus leaving the enemy no means by which he could further test him. “He wanted to strip down, nude to nude, with his enemy, and he fell to the ground to humble himself before God.”
Job did not charge God with injustice for the evils that had befallen him (see Ps 22:2). “It is not the events, but the perversity of thoughts, that makes us suspect God of meanness” (JohnChr).
St. Gregory comments that since the devil has already been defeated, the Lord is chiding him for the impotence of his pride. St. Hesychius teaches that the devil cannot even speak without first receiving permission from God.
The devil was unable to understand how Job could seek salvation over saving his own skin—that is, his life.
St. Gregory remarks that from the beginning, Satan has been working to destroy the Body of Christ, inflicting wounds on God's people throughout the history of the Jews, and continuing in his fury until he came to the very Head of the Church.
Job in his misery is an image of Christ on the Cross. He came “in the likeness of sinful flesh, on account of sin: He condemned sin in the flesh” (Rom 8:3). “With a shard, therefore, the pus is scraped, when sin is defeated by the flesh.” St. Gregory also notes that the repentant sinner, like Job, looks “unflinchingly upon the stains of sin by which he is covered.”
St. Hesychius teaches that Satan “recruited” Job’s wife, as he had done with Eve. St. John Chrysostom asks, “What are you saying, woman? When God needs to be . . . propitiated, you are, rather, preparing to provoke Him! For if it is God who has caused these bad things, He needs to be invoked, not blasphemed.” And Jesus said, “He who endures to the end will be saved” (Mt 10:22).
2:15 Job did not sin with his lips: “When holy men undergo persecution . . . they not only never transgress in injurious expressions against God, but they never launch words of reviling against their very adversaries” (GrgGt).
Job's three friends came to comfort him, but the contrary took place, because they imagined they understood the reason he suffered such things.
Job cursed his day of birth, but as a pious man he never said he could not endure his pain.
3:8 The sea-monster is identified as Satan (3:8; 7:12; 9:13; 26:12; 41:1; Ps 74:13, 14; 87:4; 89:10; 104:26; 148:7; Is 27:1; 30:7; 51:9; Ezek 29:3; 32:2; Jon 1:17).
3:20  “The heart of the just knows its own bitterness because it understands how troublesome is its exile here, where it lies wounded and cast out” (GrgGt).
St. Gregory writes that those who seek to die to themselves are like those who dig for treasures. “The closer they come to their goal, the more eager they become for the work.”
In his hypocrisy, Eliphaz begins to mock Job for the very virtues he had been praised for. Christ was mocked and reviled in a similar way (Lk 23:35–37).
Eliphaz could not understand why God would allow a righteous man to suffer. The Fathers give four reasons why God allows suffering: (1) as a means of punishment, when there is no hope for rehabilitation (see Jer 30:14, 15 and notes); (2) to bring the sinner to repentance (see Jn 5:14); (3) to prevent future sins (see 2Co 12:7); and (4) “that the power of God might be made known” (Jn 9:2, 3).
St. Gregory comments that Job's friends typify teachers of false doctrines, who pretend to hear hidden words from God in order to confuse the weak and to “cast a veil of reverence” over their preaching.
St. Gregory remarks that Eliphaz' words would have been true, had they not been delivered against the patience of so great a man. Like the Hebrews, Eliphaz knew the acts of the Lord, but he did not know His ways (Ps 102:7).
6:2 Christ is the scale. He “came to weigh the merit of our life, and brought down with Him both justice and lovingkindness together” (GrgGt).
6:5-7 God is the Source of both physical and spiritual food. Christ is the bread that satisfies, and His words, being “salted with truth,” give eternal life.
6:10 Having placed his hope in the Lord, Job faced the grave with peace of soul. It was Eliphaz who had lied about the holy words of... God.
6:11-13 “The strength of the righteous is to subdue the flesh, to love the hardships of this world for the sake of eternal rewards, to count the allurements of prosperity as nothing, and to overcome the dread of adversity in our heart” (GrgGt).
Job's lament gives voice to Christ in His Passion, summed up when He cried out, “My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?” (Ps 21:1; Mt 27:46).
I am no more speaks of death and judgment, for believers know that they "will be lost if they are judged apart from mercy, for even this very life that we seem to live righteously is sin" (GrgGt).
7:11 St. Gregory remarks that we are to approach confession with Job's frame of mind.
St. Hesychius comments that a guard refers to the enemy, who is allowed to afflict the righteous with hard trials.
Christ also asked “why?” while hanging on the Cross (Mt 27:46). Job looked to death for relief (v. 21), but Christ's death purged our lawlessness (Jn 1:29), and His Resurrection in the morning (Ps 5:3) brought a new covenant of life and hope.
8:1-4  How long? The unjust cannot bear the edifying words of the righteous, but speak even well-known truths boldly and with big words so they will appear learned.
8:11-13 Bildad's images, which rightly describe all who forget the Lord, are wasted on Job. In speaking of those who have forgotten God, St. Gregory writes that while they accept God's gifts and blessings, “they do not seek His glory, but their own applause.”
Job's question is answered in Christ, the only truly righteous One.
St. Ambrose sees in the mountains a type of the Old Testament and the Prophets. “The Jew grew old; grace was renewed.” Christ “overturned” the understanding of the Law (2Co 5:17) and established the comprehension that is of the Spirit.
St. Gregory the Great sees in heaven a type of the preaching of the apostles and evangelists. St. Cyril notes that this is the same Lord who, as Man, walked on the sea as on firm ground (Jn 6:19).
St. Hesychius sees v. 9 as denoting all of God's great works, and compares v. 10 to Jn 21:25. God goes beyond us (v. 11) when He defers judgment, and passes by when He visits us.
“All human righteousness is proved unrighteous if it is judged in strict rules”; therefore we must be strenuous in prayer, so that our righteous deeds may be seasoned by humility (GrgGt).
Here we see Job growing weaker, calling on God's help lest he give heed to the enemy. Job, like Christ, “learned obedience through the things which He suffered” (Heb 5:8).
St. Ambrose writes that Job, knowing no one is immune from falling, rejects what comes from unholiness and confesses what comes from weakness. To act in an unholy way is not part of the human condition; rather, it comes from the “poison of unbelief.” Man's pardon lies in God's mercy and not in man's power.
From his conception, man is shaped by God. St. Cyril writes, “None of the members of the body as formed from the beginning is polluted. Let the mouths of all heretics be stopped who slander their bodies, or rather, Him who formed them” (see 1Co 6:19).
The righteous ask that their trials might be over, says St. Hesychius, so that many around them might not stumble as a result of seeing so much suffering and sorrow.
St. Hesychius writes that this land refers to hell: “Man should fear going into these places.” St. Gregory remarks, “But what advantage is it for us to foreknow these things, if it is not our lot to escape them?” Indeed, Job knew he would be redeemed (19:25). Therefore, as the Lord says, “Walk while you have the light, lest darkness overtake you” (Jn 12:35).
11:1-20  Unlike Job, Zophar had all the answers and no questions. Zophar is incorrect in asserting that if a man does all the “right” things, God will bless him; when in fact, man's will cannot force God to act. The intellectual demands of men like these are satisfied with their manmade theories and doctrines. They are more anxious to appease an inaccessible God than to trust in a God who loves them.
The appointed time also speaks of the Day of Judgment, when the innocent One will judge those who provoked Him.
St. Gregory the Great interprets water to mean the grace of the Holy Spirit. “If the grace of the Holy Spirit is withdrawn from the hearer's mind, the sense is immediately dried up.”
12:22 The shadow of death is the Law, which makes all sinners liable to punishment by death; but Christ brought light to the shadows (GrgGt).
13:1 God reveals His mysteries to the ones He has found to be holy (Hesych).
Job's is the voice of mankind, “eagerly desiring to advance from fear to love. . . . He seeks the very presence of his Creator, familiarly, in the flesh,” that he might both hear and be heard (GrgGt).
God sets bounds to our spiritual attainments. We learn humility by the things we are unable to master, that we may not be exalted by those things we have the power to do (GrgGt).
Christ was cut down in His death, but would sprout again in His Resurrection (see Ps 1:3) and send out tender shoots—“the faithful being multiplied by His Resurrection grew out far and wide” (GrgGt).
14:14  Will man live again: “Our Lord, when He was near His passion, took up the voice of those who were weak in Himself, saying, ‘O My Father, if it is possible, let this cup pass from Me’ (Mt 26:39); and that He might remove their fear, He took it in Himself” (GrgGt).
As a mortal man, Job has transgressed unwillingly, that is, “sin not leading to death” (1Jn 5:16, 17). But “one day it may also come forth out of the bag of secrecy into the publicity of the Judgment” (GrgGt).
“With their feeble insight, [Job’s friends] did not perceive that the Lord had given him over to be tempted so that, like an athlete of Christ, he might be fashioned by the temptations and attain to the crown of a greater glory” (AmbM).
St. Hesychius compares this verse to Christ's betrayal at Judas's hands (Jn 13:21; Mt 26:25).
Compare this verse to 1Pt 2:22 and Lk 23:24.
16:18 The earth did not cover Christ's blood shed on the Cross; rather His blood has covered the earth, for the Church has preached the gospel of salvation in all parts of the world (GrgGt).
A stunning example of God's enemies lacking discernment shows up in St. Paul's commentary in 1Co 2:7, 8 on those who crucified Christ.
St. Gregory sees Bildad's words as being unwittingly directed against the devil.
Job's friends, seeing his affliction and knowing his righteousness, should have bewailed their own miserable condition. “With what vengeance did they deserve to be smitten, who had not served like him?” (GrgGt).
The Fathers note clear parallels between this passage and Christ's Passion (see Mt 27:40; Jn 18:23; Mt 27:26, 27, 29; Is 53:2, 3).
19:23-27 "No one since the days of Christ speaks so openly concerning the Resurrection as he did before Christ" (Jerome).
20:1-3 Zophar's so-called superior understanding blinded him to the truth.
St. Gregory comments that the hypocrite hides his evil intentions behind soft words inspired by demons, but the faithful hide the “honey and milk” of heaven under their tongue (SS 4:11).
Some, seeing the righteous suffer and the sinner prosper, assume that God's judgment is not just. But although the ungodly may prosper on this earth, they cannot escape judgment when they die. Christ will say to all who reject Him, “depart from Me” (Mt 25:41; Lk 12:47, 48).
21:16 "Let us pray together to undergo toil here, so that we may deserve to gain the consolation of eternal rest in the kingdom of heaven. For prosperity and abundance constitute a powerful inducement to do wrong; they exalt a man to pride and induce him to forget his Creator" (AmbM).
21:23-26 Riches should not lift up the soul, nor should poverty disturb it.
Those who do not pass through the present life as if it were a road to that which is to come are unable to comprehend those who do.
Eliphaz went from a dead heart to idle words, and from idle words to the sin of lying, and from lying to insults and abuse. These are the descents of increasing sin (GrgGt).
When prideful people know they are going to lose the argument, they often repeat what is already known, “lest, by holding their tongue, they should appear to be defeated” (GrgGt).
22:23 Eliphaz failed to realize that it was because of Job's righteous deeds that he was afflicted in the first place (1:12).
In the midst of affliction, the righteous know God by faith, but long all the more to see His form. Christ will take the form of fallen men and fulfill Job's desires (GrgGt).
Similarly, the Virgin Mary has hidden many things in her heart (Lk 2:19).
24:1 We are wrapped up within the divisions of time, since we are created beings. But God, Creator of all things, encompasses our times by His eternity (GrgGt).
24:8 “The showers of the mountains are the words of the learned” (GrgGt). The rock is Christ and His Church, to whom the afflicted ones flee.
"Everyone who avoids the light loves darkness, seeking to be hidden, though he cannot be hidden from God" (AmbM).
“Every just man is just by illumination from God, not by comparison with God” (GrgGt).
Is it possible for a man to help God? St. Gregory gives a qualified “yes.” Relating this passage to 1Co 3:7, he writes, “For to ‘plant’ and to ‘water’ is to ‘help,’ both of which would be only a void ministration if God does not give the increase in the heart.”
26:14  “If we can hardly endure the wonders of His humility, with what nerve do we encounter the loud and dreadful advent of His Majesty?” (GrgGt; see Ps 49:3).
“He signifies here the nostrils of his inner man, with which he gathered the odor of eternal life, and drew in the grace of the heavenly ointment by a twofold sense, as it were” (AmbM).
How can Job say that he has not done anything wrong, considering that he accuses himself of having sinned (7:20; 9:20)? Because even righteous men find it difficult to avoid involuntary sin (see 14:17–22 and note; Rom 7:13–25 and notes). “For what man's heart, bound up with this corruptible flesh, does not slip in ill-bent thought? . . . But when there is a resisting of the thought, the soul is freed from being confounded. And so the mind of the righteous, even though it is free from bad practice, yet sometimes falls to the ground in bad thinking” (GrgGt).
27:12 Compare with Jam 4:17.
28:1-3  God's order is plainly seen in things like silver and gold, but “the design of God Himself is invisible” (JohnChr).
St. Gregory interprets this passage in the light of Christ and His Church. The lamp denotes Holy Scripture (2Pt 1:19; Ps 118:105); my house is “the dwelling place of the mind”; and butter (v. 6) is the “holy preachers, filled to the full with the fatness of good works.”
29:14-15  I put on righteousness: Compare to Gal 3:27. The preaching of the Church enlightens the blind man, who does not know where to go, and supports the lame man, who “does not have the power to go to the place he sees.”
St. Cyril notes that it is not only the natural father who is called father (see 1Co 4:15), “for Paul was father of the Corinthians, not by having begotten them after the flesh, but by having taught and begotten them again after the Spirit.”
“Oh what a spoil did the Church take from the mouth of the devil, when, by converting, she carried off Saul himself, the spoiler!” (GrgGt; see Acts 9:1–12).
29:19 An image pointing to the waters of baptism and the coming of the Holy Spirit, who would settle on the apostles at Pentecost.
An image pointing to the growth of the Church.
St. Gregory sees these younger men, along with the fathers who taught them, as heretics. But they also can be seen more universally to illustrate those who teach, and those who follow, false doctrines. They are in want and famine (v. 3) because they are lost and spiritually malnourished. Salty herbs, says St. Gregory, means they “observe the least precepts and disregard the greater ones.” They no longer understand the truth, but are content to chew its roots. The thieves are those who would steal the faithful away from the Church. Indeed, the true Church is taunted by her critics, while the name of the Lord Jesus Christ is used as a byword (v. 9) by these sons of fools (v. 8), who misuse and exploit it as they pursue every “wind of doctrine” (Eph 4:14).
This passage carries several voices: (1) that of Blessed Job; (2) that of Christ in His Passion; (3) that of the Church in the midst of persecution; and (4) that of the faithful in the midst of their struggle.
30:25 “Who then are the ‘merciful’ (Mt 5:7)? Those who give money or feed the poor? No. But who are they? Those who have become poor for the sake of Him who became poor for our sakes (see 2Co 8:9)” (SymNew). These have nothing material to give, yet they constantly weep with compassion over the man in distress.
St. Gregory writes that Eve sinned and “came to death” because she allowed desire to enter her soul through the “windows” of her eyes. He warns the faithful to be careful that we not even look on what is forbidden. “If I defile my mind in thought, I can never be the inheritance of Him who is the Author of purity” (see Mt 5:27, 28; 1Pt 1:13).
The righteous man is scourged and corrected by the rod of discipline, because he is being prepared for the Father's estate of inheritance. But the unjust man is let go in his own pleasures because temporal good things are supplied to him to the same degree that eternal ones are denied him. . . . So let the righteous weigh well the evils that await the wicked, and never envy their passing happiness” (GrgGt).
He knows: “It is not that the Creator of the periods of time learned anything from time, but His ‘knowing’ is His affording the knowledge to us by the example of each particular case as it emerges” (GrgGt).
31:16 “That does not mean, ‘yes’ for this need, and ‘no’ for that one; but ‘yes’ to every need without distinction, even if it is perilous, very costly, or risky” (JohnChr).
St. Gregory the Great comments that the righteous have not rejoiced in great earthly wealth; rather, it is seen as a burden, because they have to “carry so many things” on their journey to their heavenly inheritance. All things belong to God; therefore we must strive to share all we have with our needy neighbor (Gal 2:10).
Elihu, puffed up with arrogance, represents those who profess truth with the lips, but despise truth in the heart. St. Gregory says arrogance is manifested in four ways: (a) when the proud think they possess any goodness of themselves; (b) when they believe they can earn God's blessings by their own merit; (c) when they boast of possessing something they do not have; and (d) when, despising others, they wish to be the sole possessors of what they have.
Where St. Gregory sees in Elihu few admirable qualities, St. John Chrysostom gives Job's young friend credit for wanting Job “to be declared as righteous” (33:32), while his other friends desired only to condemn him.
St. Ambrose writes that this verse shows the divine Spirit “to be both divine and Creator.” St. Gregory of Nazianzus writes that “this Spirit shares with the Son in working both the Creation and the Resurrection” (also see Ps 103:30).
Elihu has uttered great and powerful words, yet immediately follows up with pride and foolishness. He is like those who “preach Christ even from envy and strife . . . not sincerely, supposing to add affliction” to the suffering of another (Php 1:14–17).
Elihu, sad to say, did not preach in order to make men wise, but to display his own superior wisdom.
Job did not say this. Elihu added to and twisted Job's words to strengthen his own argument.
Elihu accused Job of having deserved his scourges, and of having sinned after the scourges. But the Lord judged otherwise, asserting that he was scourged without reason (2:3), and blessing him doubly afterwards (GrgGt).
“Not only does the Lord not countenance wrongs, but He does not even wish to look on them” (John Chr; see Hab 1:13).
37:5 The Mighty One (v. 5) will indeed thunder out of a whirlwind (38:1), and Elihu and Job's friends will be silenced.
God uses the random winter storms and the rain and snow to show man his weakness in the face of God's overwhelming power. Indeed, Christ taught this lesson to His disciples when he calmed the storm (Mt 8:23–27). “He has created man to be weak, and yet man thinks himself to be strong; and thereby he becomes even more feeble” (JohnChr).
37:9, 10  “What scientific laws, pray, can you lay down concerning thunder and lightning, O you who thunder from the earth, and cannot shine with even little sparks of truth?” (GrgNa).
Out of the whirlwind: It was as if God wanted to place heaven itself above Job, as if He had brought His throne near to him (JohnChr). Had Job been about to die, the Lord would have praised him for his faithfulness. But since he is about to be doubly restored, the Lord reproved him, “lest his victory itself should lay him low with the sword of pride” (GrgGt).
38:3 This verse was intended to restore and encourage a discouraged Job (JohnChr).
Before the stars were made, the angels praised the Lord. “All the unspeakable harmony of the highest heavens, both in the service of God and in the mutual concord of the celestial powers, can therefore only be preserved by the direction of the Spirit” (BasilG).
“As if it were being born, the sea is first poured out, then takes its form, and is ‘gathered together into one place’” (JohnChr; see Gn 1:9).
38:14  The power of speech was given to man alone.
Christ descended to the very gates of hell and death and opened them, so that by dying, He might overcome their strength and bring light to the darkness.
The “father” (v. 28) brought forth the Morning Star (i.e., Mazzaroth), which is Christ (Rev 22:16), “when the fullness of the time had come” (Gal 4:4). The Lord lifted up His voice (v. 34) when the apostles, having been immersed in the rain of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, preached the gospel to the world (see 1Kg 8:10, 11; Ps 93:3).
38:36 St. Ambrose quotes this verse in speaking of Christ the High Priest's woven bridal garment, “adorned with precious stones” (see Ex 35:27 and note).
The dust represents sinners, who were hardened into stone when Christ built His Church. The lion denotes the apostles, who “waited” until Pentecost, and the raven denotes the Gentiles (GrgGt).
St. Gregory the Great and St. Ambrose see in the begetting of young by the wild goats and the deer a type of the “labors of fathers who beget spiritual children” (see Gal 4:19, 20).
St. Gregory sees in the wild donkey a type of the saints who seek the kingdom of heaven, far removed from earthly cares, and who pay no heed to the blame (v. 7) of the evil one. He sees in the wild ox a type of the proud nations which were tamed by the gospel. The manger is understood to be Holy Scripture, and the ropes are the precepts of discipline in the Church. The seed is the word of preaching (Mt 13:3), and the threshing floor is the Church itself (Mt 3:12).
39:18-25 The horse and rider are like the body and soul of the righteous, who fight the adversary fearlessly, waiting for the sound of the trumpet and to hear the words “Well done!”
St. Gregory remarks that God is saying to Job, “You were considering your own loftiness, but you were ignorant of that of others. Having heard of the virtues of others, answer Me, if you can, concerning your own.”
God chastens the righteous “in order to raise them to a higher state of purity, and delivers them over to various trials that He may purge away all their unclean thoughts . . . and may thus transmit them like pure gold to the judgment to come” (JohnCas).
The Lord at last tells Job why he has suffered. “This is the balm for Job's wounds. This is the crown of the contest. This is the reward for his patience” (GrgNa). St. John Chrysostom writes that all that has gone before is now justified. Indeed, Job's remaining righteous in the midst of affliction perfectly demonstrates Christ, who suffered without sinning in His humanity that He might be made known in His divinity.
The wild animals described to Job are seen by some Church Fathers as a type of Satan, the ancient enemy. Having been shown the “lofty aspirations and works of the saints,” Job is now being shown the wiles and snares of the adversary who afflicted him.
Satan was created first among all the angels and was exalted as ruler of creation (see Ezk 28:12, 13; Is 14:12).
Here one is reminded of Pharaoh, who did not notice the waters of the Red Sea rushing over him until it was too late (Ex 14:23–28). The Jordan, says St. Gregory, signifies those who have been sealed with the sacrament of baptism.
Christ brought the strategies of the devil to naught by overcoming them, thus taking away his power. The devil “seized the bait that was His Body,” and the “sharp sting of His Godhead pierced him through” (GrgGt).
The enemy, says St. Gregory, is against God in His holiness, “but does not disagree with His judgment,” for he always seeks to tempt righteous men. “Yet the Lord permits this, either mercifully or righteously.” This, then, is a kind of covenant between God and Satan wherein the wishes of both parties are fulfilled. “Each attains what it desires and terminates its quarrels by the desired result.”
To the Lord, writes St. Gregory, the devil is as irrational as an unclean animal, as malicious as a snake, and as harmless as a caged bird. The Lord played with him when, in Christ's Passion, “He showed Him the bait, but concealed the snare.”
Even the very powers that oppose God by their evil doings are subservient to Him.
The enemy had power over the “deep” (v. 24), which is the earth, until Christ, his antagonist, pierced his impenetrable armor. St. Gregory the Great writes that the doors of his face (v. 6) are “wicked teachers” who lead their students straight to hell, and his stony skin illustrates hardened sinners mutually shielding each other so that no breath of life can reach them. Lights come from his mouth (v. 11) “because they inflame the minds of the hearers to love unbelief, and from seeming to shine by wisdom, they surely burn with wickedness.” The smoke is “darkening doubt,” and coals are earthly desires, kindled to flame by pride, envy, lust, and avarice.
41:24-26 God allows the enemy to live for two reasons: that he might disgrace himself the more in being conquered by the weaker; and that mankind might be crowned with victory in overcoming him (CyrJer).
Hear me, O Lord: Speaking to God is not so much what we say with our mouths, but rather “to long for Him with eager desires” (GrgGt).
Now my eye sees You: The gift of spiritual knowledge—that is, when we begin to perceive the hidden things of God—is conferred on us through repentance and the fear of God, which gives birth to a deeper faith. “This is called ‘the faith of divine vision.’ Until then, hearing, but now divine vision. But vision is more certain than hearing” (IsaacS).
Job was still in physical torment, yet having seen God, he was undone, and asks for nothing more. “Because Job has condemned himself, God has justified him” (JohnChr; see 40:8).
Note that Elihu is not mentioned. There are many like Elihu in the Church who refuse to proclaim properly the truths they believe, and whose swollen pride makes them unacceptable to God. “Sacrifice does not restore him, because he already believes what he should believe, but heavenly justice drives him away on account of his flood of words” (GrgGt).
Job images Christ as suffering servant, High Priest, and Intercessor on behalf of all. St. Gregory writes that he also images the Church. Job's intercession is echoed by Abraham and Moses (see Gn 18:22–33; Ex 32:32) and fulfilled by Christ (Lk 23:34). As we worship during Divine Liturgy, we offer up ourselves and, because Christ offered Himself first for our sake, we receive acceptance and forgiveness through Him.
Job's righteousness and God's faithfulness were indeed demonstrated to all through his suffering, according to the Lord's word (40:8). St. Gregory the Great comments that Job's double blessings point to the general resurrection, when the Church will receive “that which is hers twofold: having received the Gentiles in full number, all Judea shall then also be found to agree to run to her faith” (see Rom 11:25, 26; Is 61:7; Rev 6:11) “on the preaching of Elijah” (see Mt 17:11). They ate food and drank with Him images the eucharistic supper. As uncoined gold is shaped into a coin, so the faithful, having been made in God's image, are being shaped into His likeness through participation in Him. The lamb points to the once-for-all sacrifice of Christ offered up during Divine Liturgy.
St. Gregory comments that Job had the same number of children as before (1:2), “in order that those who had been destroyed might be shown to be alive.” The daughters' names designate the redeemed human race, which shines forth like the day, spreads a sweet spiritual fragrance like cassia, and overflows with abundance like a horn of plenty.
He will rise: Job is, after all, a book about resurrection from the dead—the continual hope of the Old Testament prophets. Job's physical healing was only a foretaste of what he will experience in God's kingdom. The final verses serve to establish Job in history, as an historical person. St. John Chrysostom remarks that the exiled Jews in Egypt included this section because they knew they would soon return to Jerusalem, “and desiring this, they could find in the history of Job a significant brazier with which to rekindle their piety.”
The Book of Proverbs was written that one might know Christ, the Wisdom of God. As St. Paul pointed out, Christ is “the power of God and the wisdom of God” (1Co 1:24). St. Hippolytus also said, “These are the proverbs of Solomon, that is to say, the peacemaker, who, in truth, is Christ the Savior.”

It was also written that one might partake of the virtues Wisdom begets in those who obey Him. Thus, although the human author of this book is King Solomon, the Author behind the author is Wisdom Himself, the Son and Word of God.

Wisdom instructs those who know Him. The word instruction incorporates several aspects: teaching, correction, discipline, reproof, learning, education, and training. Wisdom and His instruction in the virtues are emphasized throughout the Book of Proverbs. The purpose of correcting and disciplining oneself is to remove the deceptions of sin, so the God-given virtues in one's nature can manifest themselves (MaxCon, JohnDm).
Proverbs is characterized by parables, hidden sayings, wise words and riddles. And as Wisdom gives one discernment regarding these, he is able to understand Wisdom's instruction. Parables are illustrations used to teach the virtues. Christ, the Wisdom of God, also used parables extensively when He taught as recorded in the Four Gospels. Hidden sayings and riddles can only be understood by illumination. Wisdom illuminates those who know and are taught by Him. Wise words are like a door that leads into the inner sanctuary of Wisdom. If Wisdom opens this door to the earnest seeker after the virtues, this seeker will find Wisdom and partake of His virtues (see also Mt 7:7, 8).
Wisdom begets the fear of God in “the simple” (v. 4). The simple are beginners on the spiritual path. This fear is the beginning of wisdom, godliness toward God, and the beginning of perception. As these beginners practice this fear, they grow in good understanding of Wisdom and His virtues. The ungodly are those who despise Wisdom and His instruction. They may claim to believe in God, but they do not know Wisdom nor live a virtuous life. Consequently, they do not truly believe in God.
My son is a form of address used throughout Proverbs. Wisdom is like a father and a mother to His children, for He has deep love and affection for them. He instructs them out of such parental tenderness.
When Wisdom became a righteous Man in His Incarnation, He allowed His enemies to crucify Him (unjustly, v. 12), and to bury Him in a tomb (hide Him in the earth, v. 12). Their objective was to take away his remembrance from the earth (v. 13); however, He is now remembered all over the world. But His enemies are forgotten. Judas Iscariot cast his lot with the enemies of Wisdom and acquired a common bag and purse with them (v. 15). For he sold Him for thirty pieces of silver. Consequently, they took away their own soul in ungodliness (v. 19).
Wisdom is present everywhere and is in all things. He moves about boldly in the public streets and squares, seeking to draw all to Himself, and through Him to God the Father. When He became incarnate, He also exhibited this courage in public places. And He imparts this same courage, one of the four general virtues, to those who believe in Him and walk in the fear of God.
The simple are beginners in the life of virtue. Because of their faith, Wisdom gives them the gift of righteousness—one of the general virtues of Wisdom. As long as they hold fast to this righteousness, they shall not be ashamed.
1:23  Perception is one of the general virtues of Wisdom, and the crown of the virtues. But those without discernment . . . become ungodly because of their arrogance, the worst of vices. Wisdom reproves them in hopes they will return to Him through repentance.
Wisdom sends forth His Holy Spirit (my breath) to teach the wise His word (v. 24). Those who pay no attention to this teaching shall eat the fruits of their own way (v. 33). But those who obey Wisdom shall dwell in hope, and shall be at rest without fear from every evil (v. 35).
A loving son receives the words of Wisdom and hides them in his heart. Such a son becomes an obedient listener to Wisdom and inclines his heart to understanding.
Christ, the Wisdom of the Father, places the crown of the virtues (understanding and perception) on a son who seeks Him as intensely as people seek monetary gain (silver and treasure). Such a son will understand godly fear and come to know God the Trinity.
There are two roads on which mankind is traveling: the evil road of the vices and the good road of the virtues. Each of these two is addressed many times in this passage (vv. 7–17). The evil road leads to death and Hades, from which there is no return (vv. 18, 19). The good road leads to the world to come (the land, vv. 21–23).
This chapter may be divided into three sections, each section beginning with the address, My son. And each deals with three vices or sinful passions and their cure: forgetfulness (v. 1), rebelliousness (v. 11), and carelessness (v. 23).
Forgetfulness is the forgetting of Wisdom's laws concerning virtue, and the beginning of its cure is obedience from the heart to Wisdom. Such obedience is the road to life and peace.
Faithfulness in almsgiving (v. 3) is a manifestation of obedience to Wisdom from the heart, and helps one not to forget His laws. For one who forgets the laws of Wisdom exalts his own wisdom (v. 5), stumbles on the straight path (v. 6), relies on his own discernment (v. 7), and turns to evil passions (v. 7). But almsgiving is part of the golden chain around one's neck (v. 3; see also 1:10). For one attached to his material possessions will soon forget and forsake Wisdom and His laws (v. 3).
3:11-22 Rebellion is an offspring of forgetfulness and is characterized by a heart that despises and faints under Wisdom's instruction—one aspect of which is reproof (v. 11). For Wisdom instructs and chastises His children, because He loves them (v. 12; see also Heb 12:5, 6); otherwise, they would forget God and fall into rebellion against Him. But Wisdom's education leads to discernment (v. 13) and righteousness (v. 18).

Those who know Christ will find Him to be the true riches (vv. 14, 15, 17), and no honor given Him is worthy of Him (v. 16). To travel His good road brings one peace (v. 19), life (v. 20), and security (v. 20). Then too, they come to know Him as the Lord (v. 20) and the Creator of the world, for God the Father founded the world through Him (vv. 21, 22).
One who forgets Wisdom becomes careless (v. 23). Such carelessness is characterized by fearfulness (v. 27), intimidation (v. 28), unfaithfulness in almsgiving (vv. 30, 31), betrayal (v. 32), quarrelsomeness (v. 33), lawlessness (vv. 34, 35), the curse of God (v. 36), arrogance (v. 37), and dishonor (v. 38). And the cure for carelessness (v. 25) is the grace of the virtues: discernment, righteousness, courage, and self-control (grace around your neck, v. 24).
This chapter may be divided into three sections, in which Christ, the Wisdom of the Father, addresses His children. Verses 1–8 emphasize obedient thinking. Verses 9–18 speak of the paths of Wisdom. Verses 19–28 show the various senses of body and soul involved in the paths of Wisdom.
Obedient thinking, firmly planted in the heart, guards and does not forget, disregard, or forsake the commandments of Wisdom (vv. 5, 6). Such thinking also loves, secures, and honors His commandments (vv. 6, 7). When this is the case, Wisdom, in turn, cleaves to (v. 6), keeps (v. 6), exalts (v. 7), and embraces (v. 7) His children. In so doing, He puts a crown of graces and delight on their heads (v. 8).
The paths of Wisdom are life (vv. 9, 12), uprightness (v. 10), conducive to freedom (v. 11), energetic (v. 11), are light and give light (v. 17); and they reject the paths of the ungodly and lawless (vv. 13–16), for their paths are dark and full of stumbling (v. 18).
The paths of Wisdom involve the senses, both of body and soul: the ear (v. 19), the heart and its fountains (vv. 20, 22), the mouth and lips (v. 23), the eyes and eyelids (v. 24), the feet (vv. 25, 26), and the hands (v. 27). Such involvement brings healing and wholeness (v. 21).

Concerning 4:24, St. Hippolytus writes, “He looks straight forward who has thoughts free of passion, and he has true judgments, who is not in a state of excitement about external appearances. When he says, ‘Let your eyes look straight forward,’ he means the vision of the soul.”
Wisdom is twofold. It is Christ Himself, and secondly, it is His words or teachings (v. 1). His children who incline their ear to Him and His teachings will guard good thinking, which is called perception (v. 2). Perception is the crown of the virtues. And the good thinking in this case revolves around Wisdom's command concerning fornication vs. marriage. Moreover, His teaching regarding this matter is called a command, because it is not subject to change. His command is to stay away from sex outside marriage, for this path will lead to Hades and death (vv. 3–6).
Prostitution here refers to engaging in sex outside marriage, which may or may not involve the payment of money. The sons of Wisdom need to obey Him and His teachings, and stay away from sex outside marriage (vv. 7, 8). For the perils are many.

In fornication, a man becomes one flesh with numerous women, which in the end brings regret and a totally dissipated life (vv. 9–11; see also St. Paul's teaching in 1Co 6:15–20). Such a son will regret hating the instruction and reproofs of Wisdom (vv. 12, 13). Furthermore, little by little, this lifestyle leads to other sins, which are evident not only to God but to the church (v. 14).
5:15-19 Marriage is sacred, here called waters which are pure, for it was ordained by Wisdom (v. 15; see also Gn 2:23, 24). But adultery spills these waters and damages the marriage bond (v. 16). However, faithfulness in marriage is called wide places, because it is filled with blessings from Wisdom (vv. 16–18). For within it, both husband and wife rejoice together (v. 18), and the wife's love and companionship make her husband great (v. 19).
In conclusion, the eyes of God keep close watch on a man (vv. 20, 21). For a man who embraces a woman not his wife may do so in the dark, but what he does is fully exposed before God. And although a lawless woman may ensnare a man, the man also is responsible for chaining himself with his own sins (v. 22). For he refuses Wisdom's crown of discernment, and is finally destroyed with the rest of the undiscerning (v. 23; see also Heb 13:4).
This chapter warns against four vices or sinful passions: a careless tongue (vv. 1–6), laziness (vv. 7–16), a lawless spirit (vv. 17–25), and unlawful sexual intercourse (vv. 26–40).
Assuming debt for a friend in this instance refers to a son of Wisdom pledging with his lips to join with a friend in his evil undertakings (v. 1). As St. Paul said, “Evil company corrupts good habits” (1Co 15:33). With such a pledge, a man's tongue becomes his worst enemy (v. 2). Wisdom speaks to His son, commanding him to save himself (v. 3), for this son cannot save his friend before he saves himself. And he certainly cannot save him while participating with him in his sins (v. 3).

So Wisdom commands His son to cease being a coward (Do not be faint, v. 4), to reject his careless pledge to his friend, and to provoke his friend to change as well. Furthermore, this son is to awake from his spiritual slumber and move forward quickly with this matter, that he may save himself, like a gazelle from the snares and a bird from a trap (vv. 5, 6; see also Eph 5:14, 15).
Laziness, both of body and soul, leads to poverty (vv. 13–15). But Wisdom commands His son to be diligent (v. 16). To achieve this, he must mark the behavior of two created things: the ant and the honeybee. Outwardly they appear insignificant (v. 8) and weak (v. 12), but one who discovers their habits will also find the Word and Wisdom of God, who is Christ Himself. And when he imitates their way of life through the grace of Christ (vv. 7, 9, 10, 11), his laziness will be cured.
A lawless spirit is a person who rejoices in everything the Lord hates (v. 20). His soul is incurable as long as he continues on this path (v. 19). His vices or sinful passions are characterized by a haughty eye (arrogance), an unrighteous tongue, hands that shed innocent blood, and feet that run to evil (vv. 21, 22)—a troublemaker in the community (vv. 17, 18, 23).

But a child of Wisdom can avoid a lawless spirit by guarding the laws and commandments of Wisdom, and by fastening them to his soul like a collar around the neck (vv. 24, 25). This collar is the golden chain (1:10) of the general virtues, associated with the crown of discernment. This crown and chain are the virtues of discernment (and its synonyms), righteousness, courage, and self-control, which together beget all the other virtues of Wisdom.
Unlawful sexual intercourse is sex outside the bonds of marriage. And when a man walks about (v. 26) and is tempted, the commandments of Wisdom fastened to his soul will keep him from this vice or sinful passion. These commandments will also guard him while he sleeps (vv. 27–29). But a man who lets down his guard and succumbs to this passion will ultimately destroy himself (vv. 30–40).
Desire is a fire, and the flesh is like a garment. The latter is an easy prey, and the former is a tyrant. And when anything harmful is not only taken within, but also held fast, it will not go forth again until it has made an exit for itself. Figuratively speaking, he keeps a fire in his breast who permits an impure thought to dwell in his heart. And he walks upon coals who, by sinning in act, destroys his own soul” (Hippol).
This chapter contrasts two sons: one with the crown of discernment (vv. 1–6), and the other without it (vv. 7–24). A summary regarding both concludes this chapter (vv. 25–27).
Christ, the Wisdom of the Father, begets discernment, the crown of the virtues, in His children. This passage explains how a son of Wisdom may gain the crown of discernment as a friend (v. 5), that Wisdom's commandments may keep him from unlawful sexual intercourse. Thus, he makes discernment his friend when he guards His commandments (vv. 1, 3), hides them in himself (v. 1), honors them (v. 2), and fears them (v. 2). This means a son should value Wisdom's commandments as he would the pupils of his eyes (v. 3) and the fingers on his hands (v. 4). He writes these commands across his spiritual heart (v. 4) and confesses that they are like a sister to him (v. 5). For just as a brother treats his sister with purity, the commandments of Wisdom will keep His son from an adulteress (v. 6).
7:7-24 An adulteress easily captures the son without the crown of discernment (v. 10) and leads him to destruction. He is likened to an ox led for slaughter (v. 22), a dog tied up (v. 23), a deer pierced with an arrow (v. 23), or a bird that is trapped (v. 24).
The summation regarding the two sons is as follows. The wise son wearing the crown of discernment holds fast to Wisdom's teachings (v. 25), and thus prevents his heart from turning aside to the ways of the adulteress (v. 26). But those without discernment are walking on the road to Hades and the chambers of death, and they are innumerable (vv. 26, 27).

“You have seen her mischief. Do not wait to admit the rising of lust; for her death is everlasting. And for the rest, by her words and arguments, she wounds, and by her sins she kills those who yield to her. For many are the forms of wickedness that lead the foolish down to Hades” (Hippol).
Wisdom is Christ Himself, and we are to proclaim Him to mankind. Discernment is the crown of the virtues, and it obeys the one who possesses it. This means the individual person is superior to the discernment he possesses, and he uses it in the proclamation of Christ.
8:1-35 This chapter has been called, “The Divine Wisdom Manifest in Creation Offers Himself to Mankind.” It may be outlined as follows: Introduction (8:1); Wisdom’s relationship to mankind (8:2–21); Wisdom's relationship to the Father (8:22–30); and Conclusion (8:31–35).
8:2-3 Wisdom is omnipresent and fills all things.
Wisdom speaks to every human being (O men and the sons of men, v. 4). Before they know Him, they are simple and uninstructed (v. 5). If they obey Wisdom out of love for Him, He will give them astuteness (vv. 5, 6). Astuteness is the crown of the virtues (14:25).
Wisdom is the truth of the Father and only speaks the truth (vv. 6b, 7). Since He is the truth, He only speaks what is righteous; there is nothing unrighteous in His words. His righteousness is one of the general virtues that begets all the other virtues. In Jn 14:6, He said, “I am the truth.”
All things are the “sacred things” of v. 6. These things are evident to those who have the crown of understanding through knowing Wisdom and obeying Him.
Silver, gold, and precious stones are not worthy to compare with the value of pursuing Wisdom and His virtues. These virtues are such things as counsel, knowledge, understanding, discernment, and righteousness. They are likened to fruits (v. 19) that are produced by Wisdom within those who love Him (v. 17).
Wisdom knows all things.
The Lord is the Father, and created in this statement means the Father established Wisdom over His works; for the Father made all things through Wisdom (Athang). “Created” as used here does not mean the Father made Wisdom Himself, for the next clause shows the Father established Wisdom over His works in the beginning before time. Therefore, “created” is used in this verse as a synonym of established, for Wisdom, who is the Word and Son of the Father, is not a creature. He is “begotten from the Father before all time” (Creed; see also v. 25).

The beginning of His ways means two things. It means the Father made all things through Wisdom, and it also refers to the Incarnation, when the Wisdom and Word of the Father became flesh (see also Jn 1:14). The phrase for His works refers both to the works of creation and to those accomplished by Christ for our salvation, which are outlined in the Creed. “In the beginning before time” is the same as “In the beginning was the Word” in Jn 1:1. For the Father “established” Wisdom “before time.” Therefore Christ, the Wisdom and Power of God, is not a creature (1Co 1:24).
The word before occurs five times in these verses, and it emphasizes that Wisdom Himself exists outside creation. The words begot me show the relation of Wisdom to the Father. Wisdom is the Son of the Father, begotten from Him before and outside all time and ages (see also Creed).
Wisdom, the Son of the Father, was present (v. 27) with the Father when He made the world; therefore, the Son exists with the Father outside creation. The Father is not a creature; therefore, neither is His Son.
8:29-30 The Son also created the world, for He was working beside the Father. The Father is the Creator, and the Son is the Creator. How so? Because the working is one working. They are two distinct Persons, but the work of creation is one work. Although He is not mentioned here by name, the Holy Spirit was also present and working, for He, too, is the Creator (see Gn 1:2). Three distinct Persons created the world with one working. This one working is emphasized in the statement: “The Father made the world through the Son in the Spirit.” Therefore the Holy Trinity, our one God, made the world with one working, and They rejoice in one another (v. 30).
When the Father completed creation, He rejoiced in it. He also rejoices in the sons of men. Those who respond to the Father's joy, in turn, rejoice in Him.
The conclusion to 8:1–31 is this: Heed the Wisdom of the Father, and the man who does so is blessed. Such a man will keep his eyes on Him at all times.
8:34 The true issues of life center in Christ, the Wisdom of the Father. Those who center their life in these issues will experience the grace of the Father, the Lord.
People who sin against Wisdom act contrary to their own God-given nature (souls). For human nature is good in itself, but those who behave contrary to their nature act ungodly toward their own souls. Those who do so love death.
Wisdom is Christ, and He built His house. This house is first the Virgin Mary, the Mother of God, for He was conceived in her womb. Secondly, His house is the Church (Heb 3:1–6). This house is built on Christ, on the Mother of God, and on the apostles and prophets. Christ Himself is the Chief Cornerstone (Eph 2:19–22).

The seven pillars of the Church is the Holy Spirit, who is called “the seven Spirits of God” (Rev 3:1). These seven spirits are the graces of the Holy Spirit that rested on Christ, summarized in Is 11:2, 3: wisdom, understanding, counsel, might, knowledge, godliness, and the fear of God. These are the “seven pillars” by which the Church is supported through Christ.
Christ shed His precious blood (sacrifices) and offers it in the wine of the Eucharist at the Holy Altar (table).
9:3 Christ sends His servants to invite people to Christ and His Eucharist.
Christ, the Wisdom of the Father, gives those who turn aside to Him the crown of the virtues, which is discernment.
Wisdom invites mankind to eat my bread, which is His body, and drink the wine, which is His blood in the Holy Eucharist. Those who accept His invitation and forsake their vices or sinful passions (lack of discernment) will find life in His Eucharist (see also Jn 6). Those who seek Wisdom's discernment (the crown of the virtues) will keep straight their understanding with knowledge.
Wisdom's discernment, seen in the counsel of saints (v. 10), manifests itself in holy behavior, seen in a wise and righteous man (vv. 8, 9).
Holy behavior is conducive to long life.
This chapter may be outlined as follows: Introduction (v. 1); Wisdom's invitation to mankind (vv. 2–6); Wisdom's discernment in those who accept His invitation (vv. 7–24); and conclusion (v. 25).
A wise son knows Wisdom and His virtues. But a son without discernment is a grief, for he lives in vice.
Lawless rich men do not benefit from their wealth, for their vices lead them to death and Hades. But righteousness, one of the general virtues of Wisdom, delivers one from such an end.
10:3 Wisdom, who is the Lord, will not let the soul of the righteous man starve, for He will enrich it with the fruits of righteousness. But He overthrows the life of the ungodly, because He allows them to eat the fruits of their own vices.
The Lord allows a man's vices to humble his soul. Perhaps he will turn from them.

10:6 Understanding is the crown of the virtues, and when the heat of temptations and trials comes at this son, he is kept safe. But a son without the fruits of the virtues (harvest time) is dried up by the wind of his vices (lawless).
A wise man is a virtuous man, and he is virtuous because he receives the commandments of Wisdom. Self-control is one of the general virtues. A wise man is able to control his tongue through Wisdom (see also Jam 3). But an unwise man cannot control his tongue (unguarded in speech), which overthrows him in his perverseness.
The general virtues of Wisdom produce love, but their absence causes men to become hateful and lovers of strife.
Perception is one of the general virtues. With perception coupled with self-control, a man is able to keep his mouth under check. But the mouth of a rash man is unchecked, and therefore, approaches destruction.
10:20 Discreet lips reveal the presence of self-control and the general virtues. Forbearance is a fruit of these virtues.
Evil things with laughter are the fruits of men without discernment. But Wisdom, who is Christ, gives birth to discernment in a man.
A virtuous man lives in the gladness of hope, but the hope of a man of vice perishes.
A holy man is one who knows Wisdom and His virtues. To such a man, the fear of the Lord is a stronghold.
Humble people meditate on Wisdom and His teachings concerning virtue. But arrogant people pay no attention to Wisdom, and this leads them to dishonor before Him.
Righteousness, one of the general virtues, cuts a straight path through this fallen world. Those who travel this path are blameless, but ungodliness is characterized by a crooked path.
11:6 A righteous life produces hope in a man, for his hope is in the world to come. But the ungodly boast only in this life, which is perishing.
The ungodly do not exercise self-control over their mouth, for they know nothing of the general virtues of Wisdom. But those who know and love Wisdom partake of His general virtues, two of which are perception and righteousness. Such people benefit others.
A man with discernment, the crown of the virtues, has his mouth under control, for he knows how to be quiet. Self-control is a “fruit of the Spirit” (Gal 5:19–23). But the mouth of a man in need of discernment is out of control and treats others with contempt.
Lazy people do not pursue Wisdom and His spiritual riches. But courage is one of the general virtues, and courageous people support themselves with these virtues.
Righteousness is one of the general virtues of Wisdom. These virtues beget all the other virtues, called seed. Wisdom endowed human nature with this seed, which grows, develops, and bears good fruit in those who obey Him.
Both good and evil desires are motivated by hope for fulfillment. The righteous hope for fulfillment in the kingdom of God; therefore, every desire is energized by this hope. But the desire of the ungodly is energized by hoping in this fallen world. Since this world is perishing, its hopes perish with it.
Every sincere soul is blessed because sincerity is a fruit of self-control, one of the general virtues of Wisdom. But an angry soul is out of control, and therefore is not graceful.
“The fruit of righteousness and the tree of life is Christ. He alone, as man, fulfilled all righteousness. . . . But the souls of the unrighteous meet an untimely expulsion from the presence of God” (Hippol).
The apostle Peter quotes this verse in 1Pt 4:18. The righteous man suffers according to the will of God, but this verse encourages him constantly to commit his soul to God and His faithfulness. For the persecutor will receive his recompense in due time.
Wisdom's instruction incorporates several aspects, one of which is correction. Perception is the crown of the virtues, and a perceptive man loves to be corrected. But a man without discernment hates correction.
No one can live a virtuous life without the grace of God. As Wisdom said, “Without Me you can do nothing” (Jn 15:5). Thus he who finds the Lord's grace and lives by it becomes better, that is, bears the fruits of virtue. But His grace passes by the lawless man in silence.
A courageous wife is one who possesses the general virtues; therefore, she is a crown to her husband. But a wife without these virtues is like a worm in a tree, for her evildoing gradually destroys him.
Upright judgment is the crown of the virtues, and, together with righteousness, is one of the general virtues. But the judgments of the ungodly are deceitful.
12:8 Understanding is the crown of the virtues, and coupled with righteousness, courage, and self-control, it helps one to use his mouth in a praiseworthy manner. But a slothful man does not know these virtues. His mouth is undisciplined; thus he brings contempt upon himself.
12:10  Compassion is a fruit of righteousness. Thus in man's dominion over every living thing (Gn 1:28), he is to express this dominion in compassion. But the ungodly evidence no such affections, for they know nothing of mercy, even toward animals.
The desires of the ungodly are not rooted in the general virtues of Wisdom; therefore, their desires pursue the sinful passions. But the roots of the godly are in the strongholds of these virtues.
Gentleness is a fruit of the general virtues, and it manifests itself even in one's eyes. But contention is a fruit of vice, which causes others to suffer.
Astuteness is the crown of the virtues (see also 14:25), and with it, together with righteousness, courage, and self-control, a man keeps his anger under control. But a man without this crown (without discernment) and these other virtues proclaims his wrath through his mouth.
Honesty is a fruit of righteousness and the other general virtues. But an unrighteous man lives in deceit.
The tongues of the wise heal others, because they possess the general virtues of Wisdom. But the tongues of the unwise are like swords that wound as they speak.
Peace is a fruit of the general virtues, for people who possess them are peacemakers. But a man with a deceitful heart knows nothing of this.
Understanding and perception are two aspects of the crown of the virtues. But undiscerning people bring curses on themselves.
The fruit of righteousness is life-giving to others, for a righteous man does not remember wrongs done to him. But the ways of remembering wrongs are death-giving to others, for these ways destroy personal relationships.
Astuteness is the crown of the wise (see also 14:25). Obedience is a fruit of this wisdom, but disobedience evidences a lack of such wisdom. Obedience is the right use of the will, according to God and human nature. But disobedience is a use of the will contrary to God and nature. For human nature is good in itself (Gn 1:31), and obedience to God is in harmony with it.
Man's soul is good by nature, and the fruits of righteousness manifest themselves naturally from the soul. But lawlessness is willful and prevents these natural fruits from showing themselves. Unless this man corrects himself, he will destroy his own good nature.
13:3 He who guards or disciplines his own mouth allows the natural virtues of the soul to manifest themselves. But lack of this discipline dismays the soul, because these virtues are frustrated.
Courage is one of the general virtues of Wisdom. Courage keeps a man from being idle in his desire for the natural virtues to show themselves.
The wealth of the soul is the virtues with which Wisdom endows it. As these virtues manifest themselves through Wisdom, they ransom the soul. But this poor man is one who by his vices prevents his virtues from showing themselves. Thus, he cannot withstand the threat of these vices.
The deceptions of sin lead the soul astray in vice. But the righteous correct and discipline themselves, and their souls manifest the natural fruits of righteousness, such as compassion and mercy.
An evil man is not evil by nature. For if he were, he could not correct and discipline himself. He does evil things by the wrong use of his free will, which is often energized by arrogance, one of the worst of the vices. Those who know themselves know they are good by nature, and they will use this God-given wisdom to remove the deceptions of sin.
A deceitful son is one who lives in the deceptions of sinful vice. The good in his nature cannot manifest itself in goodness (nothing good). But a son is also a servant, and if he is wise, he will remove these deceptions and obey Wisdom, and live according to nature. In this way Wisdom will prosper his deeds.
The law of the wise is to live in harmony with Wisdom and human nature. But a man without understanding will die in this condition through the snares and deceptions of vice, unless he corrects and disciplines himself.
A good understanding is the crown of the virtues, and it manifests itself in gracious behavior toward others. Such understanding evidences a good mind and a knowledge of Wisdom's law. But scorners of Wisdom behave in destructive ways toward others.
Astuteness is the crown of the wise (see also 14:25), and an astute man acts with knowledge. But a man without this crown (without discernment) spreads his evil because he is deceived by sin.
13:20  Instruction by Wisdom removes the poverty and dishonor of a man caused by the deceptions of his own sin. For by this instruction, a man learns to correct and discipline himself with regard to these deceptions. And he who heeds Wisdom's rebukes will be glorified by Him.
A sinner is sinful not by nature, but by the wrong use of his will. Evil things will overtake this wrong use. But good things overtake the righteous, because they obey Wisdom, and with His help live according to their good nature.
The rod is the gentle rod of rebuke, and the father who does not use it hates his own son. But he who loves his son educates him carefully in his natural and God-given virtues.
Wise women build up their families when they possess the general virtues of Wisdom: discernment, righteousness, courage, and self-control. But those without discernment destroy them.
A man without discernment is one who does not possess the general virtues of Wisdom. Such a man is energized by arrogance; thus he beats people with the harsh rod of his mouth. But the lips of wise men are self-controlled, because they possess the general virtues of Wisdom.
14:6  Evil men are evil not by nature but by choice. They have chosen not to know Wisdom and His instruction. Therefore, wisdom cannot be found among them. But perception and discernment are two aspects of the crown of the wise, for they choose to know Wisdom and His instruction.
Everything pertaining to Wisdom and His instruction is contrary to a man without discernment. But perception, the crown of the virtues, is a good weapon on the lips of the wise.
14:8  Astute men are wise men who know their ways because they are not deceived by vice. But unwise men are those without the crown of discernment who therefore live in the folly of their own deceptions.
People deceived by the vices believe they are on the right road of life. But in truth their road leads to the depths of Hades.

A good man is good both in nature and in choice, and his thinking is sound.
A simple man is easily deceived (believes in every word), but an astute man has the discernment to remove the deceptions of sin through repentance.
A quick-tempered man behaves in a reckless manner because he is taken with anger. But a man with discernment, the crown of the virtues, is patient and thus can handle what comes his way.
Men without discernment share in evil because they choose to do so. But astute men take hold of perception, the crown of the wise, and thus choose the good.
14:22 Deceivers are self-deceived by their vices, and thus devise evil things by choice. But good men are good both by nature and choice, and thus bring forth mercy and truth.
The crown of the wise is astuteness, one of the general virtues of Wisdom. In their astuteness, by the grace of Wisdom, the wise choose goodness. But the undiscerning know neither Wisdom nor His virtues; thus they spend their time choosing vices.
The Lord's commandments are a fountain of life, because He is the life of those who obey Him. Those who know this life are able to remove from themselves the deceptions of sin (the snare of death).
14:30 Longsuffering is a fruit of discernment and the general virtues, but cowards (the fainthearted) are devoid of these virtues.
A gentle spirit is a fruit of the general virtues, and such a man heals his own heart. But a sensual heart is the moth of the bones, because this heart is overcome with the cares of the fallen world.
A good heart is good both by nature and choice. Such a man knows Wisdom and His virtues. But He and His virtues are unknown in the heart of those without discernment.
Even men of discernment lose their discernment if they respond in kind to the anger of others. For this response clouds their ability to understand a matter. But a humble answer manifests a calm spirit and allows truth to penetrate the situation.
15:3 The eyes of the Lord are in every place, because He fills all things. He observes both the evil and the good. The evil are good by nature but evil by choice, and He sees these choices. The good are good by nature and by choice, and He also sees this.
The Spirit of Wisdom is the Holy Spirit. He is everywhere present and fills all things. Those who partake of His fullness use their tongues to heal others, and are a tree of life to them.
15:8  Perception is the crown of the wise, and it helps them to control the use of their lips. But the hearts of those without discernment are not safe to others, because their mouths are out of control.
An uninstructed man does not know Wisdom and His instruction; thus, he will not love those who reprove him. Nor will he keep company with wise people, because he chooses to live in the deceptions of his own sins.
An upright heart is one that knows Wisdom and His virtues. Thus, he chooses to seek these virtues, such as perception, one of the general virtues. But the uninstructed are those who live in the deceptions of their own vices (know evil things).
In itself, anger is a blameless passion, useful in turning one away from vice. But if this passion is out of control, it turns one to contention. Longsuffering, however, is a fruit of the general virtues, and uses anger to turn away from this vice. Longsuffering calms rising quarrels.
Idle men are cowards, because they have no courage to deal with their problems (thorny plants). But courage is one of the general virtues, and courageous men confront their thorny issues and smooth them out.
15:22-25 This passage, coupled with 16:1–9, is read during Wednesday Vespers in the fifth week of Great Lent.
Evil men are good by nature but evil by choice. They refuse to obey counsel, because it contradicts their choices. They especially refuse to obey any counsel for the common good of others.
Almsgiving and faithfulness are fruits of the general virtues of Wisdom. These fruits cleanse the sins of love of money and unbelief. These fruits are also evidence of fear of the Lord, by which people turn aside from choosing vice (evil).
15:33 God is far from the ungodly, not in place but in will. The will of God and the will of the ungodly are far apart. But He hears the prayers of the righteous because their will and His will are in harmony.
He who rejects Wisdom's instruction refuses to correct the sins that deceive him. Such a man hates his good soul and the virtues Wisdom implanted within it. But he who gives heed to Wisdom's reproofs loves his soul, because he removes the deceptions of sin that prevent his soul from growing in the God-implanted virtues.
15:38 A man who fears God receives Wisdom's correction and instruction in the virtues. Such a man begins and continues to understand the glory of God.
Salvation begins and ends with humility (JohnChr). Humility is a fruit of the general virtues of Wisdom, and it manifests itself in works. The Lord sees these works and is pleased. But people are ungodly because they lack humility; thus their works are unacceptable to the Lord. The evil day indicates the destructive road they are traveling in life.
This passage, coupled with 15:22–25, is read during Wednesday Vespers in the fifth week of Great Lent.
Righteousness is one of the general virtues of Wisdom. These virtues launch one on the good road to travel throughout life. This road is characterized by the good fruits of righteousness, one of which is humility (the beginning of a good way). Sacrifices are acceptable, but the virtues of Wisdom are more acceptable to God.
The Lord is the Author of the virtues (knowledge with righteousness). Man cannot have the Lord without the virtues, nor can he have the virtues without the Lord. Therefore, when man seeks the Lord and finds Him, he will also find the virtues of which He is the Author. Those who seek the Lord with this in mind (rightly) will also find the peace He authors.
Righteousness is one of the general virtues Wisdom begets in those who know and love Him. This virtue is the standard (weight of a scale) by which the Lord does His works. Thus, His righteousness is also the standard by which man does works acceptable to Him.
16:1-9  This passage, coupled with 15:22–25, is read during Wednesday Vespers in the fifth week of Great Lent.
Man lives in one or the other of two abodes. These abodes are mutually exclusive. Thus man has a choice. He may choose Wisdom, who is Christ, or he may choose gold. He may love Christ, or he may love money, but he cannot love and live in both abodes simultaneously.
Wisdom's instruction incorporates several aspects: teaching, correction, discipline, reproof, learning, education, and training. Thus, he who receives this instruction shall be in good things. And He rebukes those who love Him, for this is part of His instruction. These rebukes help us to remove the deceptions of sin, for these deceptions stand in the way of one's growth and development in the virtues of Wisdom.
16:17 Gentleness and humility are fruits of the general virtues of Wisdom. Wise people place more value on these fruits than on anything associated with the arrogant (spoils). For such spoils go before destruction (v. 16).
Understanding is the crown of Wisdom's virtues, and it is a fountain of life to those who possess it. But without discernment one is led away from this fountain of life to evil or false fountains of instruction.
The spiritual heart of a wise man is the abode of understanding. It has the eyes to see and the ears to hear Wisdom and His instruction (see also Eph 1:18). Such a man carries knowledge upon his lips.
 Certain people can grow old with great dignity. Who are these? Those who have followed the general virtues of Wisdom, one of which is righteousness.
Self-control is one of the general virtues, and these produce all the rest, two of which are patience and control of the temper. These virtues are far superior to the military strength necessary to capture a city.
The unrighteous are those who do not know and love Wisdom and His virtues. Thus they live in vice (all evil things). But all the virtues (all righteous things) have their source in the Lord. “Nothing is purer than virtue; nothing more unclean than vice; for the one is brighter than the sun, the other more stinking than mire” (JohnChr).
17:1 A morsel is a small amount, and it indicates the need to avoid extremes (a house full of many good things). Possessions are good in themselves, but too much of a good thing can weigh one down. These excesses lead to quarreling, which robs enjoyment in peace and even engenders unacceptable worship (unrighteous sacrifices).
17:3 The Lord chooses those He foreknows (see also Rom 8:29). He saw the chosen before He created them. He saw their spiritual hearts and the furnace of testing they would endure in their faith. For as silver and gold are refined and purified in a furnace, so are the hearts of the elect.
An evil man is righteous by nature but evil by choice. For he heeds the tongue of the lawless. But a righteous man is righteous by God, nature, and choice. Thus he pays no attention to false lips, for he chooses to live according to God and nature.
Wisdom's instruction consists of teaching, correction, discipline, reproof, learning, education, and training. Thus, it awards benefits to those using it and prospers them.
Vice (evil) cannot be removed from anyone or from his house as long as he repays evil for good. To choose to live contrary to God and nature is to repay evil for good, for He is good, and human nature is good. Such an individual cannot be removed from his vices unless he comes to repentance.
People who live contrary to God and nature conjure up false judgment. They become so deceived they judge unrighteousness as righteousness, and righteousness as unrighteousness. Such judgment is the ultimate of uncleanness and of becoming abominable before God.
True friends and brethren are begotten by Wisdom, who is Christ. One who has such true friends and brethren is rich indeed, for they help him on every occasion and in necessities.
17:22 A changeable man in this case is a heart without discernment, for he does not experience the stability of Wisdom's general virtues. Thus, he easily falls into evils with his tongue and into grief.
He who refrains from uttering a harsh word is intelligent, because this restraint shows he possesses the general virtues of Wisdom and thus has his tongue under control. He also has longsuffering, a fruit of discernment, one of the general virtues.
A man without understanding who asks Wisdom for wisdom will receive it, for understanding is the crown of the wise. It enables one to hold his peace rather than lose his temper. And one who holds his peace will seem to have discernment, the crown of the wise.
A pretext is an excuse a man rationalizes when he wishes to separate from his friends. After this pretext is accomplished, and when his friends discover it, probably after the fact, they no longer trust him. But they reproach what he did at every opportunity.
18:4 A word is Wisdom's instruction in the virtues, and when it is in the heart of a man, it is deep water. Wisdom's virtues in a man are like a river and a fountain, for life springs up from them.
A man's mouth ruins him because he is without discernment and the general virtues. Such a mouth snares his soul. His soul is good by nature, but the soul of this man is incapable of manifesting its natural virtues, for his vices block them out.
Unnatural fear, such as the fear of death, destroys slothful men, because they are too lazy to seek Wisdom and His virtues. These men are cowardly, although their souls hunger. Their souls, good by nature, are starving to be fed with Wisdom and His virtues.
The righteous are trained by Wisdom to run to the name of the Lord, for example, by praying, “Lord, have mercy.” The righteous focus on His name and find great strength there.
Discouragement, or depression, is more difficult to cure than anger, for discouragement is hopelessness. At least an angry person still has fight left in him, although his anger is misdirected. And a servant with discernment is able to calm this anger. But who can support a discouraged man? The answer comes in 18:15.
Discernment, perception, and understanding are three aspects of the crown of the wise. This wise person seeks to understand from Wisdom how to cure the hopelessness of the man in 18:14, provided he is willing to be cured.
A brother aided by his brother fights for the truth. The two together are like a strong and fortified city and a well-founded palace. The Church is this city and palace. And the Fathers of the Fifth Ecumenical Council, quoting this verse, said, “There is no other way in which the truth can be made manifest when there are discussions concerning the faith, since each one needs the help of his neighbor.”
The use of one's tongue is capable of imparting spiritual life to people, but it is also capable of killing them spiritually. But those who rule over it by the general virtues of Wisdom will enjoy the fruits of its wise use.
19:1 Man is good by nature, but he maltreats himself and his goodness when he does not seek Wisdom and His general virtues (lack of discernment). But in his heart, he has the audacity to blame God for what he does to himself. This blame is caused by the deceptions of his own sins. He needs to accept responsibility and remove these deceptions through repentance. Then his good nature will manifest itself through Wisdom.
19:6 Understanding and discernment are two aspects of the crown of the wise. Through Wisdom, a man will discover them increasingly.
There is a proper love of oneself. It is to love one's good nature and the virtues implanted in it by Wisdom. He who loves himself in this way will also love the Wisdom who created him. From Wisdom, he will increasingly gain more discernment about himself and find good things implanted there.
Man is not cowardly by nature, for Wisdom implanted courage in human nature. But when a man chooses to be idle, he is too lazy to seek Wisdom and His virtues. Thus, his soul starves because the natural virtues are unable to grow and develop in him through Wisdom.
19:17 Mercy on the poor is almsgiving, which is lending to God. And He will repay him according to his gift means we cannot out-give God.
19:21 The heart of man is deep, and it entertains many thoughts. But these thoughts are useless and harmful unless they are grounded in the counsel of the Lord. This counsel is the truth of Wisdom and His virtues. One grounded in this counsel will abide forever.
There are two kinds of fear in this verse. One is the fear of the Lord, which nourishes spiritual life in a man. The other is fear in places where knowledge is not examined. What place is this where Wisdom's knowledge is not examined? In this fallen world where many refuse to examine such knowledge. Failure to examine Wisdom's knowledge nourishes unnatural fear in man and brings on the darkness of spiritual ignorance.
A pestilent man is a troublemaker and scoffer who refuses to be corrected by Wisdom. But when he is punished by his own disobedience, a man without discernment may see this, and be motivated to seek Wisdom and His astuteness. On the other hand, a discerning man is one who accepts reproof from Wisdom. Thus, he gains more understanding and perception.
Lashes and punishments are prepared to teach those without restraint and those without discernment their need for Wisdom and His virtues. For as Heb 12:6, 7 says, “For whom the LORD loves He chastens, / And scourges every son whom He receives.’ If you endure chastening, God deals with you as with sons; for what son is there whom a father does not chasten?”
Wine and strong drink are not evil in themselves. Wine is intemperate in those who drink too much of it. The same is true of strong drink when people commingle with it. Too much of either militates against Wisdom and His virtues. Lack of self-control and violence to oneself, and perhaps to others, are the results.
20:5  Counsel is the virtues of Wisdom implanted as deep water in the heart of a man. And discernment, the crown of the wise, is able to draw out these virtues.
Two questions are asked in this verse. In the first question, a man denies any possibility of having a pure heart, and uses this as an excuse not to pursue one. In the second question, a man denies any possibility of being cleansed from the sins he committed, and thus uses this as an excuse to sin more. “To fall is not so grievous as to lie where we have fallen; nor to be wounded so dreadful as after wounds to refuse healing” (JohnChr).
The Lord made the ear and the eye. This refers to the soul as well as the body. For the eyes and ears of the spiritual heart see and hear from Wisdom, if they are healthy.
Those who open their spiritual eyes to see Wisdom will be filled with His bread of virtues, for Christ is the Bread of life (Jn 6).
20:20 A vow made to God is voluntary and not a requirement. But if a man vows too quickly to set apart (sanctify) to God something he owns, but afterwards changes his heart, this becomes a snare to his relationship with God. For example, this would be true of monetary commitments made to the Lord's work.
The light of the Lord is man's true breath. As healthy breathing of air in the lungs is good for a man, more so is the healthy breathing of the Lord's light in his soul. For this light searches the inner man, which is the soul of man. As a man breathes the fresh air of God's light in his soul, he is purified and cleansed from his sins.
When a man refuses to breathe the fresh air of the Lord's light (v. 22) in his soul (inner man), he does evil things. These things bruise and fracture his soul, and cause him choke to death spiritually for lack of air.
A flow of water indicates the movement of the will in the heart. This movement is a free movement of the king toward God. God's will inclines the king's will in the proper direction. Thus, the two wills move in the same direction, with the king's will in willing submission to the will of God.
Righteousness is one of the general virtues of Wisdom implanted in those who know and love Him. To do righteous things shows the free movement of the will in one who lives according to Wisdom and His virtues. To speak the truth also shows the free movement of the will in one who declares the knowledge Wisdom imparts to him.
The ungodly are those who move their free will in the wrong direction. This movement is away from Wisdom and His virtues. Therefore they are not willing to do righteous things.
21:10  The intemperate man is one example of a man who moves his free will in the wrong direction, the lack of self-control. The punishment he receives is his own fault. The simple man is one who is beginning to move his will toward Wisdom and His virtues. Astuteness is the crown of the wise (see also 14:25), one of the general virtues. Understanding is another aspect of this crown. Therefore, when the simple man truly observes the punishment the intemperate brings on himself, he becomes wiser.
21:14 Upright judgment is one aspect of the crown of Wisdom's virtues. This judgment, coupled with righteousness, produces joy. Such people are holy. Evildoers are those who willfully pursue vice or sinful passions. Since they rationalize righteousness to be unrighteousness, they see a holy man as unclean.
A wise man is one who knows and loves Wisdom and His virtues. He assaults the fortified cities of his own sinful passions and pulls down the stronghold, likely the opinions of the ungodly.
21:24 Desires are blameless passions that need to be kept under control. But a slothful man refuses to control his desires. He chooses not to do anything about his spiritual laziness; therefore, his desires control him.
21:26  "The alms that please the eyes of our Redeemer are not those gathered in unlawful ways and from lawlessness. . . . We are plainly warned by Holy Scripture not to get anything by sinning under the pretext of almsgiving" (GrgGt).
The ungodly choose to live contrary to Wisdom and His virtues of courage and counsel. Their negative choice shuts them out from these virtues.
A good name to be chosen more than much wealth is the name Christian (see Acts 11:26). For Wisdom is Christ, and those who follow Him are known by this name. And His good grace is worth more than silver and gold, for by His grace Christians live according to His virtues implanted within them.
22:4  The fear of the Lord is the offspring of Wisdom, who is Christ. He is the begetter of all the virtues, described as riches and glory and life (see Jn 10:10).
The crooked are those who choose to live contrary to God and human nature, for in itself the soul is straight, not crooked. Thorns and snares are sinful passions. But he who guards his own soul will keep away from them. He is able to do this through Wisdom and His virtues.
A cheerful man is one free from the love of money and the vainglory it produces. He is very generous in almsgiving, and blessed by God. The vanity of his works refers to those done for one's own glory. But since the cheerful man is blessed by God, his almsgiving is free from vanity and done for God's glory.
22:12 Holy hearts belong to those who live according to Wisdom and His virtues. The Lord's love manifests itself in blameless hearts, and He sees these spiritual hearts which are acceptable to Him.
22:16 A lawless man is one who willfully rejects Wisdom and His virtues. His mouth becomes a deep pit of lawlessness. The Lord's hate for this man and his ways is hate in the sense of rejection. It is not the passion of hatred, for He is dispassionate.
When the spiritual heart inclines its ears to hear Wisdom (my word) and the words of His wise people, it becomes established. This inclination is the free movement of the will toward Wisdom, and the intent to obey Him.
St. Paul said in agreement with this verse, “Do not be deceived: ‘Evil company corrupts good habits’” (1Co 15:33).
The eternal landmarks refers to the Orthodox faith handed down in the Church. These landmarks must not be removed. “I cannot sufficiently wonder at the madness of certain men, at the impiety of their blinded understanding, at their lust of error, such that, not content with the rule of faith delivered once for all, and received from the times of old, they are every day seeking one novelty after another, and are constantly longing to add, change, and take away, in religion” (VincLer).
Understanding is one of the general virtues of Wisdom. He who has this virtue understands true life. A false life (v. 3) is the love of riches and gourmet dining. Poor people should never measure themselves by rich people. A false life is one of deception.
The source of instruction is Wisdom, who is Christ our Teacher. If one gives his spiritual heart and ears to Him, he will be instructed by Him with words of perception, the crown of the virtues.
Wisdom addresses His son (v. 19), and encourages him to spend time with His words (v. 16). The Book of Proverbs is an example of His words of Holy Scripture. These words are like a door that leads into the inner sanctuary of Wisdom (see also Mt 7:7, 8). If he does this, his thoughts will be directed aright (v. 19). He will also learn to fear the Lord the whole day long (v. 17), and other virtues of Wisdom, such as hope (v. 18), will be like offspring in him.
23:21 This verse seems to summarize vv. 20–36. Drunkenness, fornication, and spiritual slothfulness are an unholy combination. These things leave one with tattered and ragged garments and “more naked than ground meat” (v. 31).
Understanding, perception, and discernment are three aspects of the same thing, known as the crown of the virtues. A house is a man, and Wisdom is the builder of the house, that is, He builds a man into a wise man of strength. Such a man considers Wisdom and His virtues to be superior to a man who has a large estate.
Wisdom is the Lord. Councils are the gates of the wise. Within these gates the wise deliberate together concerning the true interpretations of Scripture (the mouth of the Lord). These interpretations are the good thinking that results from their deliberations. The Seven Ecumenical Councils of the Church are examples of these councils.
Evangelism rescues those being led into death, and saws off their bonds, and does not spare them help. The evangelist has no need to know a man before he evangelizes him. For the Lord knows the hearts of all, since He formed every breath and knows all things. At His Second Coming, He will render to each man according to his works.
Honey is the teaching of Wisdom, and when it is eaten, it sweetens the soul. “He uses ‘honey’ figuratively, meaning divine doctrine, which restores the spiritual knowledge of the soul” (Hippol).
Righteousness is one of the general virtues of Wisdom, who makes righteous a man who believes in Him. This man is not yet perfect, but will always repent and choose instruction (v. 37) when he falls into sin. But the ungodly shall weaken in evils, because he chooses to be weak and evil, and has no interest in repentance or instruction.
The enemy is some sinful passion one has overcome, but he should not rejoice in this victory, nor be puffed up (exalt yourself). Rather, he should rejoice in Wisdom, who helped him gain the victory. “We can do nothing against our faults without the help of God. . . . And we ought not be puffed up by victories over them . . . lest He see your arrogant heart . . . and you begin to be forsaken by Him, and troubled once more by that passion, which by God's grace you had previously overcome” (JohnCas).
Pr 24:31, 32, 35, 36: A man without the discernment of Wisdom is like a dried-up and barren field and vineyard. The evangelist first prepares his own soul with the virtues (works). Then he walks behind Wisdom in the fields to water the dry and barren vineyards.
Silver shines unless it is covered with dross, the waste material that comes off in something. Human nature is good in itself, and would shine if it were not covered with the deceptions (“dross”) of the sinful passions. These deceptions are removed by spiritual athleticism (beat drossy silver), such as prayer and fasting. When these are removed, the natural sheen of the virtues shines from one's nature (made entirely clean).
25:5 The King's throne is a spiritual heart established in the virtues of Wisdom (established in righteousness). When the sinful passions (the ungodly) are slain, this throne is established in the heart.
25:6, 7 When we conquer a sinful passion, we are told not to brag on ourselves in the presence of the King. For it was by His helping grace that we gained the victory. Rather, we boast in Him alone. Otherwise, He will humble us by allowing the passion to return and overcome us.
The eyes are those of the spiritual heart. When we see the spiritual riches of Christ, then we may speak of them (see also Eph 1:18).
This saying is for those who try to be too spiritual too fast. Divine teaching (honey) should be swallowed a little at a time, and not treated like a gourmet table on which to gluttonize. For it will turn sour in the spiritual stomach, and be vomited up, and no longer be sweet to the taste.
The Lord rewards those who love their enemies (see also Mt 5:43–45; Rom 12:19, 20).
25:31 A man who is his own spiritual director (a man who does something without counsel) is like an unfortified city whose walls are broken down.
These verses describe the condition of a man without discernment. Such a man is spiritually bankrupt. But discernment is the crown of Wisdom's virtues, and the man who possesses it is spiritually rich.
These verses describe the condition of a slothful man. His condition is akin to that of the man without discernment, for he, too, is spiritually bankrupt. But he is so deceived, he actually believes he is wise.
These verses describe the condition of a divisive man. He has seven vices in his soul (v. 26). St. John Cassian in his treatise on the vices speaks of eight of them: gluttony, unchastity, avarice, anger, dejection, listlessness, self-esteem, and arrogance. The man without discernment, the slothful man, and the divisive man exhibit such vices.
The Lord alone has foreknowledge. Neither men nor angels have foreknowledge. Men and angels, including the devil and his angels, can only guess about the future. Men and angels know the future only if the Lord reveals it to them. Therefore, no one should boast about tomorrow, for no one knows what the next day will bring forth (see also Jam 4:13–16). Furthermore, one may be dead tomorrow. “Hold fast then to virtue. For even so, if you depart young, you will depart in safety; if you come to old age, you will reach it safely” (JohnChr).
It is acceptable for neighbors and strangers to praise a person, provided he does not seek praise from them. If he seeks and obtains it, he will praise himself with his own lips. This kind of praise is self-exaltation, a destructive passion.
A man without discernment is a man without Wisdom and His virtues. This is serious enough \textbf{(heavy)}. But add \textbf{wrath} to his foolishness, and his treatment of others becomes unbearable, like the weight of a heavy stone and cumbersome sand.
Judas Iscariot betrayed the Lord Jesus with a voluntary kiss, and He said of him: “It would have been good for that man if he had never been born” (Mk 14:21).
Iron is a dull metal, but it glistens when sharpened. Man's nature is like iron that becomes dull through the deceptions of sin. It is good underneath, but in need of sharpening that it may glisten and show its true nature. Similarly, true friends sharpen one another so the God-given virtues may develop and shine on the countenance.
A fixed eye indicates an unbendable will, which refuses to be instructed in the virtues of Wisdom. It never stops sinning, for example, in its intemperate use of its tongue. The sinful appetite (insatiable) of such a will is comparable to the appetite of Hades and destruction.
A man praised by others faces a dangerous crossroad, where few survive spiritually. One road leads to self-exaltation and thence to destruction. The other leads into a furnace of fire in which the silver and gold of one's nature is purified by Wisdom and His virtues.
27:23 A lawless heart is one which voluntarily turns away from Wisdom and His virtues; thus it seeks the vices (evil things). But an upright heart voluntarily seeks Wisdom and His general virtues and their fruits.
An ungodly man is one who lives contrary to God and his God-given nature. He lives in the unnatural fears of his own imaginations (when no one is pursuing). Thus, he lives in unreality and cowardice. But a righteous man lives in the reality of Wisdom and His virtues, in which he is confident as a lion.
It is sometimes said, and rightly so, “Condemn no man, and you will be saved.” An astute man knows Wisdom and His virtues; thus in himself he condemns no one. His demeanor also helps quench condemnations when they arise.
Evil men are those who voluntarily live in vice, for they do not have upright judgment, one of Wisdom's general virtues. But those who seek the Lord and possess His virtues understand upright judgment in everything.
Wisdom, who is Christ, is the Lawgiver, and His law teaches virtue. Therefore, he who turns away his ear so as not to hear the law makes his prayer repulsive to the Lawgiver.
The righteous are those made righteous by Wisdom. When they help one another conquer their sinful passions, great glory arises, that is, God is glorified. But in places where ungodly people influence others, men are conquered by the vices.
An unwise man hides his own ungodliness; thus he cannot prosper spiritually. But a wise man takes the initiative to remove his deceptions of sin through repentance (leads his own rebuttal). Such a man prospers in the love of God.
God's grace makes a man righteous and helps him walk righteously. But a transgressor walks in crooked ways, which entangle him. “Crooked ways” are the sinful passions.
A man without discernment is a man without Wisdom and His virtues. This man trusts in an arrogant heart. How foolish and lost this man is! But he who walks in Wisdom and His virtues, such a man shall be saved.
28:30 The places of the ungodly refers to this fallen world. The righteous live in the world, but they lament its condition. For “blessed are those who mourn” (Mt 5:4). When the righteous convert the ungodly, sinful passions are destroyed (in their destruction).
Thus, righteous people increase.
A reproving man is one who first reproves himself. Afterwards he is able to help others discipline themselves in spirituality. An obstinate man is one who rejects Wisdom and His virtues, and pursues vice. But when his vices suddenly consume him, he cannot be cured (no remedy).
The vices, or sinful passions, are a great snare to a man. But a righteous man is one who loves Wisdom and His virtues; thus he lives in joy and gladness.
29:10 Bloodthirsty men are first of all the demons, and secondly, those influenced by them. They hate a holy man and are out for his blood. But the upright seek him out to learn how to increase in holiness.
Wisdom's instruction incorporates several aspects: teaching, correction, discipline, reproof, learning, education, and training. A stubborn servant is one who intends not to obey instruction, even though he may understand something of what is taught.
The Lord allows a man's arrogance to humble him, so, if possible, he might learn humility. But the Lord only supports the humble-minded with the glory of His virtues.
29:25-26 The fear and awe of men trip up growth in the virtues. Such fear and awe constitute ungodliness that causes a man to stumble. But he who trusts in the Master fears Him, and rejoices in salvation.
Righteousness is the Lord's righteousness. Man is not its source. For example, leaders cannot impart righteousness to those who serve them. But the Lord easily and freely imparts righteousness to those who serve Him.
Those who believe in God will fear His words, and this fear will lead them to repentance.
30:2-3 One cannot know God through worldly wisdom, which God considers foolishness (see also 1Co 1:20, 21).
This verse asks six questions. The answer to the first five is “Christ.” The answer to the sixth is “Christian” (the name of His children).
30:5-6 See Rev 22:18, 19.
One of the two things asked relates to the means of living a virtuous life, namely, the grace of God. For apart from His grace no one can live a virtuous life. O Lord, do not take away grace from me before I die. The second request is for the necessities of life (v. 8).
30:11-15  Evil offspring are the sinful passions, and the devil is their father (Jn 8:43, 44).

But this also applies to evil offspring in a family.
Numerous animals are mentioned: the leech, the raven, the eagle, the serpent, the ant, the rabbit, the locust, the lizard, the lion's cub, the cock, and the he-goat. These animals and the other situations described emphasize the opposition of Wisdom and His virtues to the sinful passions. For example, the sinful passions are like the leech (v. 16), for these, so to speak, drain the blood out of one's spiritual life. But the wise are like the rabbit (v. 28), for their home is Wisdom, who is Christ (the rocks).
31:1, 2  God is the Author of the Book of Proverbs, and His words are to be kept by His children.
A courageous wife is one who knows Wisdom and His virtues. Her value is priceless to her husband. She is an icon of the Church, the Bride of Christ. For she is to her husband what the Church is to Christ.
Words can be best understood as “collected sayings” (see 12:9–11). The word ecclesiastes comes from the Greek root word ecclesia, meaning “assembly,” which is also used to refer to the gathering of Christians in the New Testament. Thus, ecclesia is translated “church” in the English language, and is used to refer to both the gathering and the building where the people gather.
All, that is, everything in life that is apart from the purpose for which God created us, is vanity (see Rom 8:20).
We labor that we may profit, but labor loses its meaning (see Mt 16:26) when it has no eternal purpose. From generation to generation, we inherit death (Job 14:10). But Christ, the Sun of Righteousness (Mal 4:2), gives meaning to our labor and raises us up from death to life.
1:8-11 Even the human quest for knowledge and wisdom proves fruitless, because man cannot remember what he learned. Nothing new (v. 9) contrasts with the OT prophets who proclaim a new covenant (Jer 38:31; Is 65:27) created in Christ.
1:12-13 The Preacher is about to explain why he has come to this conclusion.
1:14  The choice of one's spirit means that we freely choose vanity or evil deeds as opposed to doing God's will. This tells us that man is not sinful by nature, but rather sinful by choice. This same phrase is also used in 2:11, 17, 26; 4:4, 6, 16; 6:9.
1:15 Despite his pessimism, the Preacher knows that God is indeed at work in the world, and only He can make the crooked . . . straight (Is 40:4).
True wisdom is Christ, whose mysteries are far beyond our understanding.
The Preacher spoke in his heart because the heart is the center of our true self. It is the center of good or vanity, affection and coldness, mercy and hardness, wisdom and folly, reason and confusion.
2:13 Man can choose wisdom or foolishness, light or darkness, good or evil.
No matter whether we walk in the light of wisdom or in the darkness of folly, everyone suffers and dies without remembrance. It is for this reason that Christ has come to trample down death by dying that we might live eternally in Him. Thus, we are bold to sing, “Memory eternal!”
Earthly food and drink still ends in death, but the eternal food of the Eucharist (Jn 6:55) imparts good—that is, wisdom, knowledge, and gladness (v. 26)—to those who labor for God.
The eternal Word—the beginning and the end (v. 11; Rev 22:13)—came into time and redeemed all things. He turned our weeping into joy, our mourning into dancing, our hatred into love, and our time into eternity.
That men would fear before Him expresses the Preacher's understanding of why the world is the way it is. God uses the world to turn us to Himself, for at the end of the age, the time will come for judgment (see 5:7; 7:15; 8:11, 12; 11:9; 12:14).
This is a reminder that we are to rejoice in the simple satisfaction of accomplishing the works God has given us to do.
Job expressed a similar sentiment of being oppressed when he wished that he had never been born to see such sorrow (Job 3:10–16). But Christ has sent a comforter, the Holy Spirit (Jn 14:16), to wipe away all tears. Verse 2 speaks of the communion of the saints.
Our Lord spoke of this kind of person in the parable of the rich fool (Lk 12:16–21).
What a marvelous picture of encouragement in the Church!
The threefold cord may be linked to the virtues of faith, hope, and love (1Cor 13:13).
4:13-17  In a striking reverse parallel, Christ stands in contrast to the old and senseless earthly king while also fulfilling him, for He was born poor and was raised up from the house of prisoners to be made king. Yet those who come afterward do indeed rejoice in him, bringing right sacrifices of praise into His house.
A description of life for a man who has no hope, whose labor is only to satisfy his hunger, who labored for the wind. But in the light of Christ we have hope, joy, health, and peace of mind.
Life is no more than a shadow (v. 12). No matter what we achieve on this earth, we cannot take it with us when we die. At the same time, the Christian may rejoice, for true Wisdom is Christ. The soul that labors for the food of immortality is covered not in darkness but in light, and lives not a thousand years twice (v. 6), but forever (Jn 6:55–58).
Good olive oil symbolizes here the acquisition of earthly wealth, but in the new covenant, it symbolizes the acquisition of the Holy Spirit.
In Christ, the song of senseless men has been turned into the worship of the faithful, and the latter days, not the former days, are better (v. 10). So much for “the good old days”!
The overly righteous are like the Pharisee who “went up to the temple to pray” (Lk 18:10), and the overly wise may be likened to the wise of this world (1Co 1:18). St. Paul writes, “Therefore let him who thinks he stands take heed lest he fall” (1Co 10:12).
See Rom 8:28.
In the Orthodox funeral service we say, “For there has never been a man who has lived and has not sinned.”
We are all vulnerable and easily led astray by anyone with evil intentions, be it a man or a woman. But on a deeper level, the woman who is a snare speaks to the fallen Eve, and through her to all humanity, for she is our mother. There is indeed only one man that God made upright, and that one Man is Christ our God, who broke the curse of death and freed us from our sins.
Christ's “face shone like the sun” on Mount Tabor (Mt 17:2). The faithful also shine with His ineffable light, as Christ Himself said, “You are the light of the world” (Mt 5:14). Therefore, let us work to acquire the wisdom that is Christ our king, that we might shine as lights “in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation” (Php 2:15).
Only Christ has authority in the day of death; and it is His power that releases and delivers us from that war.
Intentional sins are not a one-time event; the consequences continue for a long time.
This trilogy of words, eat, drink, and be merry, is also used by Jesus in the parable of the rich fool (Lk 12:19).
There are two ways to go through life. Those righteous and wise are in the hand of God; unregenerate man is on his own.
The living dog is an image of the Gentile believers (Mt 15:26, 27), and the dead lion images the nation of Israel.
Here is an OT image of the Eucharist, baptism, and chrismation.
The victory in both race and battle belongs to the faithful.
9:14 The little city is the world, and the great king is the devil who besieged it.
When we say, “There's a fly in the ointment,” the saying comes from this verse (oil can be translated “ointment”). This image illustrates how sin affects creation.
10:4  Do not leave your place: The wise man must not stray from his determination to glorify God.
10:15-17  The city can be seen as an image of the Kingdom of heaven, ruled by Christ the king and His princes (v. 16), the faithful. Christ calls the scribes and Pharisees fools (v. 15) for being too blind to see the truth (Mt 23:17, 19).
This chapter teaches we are not to hold onto that which we have been given, but give it away.
The days of your youth reminds us to follow the Lord from the earliest years of our lives.
The caper plant grows on rocky cliffs, stone walls, and in cracks and crevices of rocks in the Middle East.
Though the Preacher ends on a negative note, with all is vanity, the positive message of this book is contained in 12:6: “Remember your Creator.” Or as Proverbs teaches us, “The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom” (Pr 1:7).
The Song of Songs: The title in the superlative indicates this song, in the biblical idiom, is the greatest of all songs, just as the Holy of Holies (Heb 9:3, RSV) means the holiest of all places. The author is Solomon, whose name means “Peace.” This is significant because the greatest song belongs to One who Himself is the “Prince of Peace” (Is 9:6, NKJV). Thus, Solomon is a type of the King of Peace, Christ, throughout this allegory. Christ Himself is portrayed by the Bridegroom (Is 62:5), and the song is that of the marriage of the Lamb (Rev 19:7–9).
Let him kiss me speaks not of the kiss of reverence, but of that of intimacy. The Holy Church, long awaiting the Lord's coming, proclaims here her desire for intimacy with God. “The more abundantly she is filled up with His beauty, the more vehemently her longings abound” (GrgNy). The Lord sent angels, patriarchs, and prophets to Israel, all of whom brought spiritual gifts, but far better than the gifts or their bearers is the Giver Himself. The Bride seeks these heralds no longer, but the presence of her true Love Himself, the Son of God in His Incarnation.
The Holy Spirit is Himself the ointment of the Lord. In the Nicene Creed, Christ “became incarnate of the Holy Spirit and the Virgin Mary” (whose name means “myrrh”). The smells of His ointments are the gifts of the Spirit. Likewise, the saints in their virtues have this fragrance of Christ, according to St. Paul (2Co 2:15–17). The young maidens are Christ's chosen ones, born again through holy baptism.
The Church here is in the plural we because she is made up of a multitude of faithful souls. This is a clear statement of the principle of synergy: we will run after Christ, something which He Himself helps us to do, for apart from Him we can do nothing (Jn 15:5). However, we run wholeheartedly (1Co 9:24). The Church is the house of a king, a vast palace, but those who enter into her mysteries are those who have been brought into the inner chamber (2Co 12:4).
The Fathers interpret the blackness of the Church as resulting either from sin or from persecution. “When we were sinners and dark, God made us full of light and lovely by shining on us with His grace” (GrgNy). Kedar means dark or black. Bedouin tents, the tents of Kedar, are made from the hides of black goats. Kedar was the second son of Ishmael (Gn 25:13), and in other references Kedar is a place of trouble (Ps 119:5). The curtains of Solomon, the curtains of the temple, were lavish in their opulence and beauty.
The Church suffered terrible persecution from the sons of my mother, the inhabitants of Jerusalem who despised Christ. There was one vineyard immediately after the Resurrection: Jerusalem, the city of peace. But after the martyrdom of St. Stephen, the Church scattered throughout the world, planting new vineyards everywhere she went.
The Bride awaits the Bridegroom, seeking intimate communion with Him. The One whom my soul loves is the true Spouse of the human soul, Jesus Christ, the shepherd.
The Church has become the crown jewel of creation, the fairest maiden, just as the soul through holy baptism is made most lovely among the souls of men. The young goats are carnal stirrings and nascent passions. We tend them, but do not feed them!
The Bridegroom is flattering His Bride. The cheeks are the virtue of modesty. The turtledoves symbolize fidelity, for they mate once for life and live in high and lofty places. Turtledoves were the prescribed offering for the poor (Lv 5:7; 12:8). St. Joseph, with the Christ Child and His mother, brought two turtledoves to the temple at the time of purification after His birth (Lk 2:22–24).
This prophetic verse was fulfilled by Mary of Bethany's anointing of the Lord with spikenard for His burial while He was at the table (Mt 26:6, 7; Mk 14:3; Lk 7:37, 38; Jn 12:3).
This passage was fulfilled by Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea (Jn 19:39–41) when the Lord was anointed again after his death, covered with myrrh and bundled in linen. He will take rest in the Church.
En Gedi was an oasis on the west coast of the Dead Sea. It is a symbol for baptism. David encamped here when he fled from Saul (1Kg 24:1).
Doves are birds of peace, not birds of prey. Peace makes one's eyes beautiful to behold.
The shaded bed is the Church, the place man continues to meet in intimate “communion with the Divine” (GrgNy).
Both cedars and cypress wood are well known for their distinct odor, their incorruptible nature, and their ability to repel pests and vermin.
2:1 The Bridegroom has become a flower, that is a mortal, a reference to the Incarnation. The Son of God becomes man not in exalted splendor, as a lily of the mountaintops, but in humility, a lily of the valleys, the lowest places.
The Bride, the Church, is a lily among thorns, the afflictions of this life. “In the midst of a wicked people, there is a good people that receives the mercy of God” (Aug).
2:3 The Bride now speaks, exalting the Bridegroom. Of all the trees of the woods, the apple tree gives nourishment with sweet fruit. In Scripture, the apple is a symbol of favor (Dt 32:10; Ps 16:8; Zec 2:12). Christ the beloved far surpasses in glory the sons, the righteous, for they become by grace what He is by nature. His commandments are sweet to those who thirst for the living Word (Ps 118:103).
The house of wine is the Church filled with the Holy Spirit (Eph 5:18–21). The Bride desires God's love, to be overshadowed by the Presence of the Lord—not unlike the tabernacle in the Old Testament (Ex 40:35) and the Theotokos, the living tabernacle of the New Testament (Lk 1:35).
Cakes of raisins were given to the people of Israel after King David completed the burnt offerings and peace offerings to God before the ark of the covenant (2Kg 6:16–19; 1Ch 16:1–3, NKJV). They, together with the apples, symbolize the sweetness of God's grace bestowed on believers.
This is the embrace of the tender and attentive lover. The right hand of God indicates His royal favor (Ps 15:11; 16:7; Heb 8:1).
The Bridegroom addresses the faithful as daughters of Jerusalem. The powers that assist us are the angelic hosts and even the saints. The field, according to the Lord, is the world (Mt 13:38) we live in. St. Paul takes the metaphor one step further, calling us “God's field” (1Co 3:9).
The soul responds to the voice of the Lord. The image of the coming of the incarnate Word of God, leaping down from heaven, skipping over the hills, is from another of Solomon's works, foretelling the Incarnation (WSol 18:15, 16). Melito of Sardis calls the Incarnation “the transition of the Lord—His assumption of our flesh, through which by His birth, His death, His resurrection, His ascent into heaven, He made transitions, so to say.”
The gazelle or young stag, smaller than other deer, shows that among humans the Lord appeared as a humble man, servant of all. Bethel means the “house of God,” which is the Church.
St. Paul writes similarly to the Christians in Rome (Rom 13:12).
The flowers tell us spring (a symbol of resurrection) is here. The Lord has commanded a time of pruning that we might bear more spiritual fruit (Jn 15:2).
The fig tree is a figure of Israel, God's people before the Incarnation (Hos 9:10; Mt 21:19–21; Mk 11:13, 20, 21; Lk 13:6, 7). But the figs are young and immature, like those believers who have not grown in their faith (1Co 3:1). The true vine is Christ (Jn 15:1–5), and the vines are the Church, the New Israel. We are the fragrance of Christ to God the Father (2Co 2:15).
And come: The Lord commands the sleeper to arise and join Him (Eph 5:14). The dove is a symbol of fidelity and chastity. The rock is Christ (1Co 10:4). It is the voice of Christ that is heard in the Church.
The Bridegroom belongs to the Bride and no other. The Bride belongs to the Bridegroom and no other. St. Paul writes of this mystery (Eph 5:32), comparing the relationship between Christ and the Church with marriage.
This is the dawning of the eternal day, and the shadows of ignorance and error depart in the radiance of Christ's glory (Rom 13:12).
There are those who seek God in the wrong places. The marketplaces and streets are symbols of the world, but God is found in His Church.
The watchmen are the prophets, apostles, and evangelists who proclaim the Word of God and bear witness to the Incarnate Christ. The Church holds their writings, the Holy Scriptures, in the highest honor.
The Bride will not rest until her mother's house, Israel from whom the Church was born, recognizes Christ as their God and Savior. Mary Magdalene fulfilled this prophecy. After searching for the resurrected Christ, she was found by angels. Hearing He had risen, she departed from them and found him.
The daughters of Jerusalem, the predecessors of the Gentile Church, marvel at the coming of the king from the desert. This is the wedding procession of Solomon and his bride. The Church will meet her King at His return. The bed is the “palanquin” (v. 9), a portable couch enclosed in a framework of poles and canvas, carried on the shoulders of mighty men, symbolic of the dwelling place of the King who rests in His saints forever. “Frankincense is allotted to God, while myrrh is . . . for the dead. . . . The Bride . . . is likened to the vapor of incense, namely, because she worships” (Theod).
These warriors hold a sword, which speaks of the living and written Word of God (Eph 6:17, 18).
3:9, 10 This palanquin is made of the same precious materials used in the construction of the temple (see note at 3:6, 7). Solomon is a type of Christ the King.
Solomon is a type of Christ. The crown with which His mother, the Theotokos and Ever-Virgin Mary, crowned him is His immaculate flesh, which He assumed from her and brought to the right hand of the Father (Heb 2:9; 8:1). In the Orthodox wedding, crowns are placed on the heads of both bride and groom.
4:1 The veil speaks of the hidden mysteries of God in the Church. According to Scripture, Mount Gilead had exceptionally good pasture (Nm 32:1), again looking ahead to the Church.
The bride's teeth, made clean by washing (baptism and repentance), are the gateway to receiving nourishment, the meat or “solid food” of the Word (1Co 3:2). The bride is fruitful, bearing twins.
4:3 In the Church, our lips proclaim the Gospel of Christ in a manner of speech which is pleasant. St. Paul calls this “speaking the truth in love” (Eph 4:15).
The tower of David would be the impregnable fortress in David's Jerusalem. The Church is the New Jerusalem, and this fortress is the immovable confession of Christ, the Gospel, against which even hell itself has no power (Mt 16:16–18). A thousand shields refers to small bucklers, a piece of defensive armor, speaking of God's protection of those in warfare.
4:5 The breasts symbolize both the beauty of Solomon's bride and the beauty of Christ's Church.
4:6  The dawning of the eternal day of the Lord will mean that the shadows of sin and death will depart from us forever (see Rev 21:3–5). The mountain of myrrh is likely a reference to the fragrance of God's eternal Kingdom and the presence there of holy incense (Rev 8:3, 4).
The Bridegroom calls his chosen Bride beautiful and also extols her virtues, saying that she is without blemish, as emphasized by St. Paul (Eph 5:26, 27).
The bride from Lebanon reminds us the Church is not only for Jews. Senir and Hermon are the ridges of Judea and Cilicia, known to be the dwelling places of wild beasts and predators, including lions and leopards—which, according to St. Gregory the Dialogist, are symbols of demons. Thus, we serve Christ in a fallen world.
As Solomon was taken with his bride, so Christ is ravished or wounded in His heart by His love for the Church. His calling His Bride sister means Christ is our brother (Heb 2:11), reminding us that He assumed our humanity in His Incarnation.
4:10 The garments of the Church, and therefore of the saints, are her righteous deeds (Rev 19:8, 14), better than all spices, for they fill the world with the fragrance of Christ Himself (2Co 2:14, 15).
Milk signifies teachings acceptable for children and immature Christians (Heb 5:12).
In this passage, the bride is called a garden, which speaks of (1) the beauty of the plants and the fountain and (2) the fragrance of the fruit. The living and rushing water (v. 15) is a phrase used by Jesus (Jn 7:38), speaking of the work of the Holy Spirit in believers. St. Gregory of Nyssa, in urging Christians to seek out godly leaders, quotes 4:12: “But, employing the lamp of the Spirit for the search, you should, as far as is possible, seek for ‘a garden enclosed, a fountain sealed.’”
4:16 The wind being called upon to blow upon the garden can be likened to the Holy Spirit, the strong wind that blew on the Apostles beginning in the upper room (Acts 2:2).
Milk and honey together signified the overabundance of delights in the Promised Land (Ex 3:8, 17; 13:5; 33:3; Lv 20:24; Jos 5:6; Jer 11:5, 39:22; Ezk 20:6, 15), but bread and wine comprise the image of the marriage supper of the Lamb (Rev 19:9), the Holy Eucharist. In the Church, friends and brothers are invited to eat and drink.
The Bridegroom knocks at the door of the heart when He says, “Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If anyone hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and dine with him, and he with Me” (Rev 3:20). Although omnipotent, like a gentle and unyielding lover the Lord enters only when invited. “If they open to Him, He enters in, but if they delay and will not, He departs from them” (AthanG).
The Lord washed the feet of His disciples (Jn 13:5) after they returned from preaching, showing that even the greatest saints cannot keep completely free of sin without His help (Jn 15:5).
The Bride arose to open the door for her beloved. This is a powerful image of the Church working together with God to do His will. St. Paul is bold to say, “We are God's fellow workers” (see text and notes, 1Co 3:9).
I... did not find him is a solemn reminder that our Bridegroom cannot be found unless He chooses to reveal Himself (see Mt 16:15–17).
The apostles and preachers of the faith are the guards of the walls, the keepers of the New Jerusalem. They guard the Church by the true teaching of the doctrine of Christ and protect the city from charlatans, Christ-peddlers, heretics, and schismatics. The veil remains on those who know only the Mosaic Law (2Co 3:14–18).
5:10-16  In the richness of poetic language, the bride extols the beauty and grace of her beloved. Applying these words to Christ, the Bridegroom of the Church, we see that He is: (1) a shining . . . light (v. 10), “the light of the world” (Jn 8:12); (2) chosen from countless thousands (v. 10): “Therefore, peoples shall give thanks to you / Forever and unto ages of ages” (Ps 44:18); (3) like refined gold (v. 11), “on His head a golden crown” (Rev 14:14); (4) seen with eyes . . . like . . . doves (v. 12): “The eyes of the Lord are in every place” (Pr 15:3); (5) revealed with glorious cheeks and lips (v. 13): “His voice as the sound of many waters” (Rev 1:15); (6) beautiful in hands and stomach (v. 14): “Then Jesus put out His hand and touched him” (Mt 8:3); (7) strong of legs and feet (v. 15): “His feet were like fine brass” (Rev 1:15); (8) altogether desirable (v. 16), “more beautiful than the sons of men” (Ps 44:3).
6:1 The daughters of Jerusalem, the companions, now inquire where they can find such a Bridegroom. Those who are wise still seek him.
His garden is the Church.
The Bridegroom warns His Bride against trying to somehow see His Divine Essence, for no one shall see Him and live (Ex 33:20). The angels, even the mighty seraphim, veil their faces before His glory (Is 6:2).
There is little patristic commentary on this passage. The queens appear to represent the souls of those who reign with Christ through their watchfulness and their evangelical way of life. The concubines may give praise to the bride (v. 9) but expend their energy on worldly attachments. Both the queens and concubines approach the King's throne, but only the queens rule with Him. Seeing the Church as mother (v. 9), St. Cyprian of Carthage writes, if one “resists and withstands the Church, can he still be confident that he is in the Church?” Despite the multiplication of religious sects, each offering its own brand of revelation, salvation, or enlightenment, there is but one Bride of Christ.
6:10 The Bride, the Church, is beautiful as the moon because she is illumined by the Sun of Righteousness (Mal 3:20) and reflects the light of His glory.
Here, the Bride goes down to the orchard when she inspects the fruits that grow there, an act of self-examination. The Church is called to examine her spiritual progress, watching for those who still need assistance in bringing forth virtue (see 2Co 13:5). On the subject of married love, King Solomon wrote concerning one's wife, “Rejoice together with the wife of your youth” (Pr 5:18). The wife gives her body to her husband, and he gives himself to her (1Co 7:4). This is a powerful picture of our intimacy with God at the Holy Eucharist, for marriage is an icon of the Church (Eph 5:25–28).
Shulamite means “peace,” the feminine form of Solomon. The Church, replete with Gentiles of every nation, beckons with fervor the Shulamite, who represents the Jewish people, and calls her to return to the knowledge of her Redeemer (see Rom 11:28, 29).
Just as the Bride praised the beauty of the Bridegroom (5:10–16), so here the Bridegroom extols the beauty of the Bride. The beauty of her feet (v. 2) calls to mind the beauty of the feet of those who preach the gospel of peace (Is 52:7; Rom 10:15). The nose (v. 5) is the organ of scent, the most discriminating of the senses and the one most closely linked to memory. This discernment forms a part of the living memory of the Church. The king is taken with the head and the hair of his bride (v. 6), and also with her stature and her breasts (v. 8). St. Paul teaches that “Christ also loved the church and gave Himself for her” (Eph 5:25). At the marriage of Cana, Jesus saved the good wine (v. 10) until last (Jn 2:10). All of these things are symbolic of the love between husband and wife or between Christ and the Church.
This is a paraphrase/repeat of 2:16 and 6:3. The Bride again declares her full devotion to the Bridegroom and no other.
The Bride beckons the Bridegroom that they may go forth together into the field. Jesus taught, “The field is the world” (Mt 13:38). This, together with words like villages (v. 12), rise early (v. 13), the vine has flowered (v. 13), aroma (v. 14) and fruits . . . new and old (v. 14), suggests a prophetic description of evangelism by the apostles and the Church.
Some Orthodox commentators see the Bride calling the Bridegroom a brother who could nurse at my mother's breasts as a veiled reference to the Incarnation of the Son of God. For the Lord addressed His followers, saying, “Here are My mother and My brothers” (Mk 3:34). St. Athanasius, in his Paschal Letter of 329, writes concerning 8:1, “The God of all, the Maker of times and seasons, who knows our affairs better than we do . . . so also does He send [Christ] not unseasonably, but seasonably.” St. Paul teaches that Christ came in “the fullness of the time” (Gal 4:4).
My mother's house is symbolic of the “house of the Lord” (Ps 22:6). God's house has “many mansions” or dwellings (Jn 14:2), and these chambers are the intended home of all humanity. In the spiced wine we see in mystery the mixed wine consecrated in the Eucharist.
Jesus told His disciples, “the fields . . . are already white for harvest” (Jn 4:35), a picture of the Gentile Church. St. Ambrose supports this understanding, seeing she who comes up as “the Church; for Solomon chose her, whose hidden love he had discerned.” Further, he sees the mother as “Mary, whose soul God pierces and divides” (see Lk 2:35).
8:6 "Christ is the seal . . . in the heart that we may always love Him, and a seal on the arm, that we may always do His work. Therefore let His image shine forth in our profession of faith, let it shine forth in our love, let it shine forth in our works and deeds so that, if it is possible, all His beauty may be represented in us. . . . Christ is our love . . . since [love] has offered itself to death for transgressions" (AmbM).
Storms, water, and surging rivers cannot quench “the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Rom 8:38, 39).
The companions are concerned for their little sister, who has no breasts—she is immature. Yet one day she will be spoken for in marriage. This is perhaps a picture of the fledgling Gentile Church, initially small in number but with potential for growth. Interestingly, throughout the twenty-five years of the Acts of the Apostles (AD 33–58), many Gentiles came to the Church, but nowhere do they yet preach or teach.
The wall is the bride, the Church, and Ambrose also sees it as the believer's soul. In either case, the goal is to build upon what is there. The Lord calls Himself a door (Jn 10:9), for we cannot enter the Kingdom of heaven but through Him (Jn 14:6). Neither can we know Him fully apart from the Church; hence the Bride is herself likened to a door. Cedar panels are both aromatic and pleasing to the sight.
8:11, 12  The location of Baal Hamon is unknown, a hidden mystery. The Lord's vineyard is likewise a mystery to the world, though present everywhere. The keepers are the Holy Apostles and those who follow them. My vineyard reminds us that the Church belongs first to Christ, though both leaders (Solomon) and faithful together keep its fruit.
The conversation between Bridegroom and Bride is coming to a close. The Bridegroom speaks across time and space to those who dwell in the gardens of the Church to give heed to her voice. Many see escape, my beloved as a prophetic encouragement of the Ascension, after which Christ will come again to receive us to Himself (Jn 14:3).
Jesus promised, “Seek, and you will find” (Mt 7:7), just as is promised here.
According to St. Paul, Christ is “the wisdom of God” (1Co 1:24).
A spirit of discipline brings with it honesty, discernment, and righteousness.
This passage brings to mind the prayer, “O Heavenly King,” in which we confess, “the Spirit of Truth . . . is everywhere present and fills all things.”
1:13, 14 God intends for man to have eternal life. Evil and death are not of God's making (see Jam 1:12–18).
This worldview of the ungodly has not changed markedly in the roughly 3000 years that have passed since these lines were penned. Compare Lk 12:16–21.
Many church fathers see this passage on disdain for the righteous man as being fulfilled in the life of Christ.
2:18 Compare Mt 27:43.
The question, “Why do the just suffer?” is answered in this section.
Truth, love, grace and mercy are fulfilled in Christ and in His faithful in the Church.
The Church sees the lives of the martyrs reflected in these verses. See also Dt 33:3; Job 12:10; Ps 117:15.
Tragically, the ungodly do not jeopardize only their own salvation, but their wives and children are affected as well. See also 3:16–19; 4:6.
3:13 A touching promise for the single woman and for married couples that cannot have children.
Virtue, more than anything else, attracts the gift of immortality. The Church sees in this verse a commentary on the splendor of virginity and the worthiness of the monastic calling. The seven great virtues are humility, liberality, chastity, mildness, temperance, happiness, and diligence. See also Acts 24:16.
See 1Co 11:1; Heb 6:12.
Though he is not named in this passage, this is a specific reference to Enoch, who was taken up to be with the Lord and made perfect (Gn 5:18–24).
A repeated theme in this book is that the ungodly do not understand the ways of the wise (see 1Co 2:14).
4:20 The day of reckoning is the final judgment, when the unjust will see their lawless deeds.
5:5-6 The way of truth refers to the path of wisdom exemplified in the lives of the sons of God, the saints. Like Judas, the ungodly have a sense of regret but not repentance as they face judgment, a theme that continues through 5:14.
5:17-20 The full armor of God represents His holy attributes realized in Christ and in those who are baptized into Christ (Gal 3:27). St. Paul lists similar spiritual armor in Eph 6:11–17.
6:1-10 A word of exhortation to kings, judges, and rulers: their source of power is from the Lord (v. 3). St. Paul agrees in Rom 13:1–6.
6:10  Holy things here are God's commandments and wise instruction, which are taught to the faithful. In the Divine Liturgy, “holy things” refers to the Body and Blood of Christ received in Holy Communion.
Wisdom will be easily perceived and found when she is the sole desire of the heart (see also Jam 1:5).
Everything necessary for our salvation is contained in the perfection of discernment which is embodied in Christ (see 7:22–24).
6:16 God knows our every thought and meets us when our every thought is fixed on Him (see also Pr 8:20; WSir 15:1).
6:17-20  Desire for wisdom leads from instruction to love to virtue to God's everlasting kingdom.
The prudent king is fulfilled in Christ. In this light, the wise men can be seen to foreshadow His Church, which brings salvation to the world.
7:1 The first-formed man is Adam.
Ten months: The months of the Jewish year were four weeks long. Human gestation is forty weeks.
Solomon is a type of Christ, who was also born a king (see Is 9:6; Mt 2:2) yet wrapped in swaddling cloths (see Lk 2:7, 12).
Here is the story of salvation. Man realizes that his life has no real purpose and will end in death. He prays and is enlightened with discernment: only God can save him. He calls on God, who sends wisdom—that is, Christ—and His Spirit.
This passage is fulfilled in Christ and His Church, to which nothing earthly can stand in comparison (v. 8). She is the unfailing treasure for men (v. 14; see Lk 12:32–34).
The Fathers agree that this passage illustrates the divine attributes of Christ, who is “the image [v. 26] of the invisible God” (Col 1:15). One may also recognize here many of the qualities the Church sees in the Virgin Mary, who bore God the Son in her womb. From these verses we are reminded that through deification or becoming like God, humanity is given the capacity to share in the uncreated energies of God—His power, purity, light, and goodness.
Through the wisdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, we can be made friends of God (see Jn 15:15).
8:1, 2 The multitude said of Christ, “He has done all things well” (Mk 7:37). As Solomon loved and sought wisdom, so Christ loves and seeks His bride, the Church (see Mt 25:1–13; Eph 5:22–32).
The mysteries of the knowledge of God are later revealed to the Apostle John (Jn 15:15), who is also called the Theologian, the Knower of God.
Jesus said, “Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness” (Mt 6:33). The virtues here are similar to those in Gal 5:22, 23.
Wisdom brings to the believer great experience and adventure. There is a personal joy and excitement that comes from an understanding of the things of God.
8:10-11 He who is Wisdom, Christ our God, found honor in the presence of the elders in the temple at the young age of twelve (Lk 2:42–47).
8:14 A description of the King of kings.
8:19-20 Orthodox theology teaches that the body is the outer covering or “tent” of the soul (2Pt 1:13), and that together they comprise the human person. The soul is inherently good and comes into being at the time of conception (see Zec 12:1).
Wisdom is a gift from God; yet we are called to search for her diligently.
9:1, 2  Word and wisdom are synonymous; both are a reference to Christ. This entire chapter anticipates the Incarnation of the Son of God.
Like Solomon, Christ is God's servant and the son of His maidservant. Unlike Solomon, Christ is perfect man and is eternal.
In his prayer, Solomon foresees one who is perfect among the sons of men.
As High Priest, our Lord Jesus Christ serves at heaven's altar in the true tabernacle after which the earthly tabernacle and temple were patterned (see Heb 8:1, 2).
Through His death and Resurrection, Christ made the corruptible body to be immortal (see 1Co 15:47–49).
The presence of the Holy Trinity is unveiled here. Your counsel refers to God the Father, who gives His Son, wisdom, and sends His Holy Spirit to reveal the knowledge of salvation to mankind.
10:1 That Wisdom delivered Adam—and Eve—from their transgression is beautifully captured in numerous Orthodox icons of the Resurrection of Christ.
St. Jude chooses a similar word picture in describing apostates: “late autumn trees without fruit” (Jude 12). The pillar of salt is a reference to Lot's unbelieving wife (Gn 19:26).
Our lives are a combination of hardships and the successes of increased fruit from our labors. Wisdom helps us through both. St. Paul encouraged Timothy to “endure hardship as a good soldier of Jesus Christ” (2Ti 2:3).
When Joseph was betrayed by his brothers and in a pit in Egypt, wisdom did not abandon him (Gn 39–45). To His righteous followers, Jesus promises, “I will never leave you nor forsake you” (Heb 13:5).
Solomon has in mind the Song of Moses (v. 20), which is also sung in heaven and begins, “Great and marvelous are Your works, Lord God Almighty!” (Rev 15:3, 4).
This historical overview from Adam to Moses shows the active role that the Word of God (Wisdom) takes in salvation history. St. Peter records a similar history (2Pt 2:4–9). Verse 21 prophesies Christ's miracles (Is 35:5, 6; Mt 11:5).
In the first of seven antitheses, or comparisons (see 16:1–21; 17:1–18:4; 18:5–19; 19:1–9), God is seen both to punish His enemies and to show kindness to His people by the same means—in this case, with sweet and defiled water (see also 11:13). The rock is a symbol of Christ (Lk 20:17; 1Co 10:4) and the water is symbolic of eternal life (see Jn 4:14).
According to the Fathers, God could destroy the world in a single breath (v. 20). But in His mercy and love, and recognizing the good inherent in man at creation, God will correct those who have fallen away little by little (12:2), desiring their repentance (v. 23).
11:24 With His creation complete, “God saw everything He had made, and indeed, it was very good” (Gn 1:31).
12:2 God gives us every opportunity to believe in Him.
The inhabitants of the holy land were the Canaanites, who were very unholy. Here again, as in 12:2, the Lord could have destroyed them by one severe word (v. 9), but instead He judged them little by little, giving them a chance for repentance (v. 10). Jesus taught the Most High God “is kind to the unthankful and evil” (Lk 6:35).
12:12-18 The Almighty God is utterly sovereign and merciful. He will not judge unjustly (v. 13; Gn 18:25). He rules over us with great forbearance (v. 18).
For God's children, the sacrament of confession, or repentance, makes us hopeful.
Note how God's chastening fits the sin.
Another description of the judgment of God (v. 26) on the Egyptians. The Apostle Mark brought the gospel to Egypt, and the fruit of his labor remains to this day.
All men are encouraged to look beyond the beauty of creation to its source and inspiration, Almighty God, and to know Him who exists (v. 1).
See Ps 8:5, 6.
St. Paul uses this same reasoning in Rom 1:20.
On Mars Hill, St. Paul preached to those who while seeking God had gone astray (see Acts 17:26, 27). We find Him in His Holy Church, in the Scriptures, and in our prayers to Him.
13:8-9 As in 13:5, St. Paul teaches why they are not to be excused in Rom 1:20, 21.
Wisdom mercifully provides safe passage for man.
These verses refer to the time of Noah (Gn 6) and also foreshadow Christ and the saving wood of the Cross.
Man's creation of godless idols (v. 12) separates him from that loving union with God for which he was created. Idolatry is a trap for the feet of fools (v. 11).
Every form of depravity (v. 25) flourishes in a society where idols are worshipped as deities. A sense of moral order in such a culture is impossible (see Rom 1:26–30).
15:3 To know God is immortality—eternal life (see Jn 17:3).
Idols are evil images that entice the worshipper away from the True God and towards nothingness. Holy images or icons, such as the cross and images of Christ and His living saints, help keep us from idols.
St. Paul also teaches that the potter makes vessels for honor and dishonor from the same clay (Rom 9:21). We choose to live either in light or in darkness.
15:10  See Is 44:20.
God, who formed us and breathed life into us, has a rightful claim on our soul!
15:13 There is hope for a practicing idolater because he knows that he sins.
15:15 Compare with Dt 4:28.
God again uses similar means both to save His people and to judge His enemies (see also 11:4–8; 17:1–18:4; 18:5–19; 19:1–9). The food of angels (vv. 20), or manna, was both food for Israel and a symbol of the Eucharist (Jn 6:31, 32).
God sending His people quails as food is described in lively detail in Nm 11.
Related passages are Nm 21:6; Dt 32:24; 1Co 10:9.
The holy fathers see in the bronze serpent (Nm 21:9) a symbol of the healing power of the Cross. See also Jn 3:14.
16:10  See Dt 32:33.
Christ the Savior descended into Hades and exercised His authority over life and death to release those in prison (see Eph 4:9, 10).
16:15-18  This event is recorded in Ex 9:22–26.
In Jn 6:31–34, Jesus makes it very clear that He Himself is the true bread from heaven. Unfortunately, many modern Christians fail to commune regularly with Christ in the Eucharist. Jesus warns, “Unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, you have no life in you” (Jn 6:53).
God works through His creation to teach man that it is not creation but the word of His Wisdom that preserves them (v. 26). Just as God used fiery hail to destroy, so He uses the rays of the sun to defrost the crops. So then, man should arise at sunrise to thank God, for God's blessing will leave the one who is unthankful just as quickly as the rising sun melts frost (see 2Ti 3:2).
17:1-4  As seen earlier (see text and notes at 11:4–8; 16:1–21; 18:5–19; 19:1–9), God uses similar means both to judge His enemies and to bless His people. Here God is seen to send darkness (v. 2) to terrify the Egyptians and light (18:1) to guide the Israelites. This is the same darkness of Hades (v. 13) into which Christ descended (1Pt 3:19).
17:9, 10  See Jer 26:22, 23.
17:11  See Rom 2:15.
Great light (see Is 42:6) points to Christ, who is the fulfillment of the law (v. 4) and the light of the world (Jn 8:12).
See Ex 13:21.
The sixth means is presented by which God both blesses His people and punishes His enemies (see 11:4–8; 16:1–21; 17:1–18:4; 19:1–9). Here we see God punishing the Egyptians' murder of the Israelite children by slaying their firstborn (Ex 1:9–16), while protecting and glorifying the Jews (v. 8). The one child (v. 5) is Moses, who prefigures Christ.
18:6  That night (see Ex 12:42, 43) marks the first Passover Feast.
Here again is the case of God's punishing the Egyptian enemies being coupled with His blessing of His people (see 18:5–19 note).
The Red Sea crossing was such a miraculous event in the history of Israel that Solomon describes it with these words: Your all-powerful Word leaped from heaven. The Son of God is a warrior, saving His people (see Ex 15:3; Rev 19:13).
Once again salvation in Christ is foreshadowed when the high priestly prayers of the blameless man, Aaron, are said to cut off (v. 23) death. Aaron's vestments, his long robe (v. 24), like the vestments of Orthodox bishops and priests, symbolize Christ in His intercession for the world (v. 24).
19:1-9 Here, in a seventh and final antithesis (see 11:4–8; 16:1–21; 17:1–18:4; 18:5–19), God effectively works through His creation, using the Red Sea both to save His people and to destroy His enemies (vv. 6, 7). This event is seen in the Church to foreshadow Christ's Baptism in the Jordan, when He drove out the powers of darkness and sanctified all creation. Verse 9, Praising You, O Lord, is a reference to the Song of Moses (Ex 15:1–18).
The conclusion of the Wisdom of Solomon is a doxology. God, through His Wisdom, has providentially exalted and glorified His chosen people, Israel, granting them salvation. With the coming of Christ, Israel becomes the Church of the Gentiles, the new “Israel of God” (see Gal 6:16; 1Pt 2:9), and Christ, the Wisdom of God, becomes her Head. (See also 12:20; 18:8; Lv 26:44; Ps 125:3.)
1:1 Forever tells us Wisdom is without beginning. He is Christ, the power and wisdom of the Father (1Co 1:24).
The statement Wisdom was created before all things is a prophecy concerning the Incarnation of Wisdom, who was slain from the foundation of the world (Rev 13:8); for He became incarnate for us men and for our salvation (Creed). “Created” refers to His human nature which He assumed at His conception in the Ever-virgin Mary. “All things” refers to all creation, which Christ came to redeem along with the children of God (Rom 8:21–23; Eph 1:10; Col 1:15–17). From eternity also shows that Christ is without beginning.
This verse is left out of some ancient manuscripts but included in others. It very possibly was taken out following the Bar Kochba rebellion of AD 135, when Jewish rabbis made a strong effort to purge the LXX of references that could be interpreted as referring to Christ as Messiah. This was done to stem the tide of Jewish conversions to Christianity, which had brought near total destruction to the Jewish nation.
1:7 Again, created wisdom refers to the Incarnation (see 1:4), while wisdom poured... out on all His works reminds us the Father created all things through His Son.
1:10-11  The fear of the Lord brings blessing both to life and to death.
The capacity to fear the Lord and thus to believe in Him is joined with the infant in the womb. This would explain why the Lord Jesus Christ speaks of the special faith of nursing babes (Lk 18:15–17).
1:23-27  To gain wisdom we must be obedient to the commandments, maintain faithfulness and humility, and come to God with an undivided heart.
2:1 One who determines to serve the Lord will be tested and face temptation (see 1Co 10:13). Thus, we prepare our soul for this challenge to our fidelity.
Faintheartedness, the loss of endurance, and double-mindedness are forms of unbelief and bring great instability (see Jam 1:8).
Ben Sirach implores children to listen to the wisdom of their father and mother. Verses 1–16 contain timeless counsel for children concerning their parents.
Humility is essential to true spiritual works and opens the door to God's immeasurable grace.
Ben Sirach's word on mental health.
A hard heart is a great spiritual danger, warned against in the OT and NT. There is no healing for the man afflicted by this disease (v. 26; see also Mk 8:17; Heb 4:7).
The care of the poor, the needy, and the orphan is nothing short of Christlike: you will be like a son of the Most High.
Gaining wisdom is not passive or automatic. Note the action verbs: seek (v. 11); loves (v. 12); come (v. 12); holds fast (v. 13); serve (v. 14); obeys (v. 15); gives heed (v. 15); trusts (v. 16).
5:1-8  Looking to possessions and being independent from God is dangerous to one's soul. To assume that God is unwilling or unable to deal with our sins and therefore we can escape the consequences of our deeds is also dangerous. Thus, Ben Sirach's exhortation: Do not delay to turn to the Lord (v. 7).
5:9-1 The double-tongued man is one who “talks out of both sides of his mouth” and brings shame and disgrace (6:1).
In ancient agrarian societies where fences were few, a young bull would be forced from his herd and would wander about looking for a herd where he was strong enough to assert dominance. But in doing so he was in danger of encountering stronger bulls and being torn in pieces. So is a man who looks only to himself for counsel and wisdom. One Orthodox saint teaches, “He is a fool who has himself as his spiritual father.”
There are also those who are fair-weather friends and appear to be especially close when one is prosperous. But if things turn for the worse, these false friends will become enemies (v. 13). Faithful friends are a great treasure (v. 14). Such friendships are beyond worth (v. 15) and are like a good and healing medicine (v. 16).
6:18-19  Lifelong instruction is essential to gaining wisdom. As a farmer patiently plows and sows in order to produce good fruit, so is the one who gains the fruit of wisdom.
To the undisciplined and spiritually ignorant, the gaining of wisdom seems to be harsh and overly demanding. But the person seeking wisdom will gladly continue with her because of the great good she will bring into his or her life.
The requirements for gaining wisdom: (1) be willing to be taught—have a teachable spirit; (2) love to listen (v. 33) rather than persistently talking; (3) attach ourselves (v. 34) to those older and wiser; (4) listen carefully to divine narrative and wise proverbs (v. 35); (5) continuously practice the commandments (v. 37) of the Lord. As we do these things, He will grant our desire for wisdom. Remember, the early church fathers saw the Wisdom of the Proverbs and Sirach as speaking of the preincarnate Christ. We find in Him the complete personification of Wisdom.
Wisdom requires we avoid all forms of evil things. For if we participate in wrongdoing, we reap its bitter fruit sevenfold.
7:10-11 Be bold in prayer and alms, or deeds of mercy. The Lord through His Church both humbles and exalts us by providing special seasons of fasting, prayer, and almsgiving to the needy, especially during Lent and Advent.
Ophir, likely in southwestern Arabia, was a famous source for gold in the ancient world. The queen at Christ's right hand (Ps 44:10), the Theotokos, is arrayed in gold from Ophir.
The wise employer places high value on a worker who is intelligent and devoted to his job. In ancient times this meant repaying the servant with his freedom. In our times it means providing just compensation and job security.
7:22  Because they are God's creation, we take care of animals we own.
The father arranged the marriage of his daughter, and until then he protected her chastity.
Love for God and honor for His priests go hand in hand. The OT laws required that part of each sacrifice to God be given to the priests for their support. Here, following give them their portion as commanded, the Syriac version of the LXX includes what some believe to be an emendation by an early Christian copyist. It reads, “the bread of oblations and the firstfruits of the hands.” Orthodox Christians would understand this to be the prosphora bread to be used in the Eucharist.
7:32 God has always promised blessing to those who give to the poor.
The application for us is this: Only join battles worth winning.
Valuable counsel for our youth-oriented culture.
8:10  To kindle the coals is to arouse the passions.
8:17-19 Ben Sirach warns us not to reveal our thoughts to just anyone. In the Church, the priest vows that all confessions will be kept confidential.
9:1 A warning against marrying a woman and then becoming jealous of her. Instead, love her and encourage her to use her gifts.
9:3-9  Up-to-date ancient advice on a man's behavior toward women. A courtesan (v. 3) is a prostitute of noblemen. A wise man is not to gaze at a virgin (v. 5), that is, any young unmarried woman. To do so could tempt the couple to immoral relations, which in Jewish society carried a strong penalty (see Dt 22:28, 29). The beauty of a married woman belongs only to her husband (v. 8). It is especially important for a man to avoid dining and drinking alone with a married woman lest they fall into sin and destruction (v. 9).
9:15 The strongest friendships are based on a relationship with the Most High God!
Since the Lord has authority over all, He will raise up rulers for His purposes and in His time.
A very humbling passage. One could almost call it crude, except that God is forcing us to face our utter lack of a basis for personal pride.
This theme echoes Pr 3:37 and is repeated by St. Peter (1Pt 5:5, 6).
10:17 When the faithful die in Christ, we sing, “Memory eternal!” By contrast, the Lord puts an end to the memory of unworthy rulers (v. 14) and nations (v. 16).
All are to fear the Lord—the rich and the poor. A poor man with true godliness and spiritual wisdom must be honored.
All human beings should humbly recognize the immense value and glory of their own soul. The Lord Jesus Christ may have had this passage in mind when He spoke the words of Mt 16:26.
This section deals with the age-old tendency to judge matters merely by external appearance. Woven in are warnings about boasting of a present possession or position.
We are to work faithfully and devotedly, but if we become involved in too many things they can overwhelm us. Rushing about to fulfill our obligations, we will keep falling further behind.
As with 10:28, 29, one wonders if our Lord did not have this passage in mind when He spoke the parable in Lk 12:16–21.
Being independent in terms of freedom from a dictatorship or oppression is a blessing. Here, however, is a spirit of independence from God, the “I've-got-it-made” syndrome.
At the end of our life we will be judged for the whole of it. And those who remain watch for the revelation of the works of the departed. This helps explain why the Church waits long to glorify her saints.
Christians extend hospitality, but not indiscriminately (see Ps 140:4, 5; 2Ti 3:6). Almsgiving—giving to the needy—has always been a godly virtue. The Wisdom of Sirach teaches when one practices this virtue to wisely choose a godly recipient. The man who does not give alms is classed with those who persist in evil (v. 3).
These verses reflect the view of ancient societies, including the Hebrews and Greeks, that one should extend grace or do good mainly to one's family or to one who is godly. Few believed in doing good to one's enemies until Jesus Christ strongly taught us to do so (see Mt 5:38–48; Lk 6:27–36). St. Paul sums up the Christian view of almsgiving: “Therefore, as we have opportunity, let us do good to all, especially to those who are of the household of faith” (Gal 6:10).
12:7-18 In a fallen world the godly will always have enemies—either human or demonic, or both. Ben Sirach warns us of fair-weather friends (vv. 8, 9). An enemy is like rust, which ruins metal (v. 10). Be on guard and never trust your enemy (v. 10).
13:3-4 When a rich man falls, he has many helpers. But when a poor man is wronged, often even his friends push him down further.
13:14-17 Everything in creation loves its like! Thus, we have nations, tongues, and tribes (see Rev 5:9), and that is natural. But for Christians, we do not first identify ourselves as Greek or Russian or American. Rather our allegiance is first to “a holy nation” (1Pt 2:9), which is the Kingdom of God.
14:2 See 1Jn 3:21.
14:3-7  A small-minded, stingy man is not fit to be wealthy, for he will not help others. Such a person only does good accidentally (v. 7).
14:12  Death makes no contract or covenant with anyone to come at the time we might prefer. (See 14:17, and also Gn 2:17; 3:19 for the eternal covenant of death.)
The pursuit of wisdom is portrayed, with many vibrant metaphors, as the primary goal of life—keeping in mind that wisdom is ultimately and fully embodied in Christ.
Wisdom is for those who will seek her with the love of a mother seeking her child, or of a groom being received by his young wife.
It is not rational to say God led me astray into sin. (Nor is it Orthodox to give the excuse, “The devil made me do it.”) In His creation of mankind, God gave us the freedom to choose good or evil. Without that freedom we could neither be held accountable for our evil deeds nor rewarded for our good works.
Fire and water represent extreme opposites. One could allegorize: we can choose between condemnation and baptism.
The fear of God is reverential awe, the foundation for worship, love, and obedience to Him (see Dt 30:15–20).
16:1-3  A multitude of children is seen in Scripture as a blessing from God (Gn 24:60; Ps 127:3–6). But God forbid they be useless or ungodly.
16:6  A fire will be kindled and wrath is kindled are references to the stirring up of sinful human passions.
16:7 The ancient giants are mentioned in Gn 6:4; WSol 14:6; Bar 3:26; and 3Mc 2:4. They are described as expert men of war, arrogant, insolent, foolish, mighty, and trusting in their own strength. They were destroyed by God in the flood.
The men of Sodom are referred to here. In Ezek 16:49, 50 God declares the people of Sodom were arrogant and had abundant food and wine, but were unconcerned for the poor and needy. They also committed “acts of lawlessness” before God, which are described in Gn 19: homosexual acts of incredible disgust. The Sodomites were so “haughty” they had to be dealt with by God in extreme harshness.
During their sojourn in the wilderness, God allowed the 600,000 foot-soldiers of Israel to die because of their hardness of heart.
The OT and NT teach us that God holds all mankind accountable and will judge us according to our works (see Ps 61:13; Pr 24:12; Mt 25:31–46).
Ben Sirach understands well the mind of the skeptic who refuses to believe in God. Because the unbeliever does not admit that outside his limited realm of finite wisdom God could exist, the author calls him diminished in heart, without discernment and deceived (v. 21).
Ben Sirach here offers one of the finest evangelism lessons in the OT. His premise: A teachable person will receive precise and accurate knowledge from God. How? He will recognize God has created everything in exactness of order, and the way to find harmony and peace in life is to find our place in His plan and order. The author also gives instruction on (1) the creation of the world (16:24–28), (2) the creation of man (17:1–8), (3) God's revelation through His covenant (17:9–19), and (4) how to return to God (17:20–27).
In the previous verses Ben Sirach briefly sets forth the order and majesty of God's creation of the world. Now he begins a discourse on the grandeur of man made in the image of God. Consequently man is given authority and dominion and power over all the earth.
17:9-19 God intended Israel (v. 14) to be a tight-knit, unified nation. But He also intended her to have open and honorable relations with every nation (v. 14), that is, the Gentiles, ultimately becoming the instrument of their salvation. However, as a nation they did not fulfill this divine intent. Their unity became centered in their ethnicity rather than their relationship with God. They even grew to despise the Gentiles with no concern for their salvation. It is extremely important for us within the Church, the new Israel, not to fall into this same sin and incur the same judgment (see Rom 11:11–36). For the fulfillment of God's promises to Israel in the Church, see the following passages: Rom 4:9–16; 9:6, 8, 23–27; 11:7; 1Co 10:18; Gal 6:16; 1Pt 2:4–12; Rev 3:12; 21:2, 10.
This marvelous passage on repentance forms the basis for many of the prayers, litanies, and services of the ancient Church. This passage was used and paraphrased in the third-century treatise attributed to St. Cyprian entitled “Exhortation to Repentance.”
This verse emphasizes the temporal existence of man. Death is seen as the destroyer of earthly praise to God. Augustine translated thanksgiving as “confession.”
17:24 The mercy and atonement from the Lord anticipates the coming of the Son of God.
On earth nothing is brighter than the sun, yet even it can be eclipsed. So with mankind, the best of us can be darkened by evil.
18:3-6 The works and wonders of the Lord are of such magnitude and majesty, it is impossible to enumerate them all or to plumb their depths. Augustine has a long and moving sentence on the depth and beauty of Scripture in which he says that if one had a long lifetime to study it at leisure, he could never fathom it all. He concludes by quoting a portion of v. 6: When a man completes his search, then he starts over.
Man's inability to consistently practice righteousness, the brevity of even the longest life, and human suffering all move God to be compassionate and merciful.
18:15-16 A friendly word often brings more comfort than does a gift. However, a gracious person will give both comforting words and fitting gifts.
These serious admonitions apply to one's health and daily life, but their ultimate application is to prepare the soul for the final judgment.
Making a vow to the Lord can be as simple as promising Him to give a tithe of one's income, or as all-encompassing as monastic vows (see Nm 6:5; Acts 18:18).
God teaches us that we must use our wealth to help those in need.
18:26  Times are changing. In these days of sin, when the culture takes an evil turn, the wise man will be even more careful to guard against wrongdoing.
18:28 As one labors to be wise, that virtue will spread to others.
Interestingly, the heading Self-Control appears in the Greek text.
One who has self-control will not dissipate his wealth in drunkenness, nor will he be careless about small things. “Faithfulness in small things is no small thing” (Aug).
19:8 The one exception to not passing on hearsay is when keeping quiet is a sin.
These verses urge careful examination. The KJV uses “admonish” for the Greek elegzon, which we have rendered question. Some would render it “reprove” or “examine.” However, true friendship requires that we gently and tactfully ask a friend or a neighbor about a potential false charge or hurtful statement. We always give the benefit of the doubt to our neighbor or friend, remembering that we all slip and sin with our tongue far more often than we realize (v. 16).
This passage affirms the nature of true wisdom by contrasting it with false wisdom. All wisdom begins with the fear of the Lord (v. 18).
Outward appearance can be an indicator of wisdom.
The martyr Cyprian (200–258), in a passage attributed to him calling this book by its nickname “Ecclesiasticus,” meaning “Church Book,” places Sirach on a par with all other Scripture. Many church fathers also quoted from Sirach. In his treatise, Cyprian quotes first from 17:24–26 and then from 20:3. This document includes a great many Scripture quotes, mostly from the LXX but also a few from the NT, and is worthy to be studied by all Christians.
A eunuch is a castrated man who serves as an attendant to a sovereign in his bedchamber or harem. The analogy here is that a man who uses senseless violence to bring about justice is impotent in producing justice.
The church fathers insist that the most difficult discipline for most of us is learning to keep silent. “Now what ought we to learn before everything else, but to be silent, that we may be able to speak? Lest my voice should condemn me, before that of another acquit me, it is written: ‘By thy words thou shalt be condemned’” (AmbM).
These verses employ contrasting terms to show that things are not always as they appear to be.
Beware of fools bearing gifts!
The foolish man awash in self-pity complains about being friendless and unappreciated. His world revolves around himself, and he becomes a laughingstock to all.
This definition of a fool as a man without grace serves as a reminder to Christians to rely on the grace of God in their speech instead of merely on their own understanding.
A simple and powerful summary of the attitude of the repentant believer. If one has sinned, he is not to continue in it. Rather, he is to pray urgently for forgiveness. The humble believer must view all sin as dangerous, as much as a poisonous snake. St. Paul follows this exhortation when he says, “Flee sexual immorality” (1Co 6:18).
Lawlessness is any form of rebellion against the duly constituted authority over us. God calls it “every man doing whatever is right in his own eyes” (Dt 12:8).
This passage is a brilliant series of comparisons and contrasts of wisdom and folly.
St. Paul speaks of “the word of wisdom” (1Co 12:8).
21:27  Jude 9 also warns against rebuking Satan, instead instructing us to say, “The Lord rebuke you!” (See also Zec 3:2.)
A powerful condemnation of laziness. The filthy stone was used like toilet paper—which explains 22:2.
Because the father is ultimately responsible for the discipline of children, St. Paul issues a helpful word in Eph 6:4.
The concept of rest for the dead suggests a life after death, not a cessation of existence.
Close contact with a fool can defile a person, and his influence is an exhausting irritation.
St. John Chrysostom has a lengthy discourse on friendship in which he quotes from this verse, listing the evil actions that destroy friendship: “reproaching . . . and revealing of a secret, and a treacherous wound.” He goes on to say, “For there is nothing good without friendship . . . so let there be a man having ten thousand talents and another a hundred friends: the latter is more rich in resources than the former.”
22:27 This passage amplifies Ps 140:3, which is sung at Vespers.
It appears this prayer may have formed the basis for the Prayer of St. Ephraim the Syrian, the prayer of repentance which Orthodox Christians pray repeatedly throughout Great Lent, though that prayer is simpler and shorter.
Ben Sirach's warning reflects the serious matter of making vows and not fulfilling them. To break a vow made in the name of the Holy One would be to take God's name in vain (Ex 20:7).
This verse is very clear on God's foreknowledge: all things are known to Him.
This chapter is a poetic discourse on Wisdom, which can only find its fulfillment in Christ, and thus is viewed by the early church fathers as being Christological. The Greek word sophia (wisdom) is feminine in gender, and therefore the pronouns associated with it are translated in the feminine. The preincarnate Christ is revealed as the eternally begotten Son, God of God, co-equal with the Father. Also, Wisdom, the preincarnate Son, is exalted above all. Perhaps St. Paul had this passage in mind when he penned Php 2:5–11, which many believe is an early Christian hymn.
“Observe the peculiar attribute of the Divine Generation, that the Son doth not seem to have come forth out of any place, but as God from God, a Son from a Father, nor to have a beginning in the course of time, having come forth from the Father by being born, as He Himself who was born said: ‘I came forth from the mouth of the Most High’” (AmbM).
24:8 Created me is a prophecy concerning the incarnation of Wisdom. He is Christ, the power and wisdom of the Father (1Co 1:24). The phrases a place to live, a tent in Jacob, and an inheritance in Israel also emphasize the Incarnation.
The phrases before the age, from the beginning, and in the age to come show that Wisdom is without beginning. The statement He created me is prophetic of the Incarnation as well. For Christ, the power and wisdom of the Father, assumed a human nature at His conception in the womb of the Mother of God, the Ever-virgin Mary.
24:16-17 St. Paul teaches that in Christ we find a superabundance of the riches of grace (Eph 1:7, 8).
24:21 Though the Christian finds true nourishment in the Body and Blood of Christ, he will always hunger and thirst for more of Christ in all aspects of life.
Though these verses primarily describe those worthy of praise, they also include a denunciation of the unworthy (v. 2). It is interesting that one of the great celibate monks of the Church, St. John Chrysostom, should say of v. 1: “For there is no relationship between man and man so close as that between man and wife, if they be joined together as they should be . . . nothing whatever is more precious than to be . . . loved by a wife and to love her.”
Ben Sirach continues his diatribe on the evil wife (vv. 15–25, and again in 26:5–12). Following each of these passages are sections praising a good wife (26:1–4, 13–18). Both vice and virtue are fair game for this outspoken author!
Historically, it was seen as disgraceful for a wife to financially support her husband. When necessity calls for the husband to stay at home with the children and keep the house while the wife earns the income, be aware of these warnings of Ben Sirach.
25:24 Just as neglecting a crack in a reservoir could cause a flood, so also an emboldened evil wife can produce a torrent of wicked deeds.
The OT rules concerning divorce were less strict than those given by Jesus.
A good wife brings her husband happiness (vv. 1, 2, 4), long life (v. 1), and peace (v. 2).
26:5-6 After listing three fears, Ben Sirach declares the fourth to be the wife who is jealous over another woman. The implication is that her jealousy is unfounded.
This passage warns of the sin of sexual promiscuity. Clement of Alexandria says of v. 9, “But languishing looks, and ogling, which is to wink with the eyes, is nothing else than to commit adultery with the eyes” (ClemA).
This passage makes many of the same observations as 1Pt 3:1–6.
26:20-3 Business-related scandals are not new. Unless a merchant holds steadfastly to the fear of the Lord, the work of his hands will be overturned.
Jesus Christ must be the Lord of our reasoning process (v. 6), keeping our motives pure.
Cyprian of Carthage (martyred AD 258) sees this passage as the basis of St. Paul's and all Christian sufferings. “This, in short, is the difference between us and others who know not God, that in misfortune they complain and murmur, while adversity does not call us away from the truth of virtue and faith, but strengthens us by its suffering.”
The Lord Jesus Christ confirmed and amplified this truth in His fourth Beatitude (Mt 5:6).
Trash talk and swearing may make a man look tough, but Ben Sirach is right: it is offensive and gains no respect from others.
Moses told the children of Israel the same thing in different words: “You will know your sin when evils overtake you” (Nm 32:23).
This concept is recorded in Dt 32:35, and is affirmed by St. Paul in Rom 12:19.
The Lord Jesus Christ echoed this truth in His Sermon on the Mount (Mt 6:14, 15). It is not that God's grace and forgiveness are somehow purchased or earned by our first forgiving others. Rather, our unforgiveness prevents us from having the humility to receive God's mercy and forgiveness.
It is well known that those who are filled with wrath and discontent develop serious diseases. Forgiveness of others promotes our spiritual and physical healing.
One of the most powerful of Christ's parables greatly amplifies this common human failing (Mt 18:23–35).
28:6 The church fathers often urge us to ponder our death and the great judgment seat of Christ in order that we stand fast in a state of preparation for that awesome day.
Some see possessions as referring to the tongue, which is to be guarded as carefully as silver and gold. Cyprian, apparently quoting the Vulgate, renders this verse as, “Hedge thine ears with thorns, and hearken not to a wicked tongue.”
The Church teaches us to weigh our words and to pray, “Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth” (Ps 140:3). He who lies in wait is Satan, who desires to capture our soul.
Christ expands on this in the Sermon on the Mount (Mt 5:42).
“What is so likely to win favor as gratitude? . . . What [is] more natural than to love one who loves us?” (AmbM). Thus, we are urged to give our money to help a brother and friend (v. 10).
This passage is a precursor to Christ's words in Mt 6:19–21. Since the Sermon on the Mount is the heart of the Lord's teachings, and since it rings with many words and concepts from Sirach, it is easy to see why the early Church gave the book the nickname “Ecclesiasticus” (Church Book). Verses 12 and 13 instruct us to keep an alms fund in a safe place so it will be available when we meet a needy person. One who is generous to the poor will be protected from affliction and his enemy. Perhaps following the Old Latin, some fathers read v. 12 as, “Store up your alms in the heart of the poor man.”
God believes in discipline! Heb 12:5–10 reveals how the Lord disciplines His children, and asks the question, “What son is there whom a father does not chasten?” (v. 7).
30:16 May we thank God for health of body and joy of heart!
30:19  In the “Bel and the Serpent” section of Daniel, they tried offering food and drink to an idol; Daniel laughed, and they failed.
Ben Sirach teaches that sorrow does not simply sneak up on us and take over. Instead, we give ourselves over to it (v. 21), or we can put it far away. How? By rejoicing (v. 22), loving our soul, and comforting our heart (v. 23).
Among the great problems caused by wealth and its accumulation are anxiety and sleeplessness. “Why enviest thou the rich man? Is it because he has subjected himself to many cares? . . . Because he is bound like a dog, with ten thousand chains—namely his riches? . . . As though at enmity with ourselves, we have devised a tyranny more powerful than natural want of rest—the sleeplessness which comes of wealth” (John Chr).
Rare is the individual who is rich but does not love money. Such a person can do great good in the world. “For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil, for which some have strayed from the faith in their greediness, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows” (1Ti 6:10). “What is greater than the man that knows how not to be excited at the thought of money, and has contempt for riches, and looks down as from a lofty vantage-ground on the desires of men? Men think that one who acts thus is more than a man” (AmbM).
This passage gives attention to righteous conduct at dinner parties. Issues such as moderation in food and drink, good manners, proper conversation, and even stinginess are addressed.
Eating everything in sight is not new! Ben Sirach calls for restraint.
Even during Lent, when dining elsewhere, the fathers say to eat what is set before you.
A small helping of food is sufficient for those with discipline. This is not written just for monks, but for all Christians.
Throughout Scripture, wine is seen as a good gift from God if we drink it in moderation to bring gladness of soul (v. 28).
In ancient times, hosting a banquet was a magnificent honor. Ben Sirach reminds the host to be as one of them and to take care of them—that is, be the servant of your guests.
This banquet is complete with a concert of dinnertime music (v. 5) and delicious wine (v. 6). Looking ahead, imagine the grandeur of the “marriage supper of the Lamb” (Rev 19:9).
Banquet behavior for a young man.
A wise man is correctable; a sinful man is not.
We are called to trust the Lord in every work we do, not just in religious work.
The analogy of a hypocrite being like a ship in a storm indicates he is in grave mortal danger.
33:5 The mind of a fool moves in circles. His reasoning reveals a state of confusion.
God is the author of holy days, seasons, and feasts. This is clear both in the OT and in the NT: for example, people gathered in Jerusalem for Pentecost (Acts 2:1, 5). Human beings are created to experience some days as sanctified, some as ordinary, as we live within time (v. 9). The fact that some feast days became abused in the Old Covenant does not mean we are not to have them in the New. The Church as the new Israel (Gal 6:16) has the authority of Christ to mark her holy days and seasons.
The same theme found in this pivotal verse is found throughout the OT (Isaiah 45:9; 64:7; Jeremiah 18:6). Complete submission to the will of our Creator is the highest of virtues.
33:14-15 The cross of Christ is the preeminent example of good coming out of evil.
These verses are autobiographical. The author speaks of himself as coming on duty following the other OT authors. But after great effort, laboring like a grape-picker, he gathered many sayings of wisdom into one large collection. With God's blessing, his word became the greatest of his time. He takes pleasure that his labor has not been for himself alone, but for all who seek instruction.
To enslave another human being is fundamentally wrong. However, in ancient societies it was common, as it still is in many parts of the world. In Israel's history, slave-owners were taught to treat their slaves humanely, as these verses clearly show. In fact, the faithful servant was to be treated as a brother.
The foolish person gives himself to false hopes and dreams.
From ancient times the Most High God has revealed Himself in dreams and visions to godly people whose hearts were prepared to receive them.
One who has had an easy, limited, untested life knows little. By contrast, he who has traveled about is broadened by that experience, tested by the dangers of intensive travel. He has given himself to serve others in or by his travels, and will have more understanding and wisdom about life than he can put into words.
34:15-17  Once we have learned to fear the Lord and hope in Him, then we can love Him with our whole being. We find Him our constant support and protection. He lifts up our souls, fills our countenance with light, and brings healing to our afflictions.
When money we donate is ill-gotten gain, the Most High is not pleased.
This litany of questions highlights the continuous struggle between good and evil. The person who fasts and then commits the same sins all over again (v. 26) profits nothing.
Ben Sirach declares that he who keeps the law does the equivalent to making a peace offering. Faithfulness to God's revelation requires obedience. Jesus said, “If you love Me, keep My commandments” (Jn 14:15).
The traditional meaning of alms is “charity” or “a gift of anything needed by the poor.” Almsgiving is equivalent to a praise offering. The Scriptures and the church fathers place a striking emphasis on almsgiving.
St. Paul writes, “God loves a cheerful giver” (2Co 9:7). The tithe is the giving of ten percent of our income. Is the tithe only for Israel? St. Irenaeus wrote in the second century, “Thus the Jews consecrated tithes of their goods to Him, but those who have received liberty [in Christ] set aside all their possessions for the Lord’s purposes.” In other words, giving ten percent is minimal. St. John Chrysostom wrote in the fourth century, “If there was a danger then [under the Old Covenant] in omitting tithes, think how great it must be now!”
If we give our tithe, the Lord has promised to repay us sevenfold. How? Perhaps by making us more wise in the management of our money. Or He may prosper our work so that we have even more to give. Or both! Even better, He always enriches the generous giver with joy and many spiritual blessings.
Simply being poor does not mean that one will receive God's special compassion, for many are poor due to laziness or unwillingness to work. But for those who have been wronged and thus are poor, God hears their prayers and will compensate for their suffering, either in this life or the next. God is on the side of those who suffer through no fault of their own: the orphan, the widow, the oppressed.
The devout, humble man knows God has heard his prayer because he is comforted by the Lord.
Ben Sirach assures us the Lord will not delay in answering our prayers. The first half of ch. 36 is a prayer for Israel.
35:24 Through Christ's affliction on the Cross, we receive mercy.
Ben Sirach prays for mercy for us (Israel); that all the nations (the Gentiles) would fear Him; and that God would let them see Your power. Rom 9:24–10:4 is one of many biblical passages that explain how God has answered this prayer. Augustine said of v. 4, “We see this prophecy in the form of a wish and prayer fulfilled through Jesus Christ.”
Here oath refers to the covenant God made with Abraham (Gn 17:21).
Though God has shown Himself as a “consuming fire” in history, His preference is to redeem and save His enemies, for He is a God of mercy and grace.
36:10 The tribes of Jacob include all those of the true Israel, in both the Old and New Covenants (see Rom 2:26–29).
36:13 The new Zion, the Church, holds a celebration every Sunday, the Divine Liturgy. In it, the Body and Blood of Christ, the full expression of all virtue, is given to the people of God.
Though this prayer was for Israel, it was also for all on earth. Thus, the Church has become the New Jerusalem, the new Zion, the new nation in which the OT prophecies are fulfilled (see Rom 3:29–31; 4:13–16; Gal 4:21–31; all of Hebrews but especially 12:18–29; 1Pt 2:4–10; Rev 21:9–27).
Women of ancient times often had little or no choice concerning the man they would accept to marry. As with Isaac and Rebekah, for example (Gn 24:1–67), marriages were often arranged by parents or someone in authority. It is worth noting, however, that some sociological studies indicate there was not the unhappiness arising from this practice that we moderns are prone to imagine, and certainly not the divorce rate! The Scriptures laud a woman who is beautiful, both outwardly (v. 22) and inwardly (v. 23).
See Pr 31:10–30.
37:1-6  Avoid one who is a friend in name only. To have trusted a friend who becomes an enemy is a great grief.
Though there is safety in many counselors, be sure to know beforehand what the agenda is.
If we do not heed God's wisdom, we will not experience His grace.
37:29-31  Gluttony is not only sinful, it is dangerous to one's health.
It is godly to honor the hard-working physician, who is seen in Scripture as a gift from God. Since God is the true Healer, it is He that gives the physician healing skills. Kings kept physicians in their retinue and often gave them lavish gifts when they had successfully treated the king or his family.
The ancients understood the healing power of plants and minerals, all created by the Lord.
This is a reference to Ex 15:23–25.
God gives healing skills to druggists and pharmacists for the benefit of all mankind.
There is a direct link from prayer, repentance of sin, and worship to healing.
How blessed are those whose physician is a faithful, praying Christian.
Proper mourning for the dead is essential to the healing of our grief. An honorable burial for the departed was considered a great work of mercy in the ancient Church. Each parish had its volunteers who washed and dressed the body, making preparation for burial. We are warned not to allow our hearts to be grief-stricken (v. 18) so grief overpowers us, for some have even died from grief. Thus, St. Paul says we grieve, but not as those “who have no hope” (1Th 4:13).
38:24 From here to the close of the chapter, Ben Sirach reveals the wisdom of the scribe (v. 24), the plowman (v. 25, 26), the craftsman (v. 27), the blacksmith (v. 28), the potter (vv. 29, 30), and other laborers who work with their hands (v. 31).
The goad is a cattle prodder.
Those who study the Scriptures are described here. A modern-day equivalent would be the seminarian who learns the Old and New Testaments. The ancients would include the apostles and church fathers.
This sounds like the biography of St. Paul.
Incense has been an important aid to prayer and praise of God from time immemorial. King David wrote, “Let my prayer be set forth before You as incense” (Ps 140:2). The prophet Malachi predicted incense would be used in worship and prayer among the Gentile nations (Mal 1:11). This continues to be fulfilled in the Church. One of the gifts brought to the baby Jesus by the wise men was frankincense.
39:15-16 As fallen humans, many tend to see things as bad. God sees them as good. It is our unbelief that clouds our outlook.
The waters in a heap refers to the oceans being separated from the land at creation (Gn 1:9, 10).
Nothing takes the all-knowing God by surprise!
Those who by virtue of God's work are holy see all of God's ways and works as good.
The basic needs of human beings are ever the same.
Here, Ben Sirach inserts a brief autobiographical comment. God's great work is redemption and salvation, which He accomplishes through His Eternal Son.
Knowing the heavy yoke we bear, Jesus promised, “My yoke is easy” (see Mt 11:28–30). St. Paul called the heavenly Jerusalem “the mother of us all” (Gal 4:26).
This passage contains a dialectic demonstrating that in the midst of surrounding evil, deeds and attitudes of the righteous shine and produce grace and blessing (v. 17).
Almsgiving can be translated “merciful giving.” One who gives alms should make it a lifetime habit. Almsgiving includes deeds of love and kindness, not just monetary gifts.
The reverential awe or fear of the Lord brings a paradise of blessing in this life as well as in the life to come.
The coming of Christ changed everything. Ben Sirach rightly calls death a bitter memory. Jesus said, “I am the resurrection and the life. He who believes in Me, though he may die, he shall live” (Jn 11:25).
Tragically, the children of the ungodly usually follow their parents' path.
The Wisdom Literature of the OT is replete with admonitions to establish and maintain a good name. Pr 22:1 declares, “A good name is to be chosen more than much wealth.”
From the birth of the synagogues during the Babylonian captivity until the mid-20th century, if one openly sinned in the Jewish community one was called before the assembly to give an account and express repentance. This was practiced in many Christian churches as well.
We cannot always control what we hear. We can absolutely control telling others what we've heard and revealing secrets.
In according with this teaching, St. Paul wrote, “I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ” (Rom 1:16).
There is no shame in making a profit or in the discipline of children to keep order at home while the merchant is away. The reference to the evil servant seems harsh, yet wicked servants if left unpunished could destroy one's home or business (see notes on 33:30–33).
This would seem to refer to a leader in the synagogue who must instruct and arbitrate. The old man judging the young reminds us the “generation gap” has its roots in antiquity.
This passage expresses the universal concerns that any moral father would have for his daughter. It does not contain all of a father's concerns, nor does it reflect the deep affection that good fathers feel for their daughters.
Moth larvae are hatched from eggs laid by moths within the fabric of garments. The analogy is that wickedness comes from within the heart, as Christ taught (Mt 15:19). Ben Sirach had in mind the fall of Eve, thus sin from a woman.
There is a subtle contrast here that can easily be missed. Whereas the churlish baseness of evil male conduct can be vulgar and obscene, the flirtatious seductiveness of a woman can lead to the even more serious sins of fornication or adultery.
Any works done by God begin with His Word. He decrees it and it is done. Though the Greek for “words” here is plural, the Christian knows the Eternal Word (Logos), the Second Person of the Godhead, was and is eternally active in all creation (see Jn 1:1–18).
It is likely St. Paul had this passage in mind when he wrote Rom 11:33–36.
Not even the greatest of saints or angels can declare all the wonders of God that stand firm as a testimony to His glory.
The word abyss means “a bottomless pit” and speaks of the infinite and unfathomed reaches of earth, space, and all creation. The human heart is placed alongside the abyss since it too contains a universe that only the Most High can know and fathom.
The Lord Jesus Christ elaborated on this thought (Mt 12:31–37).
In the Greek this verse is comprised of all nouns except for one preposition: a challenge to translate. It is a unique doxology to the beauty of the earth and heavens.
A similar teaching on the sun appears in Ps 18:5–7.
The rainbow is like a jewel that adorns creation. In Revelation, a rainbow appears “like an emerald” around the throne of God (Rev 4:3).
Note the action words that describe how God relates to His creation: By His command (v. 13); at His appearing and by His will (v. 16); He sprinkles (v. 18); He pours (v. 19); He consumes (v. 21); by His reasoning (v. 23); by His Word (v. 26). Natural phenomena do not “just happen.”
St. Paul makes a similar statement (Col 1:17). By the Living Word all things were created, and in Him all things hold together, or consist.
This verse declares the great truth of God's supreme omnipresence. He permeates everything, but also transcends everything. He is in everything but is above everything. Literally, He is the all is “The all is He.”
We have a choice: Either we give glory to God for all His works, or we shrink back in unbelief. King David wrote, “The fool said in his heart, ‘There is no God’” (Ps 52:1).
44:1  This begins a section of Sirach that continues to the end of ch. 50, giving honor to the famous men of the OT in the same spirit as Heb 11.
Noah by his righteous life became a propitiation for the whole human race. That is, a special mercy was given by God in the form of a covenant: He would never again destroy the human race by a flood.
This oath by God to bless the seed of Abraham is fulfilled in and through the Church. The Church embraces all nations and fulfills the role of ancient Israel in the prophecies of the OT (see note on 36:17; Mt 23:38; Lk 21:20–24). The River is the Euphrates.
Moses, of blessed memory, is honored among the saints. He brings great encouragement to all believers because on many occasions he stumbled (Ex 4:13–15; 5:22, 23; Nm 20:11, 12 are but a few instances), yet he repented, persevered, and followed God. The Lord honored him (v. 3) and sanctified him (v. 4).
Aaron was vested with an adornment of glory (v. 7). Similarly, the Christian priesthood in the Church is vested. Why? To perpetuate the law? Not at all, for the Levitical priesthood has passed away. Rather, the priest is vested because he represents the King of kings. He is to be the image of Christ, no longer common but ordained (Jn 15:16).
Only if one understands the Church as set forth by the apostles can these verses be completely fulfilled. Thus, the seed of Aaron continues in the priesthood of the Church in the same way that all true believers are the seed of Abraham.
This passage has encouraged the hearts of God's servants down through the centuries. Most have served with low pay and many died in poverty. But the eternal promise is that the Lord Himself will be their true inheritance.
It is probable that Ben Sirach is speaking of the incident in Ex 17:8–13 when Joshua defeated the Amalekites. Joshua prevailed in battle as long as Moses lifted up his hands, holding the rod of God in them. Due to Moses' fatigue, it became necessary for Aaron and Hur to support his arms until the battle ended. The name Joshua means savior.
These enemies were idol-worshipping tribes that engaged in evil practices such as the sacrifice of babies. They were worthy of God's judgment. Thus, Joshua led the wars for the Lord.
The sun being held back refers to the miracle of the sun moving from east to west being interrupted in a supernatural manner until the battle led by Joshua could be fought to a successful conclusion (see Jos 10:12, 13).
For the battle at the descent of Beth Horon, see Jos 10:11.
Such passages as this and 49:10 make it clear that Sirach reflects a widely held ancient belief in the resurrection. Since 49:10 is in the section on Ezekiel, it would seem clear Ben Sirach had in mind Ezk 37:1–14, which predicts the resurrection of the faithful of Israel.
The Christian concept of death is that the body will sleep until the resurrection, but the spirit, or the soul, is present with the Lord.
Blessed Augustine, in an article entitled “Why We Repudiate Arts of Divination,” refers to Samuel speaking to Saul through the medium of En Dor (1Kg 28:3–19). He calls such things as consulting mediums “delusions,” “pernicious error,” and “fornication of the soul.”
The prophet Nathan reproved King David for his adultery with Bathsheba and for having her husband killed in battle (2Kg 12:1–15).
This is called both the thank offering and peace offering described in Lv 3. The fat of the offering was to be burned on the altar; the breast and right shoulder of the lamb or goat were to be given to the priest.
See 1Kg 18:2 for this occasion when the women sang this refrain after the defeat of the Philistines, when David killed Goliath.
Undoubtedly these practices of David are what made him a man “after His (God's) own heart” (1Kg 13:13).
The renowned musical and liturgical abilities of David are clearly seen here.
47:11 The covenant God made with David (2Kg 7:16) is that He would establish the throne of David forever. This promise is fulfilled in our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the seed of David according to the flesh and the eternal King of heaven.
This sanctuary or temple, which had been rebuilt and refurbished by King Herod, was standing at the time of Christ. But Jesus predicted it would be utterly destroyed and not one stone would be left upon another (Mt 24:2). This prophecy was fulfilled by the Roman invaders in AD 70. The sanctuary that will last forever, and which replaces the former one, is the New Jerusalem, the Church of the Living God (see also Mt 23:38, 39).
After being given great wisdom, fame, and wealth by God, Solomon compromised and brought disgrace (v. 20) on it all by his enslavement to sexual passions. But God, in His great mercy, did not abandon (v. 22) David's lineage. Ultimately, Christ was born of the seed of David (v. 22).
Due to his passions, and in direct disobedience to God, Solomon took many foreign wives who worshipped idols. Thus he planted seeds of rebellion and disobedience in his son Rehoboam. The same is true of his former-servant-turned-enemy, Jeroboam. Their disobedience to God caused the division of the Hebrew kingdom (see 3Kg 11:1–13:42). Sometimes the Northern Kingdom of Israel, made up of ten tribes, is also called Ephraim. The Southern Kingdom was called Judah and included the tribe of Benjamin. Jeroboam led Israel into great sin through the worship of idols (see 3Kg 12:46–54). The result of this evil was the total ruin of the ten tribes of the northern kingdom. These people were never heard from again, and became known as the ten lost tribes of Israel.
Elijah was a great prophet, a powerful man of faith and prayer. His great fault was his fear of the wicked Jezebel—most remarkable since he had been so fearless with her evil husband, King Ahab (see 3Kg 18:1–19:10).
This raising of the dead refers to the son of the widow of Zarephath (see 3Kg 17:1–24). Note in that passage Elijah stretched himself upon the child three times, crying out to the Most High for the child's life to be restored. Orthodox Christians see in this a foreshadowing of prayer to the Holy Trinity: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.
Apparently a reference to King Ahaziah (see 4Kg 1:2–17).
The kings anointed by Elijah were Hazael and Jehu (see 3Kg 19:15, 16). The only prophet anointed by Elijah who is mentioned by name is Elisha. But since there were at least 100 prophets who had been protected by Obadiah from the massacre carried out by Jezebel, it can be assumed that Elijah anointed several or all of them (see 3Kg 18:3, 4).
Ben Sirach is saying that since Elijah did not die but was caught up into heaven by a whirlwind, then all who fell asleep in the love of God since Elijah's time will yet live. As Christians, we know our resurrection is possible only because of Christ, who rose from the dead.
Elijah was covered by the whirlwind: “Was covered by” also means “was enshrouded by,” and thus could be translated “disappeared in.”
Elisha's dead body prophesied in the sense that it worked the miracle of a dead man being restored to life when he was hastily placed in the tomb on Elisha's bones (see 4Kg 13:21). The Bible teaches there is power in holy relics.
In addition to cisterns, Hezekiah had a tunnel constructed through hard rock to allow the water of the Gihon spring to flow into the pool of Siloam. Archeologists have discovered Hebrew words carved in the wall of the tunnel, celebrating its completion in the time of Hezekiah's reign as king (see 2Ch 32:2–4).
Rabshakeh (v. 18) was an Assyrian title, probably meaning “chief of staff” or “governor.” Sennacharib, (v. 18) king of the Assyrians (v. 21), was encamped at Lachish and sent the insolent Rabshakeh to demand that Hezekiah surrender the city of Jerusalem to him. Hezekiah turned to the Lord in repentance and sent for guidance from Isaiah. They were rescued from Sennacharib, who ultimately died (see 4Kg 18:13–19:37). The angel (v. 21) destroyed 185,000 of Sennacharib's soldiers (see 4Kg 19:35).
Isaiah's prophecies concerning the coming of Messiah and the rise of the Church are more precise than those of any other prophet of the OT.
The sad prophecies of Jeremiah were a great burden to him. On one occasion he determined not to speak them, but could not hold them back (Jer 20:9). His prophecies about the destruction and burning of Jerusalem were completely fulfilled (see Jer 38:14–39:10; 52:12, 13; 4Kg 25:1–21).
In spite of the hardships and sorrows of living with his people during the Babylonian captivity, Ezekiel had visions of great glory to come and the restoration of the people of Israel to their land. Verse 9 likely refers to Ezek 38:22, which prophesies God pouring out wrath upon the attackers of a restored Israel. God will do good to those who walk in the right paths.
Enoch's being taken up from the earth by God certainly plants the seed of the doctrine of the resurrection. One could argue that Joseph's concern for the removal of his bones from Egypt (v. 15) to the Promised Land connotes a hope for a future resurrection.
Simon II was high priest in about 220–196 BC and would have been known to Ben Sirach.
Simon supervised major renovations to the temple and the increase in height of the security wall surrounding it. Other important projects, such as building a huge water cistern and strengthening the city of Jerusalem against siege, were the products of his leadership.
This refers to processions around the temple by the people during high holy feasts. The same is practiced in the Orthodox Church to this day. Coming from behind the veil refers to the high priest coming out of the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement.
50:15 The Greek word for King of all is found nowhere else in the LXX.
This concludes the description of the Day of Atonement service, which points to Simon's strong liturgical skills and the beauty of this service in the temple. As this account was obviously written by one who observed this service in person, we conclude that the author was a personal acquaintance of Simon. This would also explain why so much space in the book is devoted to a high priest who did not hold the same rank and prestige in Hebrew history as the famous men mentioned in chs. 44–49.
This benediction beautifully expresses the mercy of God and the gladness of heart He gives us. Finally we see hope for redemption (v. 24). The word redeem means “to bring forth a ransom” or “to release on payment of a ransom.” This age-old Jewish hope is accomplished through the life, death, and Resurrection of Jesus Christ (see Eph 1:7–14; Rom 8:22, 23).
The mountain is a district in the Edomite Mountains on the east side of the Jordan, beginning slightly north of and running southward parallel to the Dead Sea. The three peoples mentioned—the Samaritans, the Philistines, and those in Shechem—were ancient enemies of Israel. The Samaritans were probably called not a nation (v. 25) because they were a mixture of peoples brought in by the Assyrians. They were called a foolish people (v. 26) because they were primarily idol-worshippers. They have a temple on Mt. Gerizim until this day. Shechem, modern Nablus, was the small town where Jesus encountered the woman at the well known to us as St. Photini (see Jn 4:1–43).
This is a brief biographical reference to the author of the Wisdom of Ben Sirach; Jesus, son of Sirach, son of Eleazar of Jerusalem. These words were added by the grandson of Jesus, the translator of Sirach. (See the Prologue for additional comments of the translator.)
This begins two closing psalms: (1) a prayer of thanks (vv. 1–12); (2) a poem expressing the author's love of Wisdom (vv. 13–30).
Apparently the unclean and unrighteous tongue refers to someone who lied about Ben Sirach to the king, nearly causing his death. Thus, this prayer is largely devoted to thanking God for saving him.
The ancient Church saw the Father of my Lord as God the Father, and my Lord as Jesus Christ. Similarly, the Holy Spirit inspired King David to write, “The Lord said to my Lord, ‘Sit at My right hand, / Until I make Your enemies the footstool of Your feet’” (Ps 109:1). In quoting this the apostle Peter declared “my Lord” referred to Christ (Acts 2:34, 35).
From blossoms to ripening grapes indicates that Ben Sirach's ardent search for wisdom began early in his youth and continued to the time of this writing, when he was mature in age.
Though uncreated wisdom is seen by the Church Fathers as the preincarnate Son of God, the Logos, nevertheless wisdom exists as a created attribute of man as well as a gift from God. Thus, Ben Sirach prayed for and received the gift of wisdom.
51:21 When one is stirred to search for God and His good gifts with a sincere heart, one will never be disappointed.
Wisdom is near to us because Christ is near to us.
1:1 “But the word came to Hosea as a teacher of God, softly speaking to the disobedient and making them return through what he says and does” (Theoph).
A wife of fornication is a woman given to prostitution. It also suggests Gomer was one of Baal's worshippers. Likely Hosea's wife was a young Israelite woman who before marriage was involved in the Canaanite rites of initiation prescribed for future brides, intended to ensure their fertility. “From these people God will build the Church, which will be made holy through its union with the Son of God, as this woman was made holy by her union with the prophet” (Iren). The unbelieving wife is made holy by her believing husband (1Co 7:14).
Jezreel means “God sows” (judgment), and here it designates the place (today the Arab village of Zerin) where King Jehu of Israel killed Queen Jezebel along with King Ahab's royal house (4Kg 9: 10).
Lo-Ruhamah means “Unpitied” or “No Mercy.”
1:9  Lo-Ammi means “Not My People.”
They shall come up out of the land: They will live the life of the saints as well, for great shall be the day of Jezreel. Indeed, great is the day of Christ, when He will raise to life all the dead.
This prophetic saying was probably issued in the years following the Syro-Ephraimite war of 733 BC, during which the two Israelite kingdoms were in a state of enmity.
Strip her naked: An act of humiliation preceding capital punishment of an adulteress (Ezk 16:39, 40; Lv 20:10; Dt 22:22). Perhaps this means Israel would experience humiliation during the Assyrian exile, beginning in 722 BC.
2:5-7  I will go after my lovers refers in a historical setting to the Israelites' frequent forays into idolatry.
Baalim refers to various manifestations of the god Baal rather than to many deities named Baal. Days of Baalim points to the festivals listed in v. 11. Originally consecrated to God, these festivals became tainted by Baalism. Similarly, today's world secularizes Christmas and Easter as best it can.
I will lead her astray: “Having received the light of the knowledge of God in mind and heart . . . she is no longer able to find her old path” (CyrAl).
“How great is God's mercy! A prostitute fornicates with many lovers, and because of her offense is handed over to the beasts. After she returns to her husband, she is said not at all to be reconciled to him but rather to be betrothed. Now notice the difference between God's union and that of men. When a man marries, he turns a virgin into a woman—that is, a non-virgin. But when God joins with prostitutes, He changes them into virgins” (Jerome).
Chapter 3, written in autobiographical style, should not be read as another version of ch. 1, a biography, or as referring to Hosea's second marriage to a woman other than Gomer. Instead, ch. 3 describes events which occurred after the facts of ch. 1. “Again means that he [Hosea] has previously loved a whore, who now is an adulteress” (Jerome). Hosea is an icon of God's unconditional love. The Lord loves the children of Israel in spite of their constant acts of idolatry.
Hosea had to pay to redeem his wife for himself. Likewise, in order to redeem sinful humanity, Christ had to pay with His own precious life.
The object of this seeking is twofold: the Lord their God and David their king, showing this text to be a messianic prophecy. At some time Israel, once rejected, “will be called, and by faith she will return and know the God of all and David along with Him, that is, the One who is from the seed of David, Christ according to flesh, the Lord and the King of all” (CyrAl).
The second part of Hosea's book (chs. 4–11) consists of prophetic sayings and begins with an assessment of the moral status of northern Israelite society as a whole.
One says that Israel will be weak not forever but for days. For it has been reserved for her a time of salvation and a return to faith” (CyrAl). See also Rom 10:1; 11:26, 27.
They used to sacrifice goats for sin; for this reason the sacrifice was called sin. . . .

They eat the sins of My people means they (the priests) eat the offerings brought for sins” (CyrAl).
“Seemingly he calls ways the walking in works and counsels the faults from outrageous thoughts” (CyrAl).
I will be your instructor: The accent falls here on correction or instruction rather than on punishment. “I am your master, or rather instructor, who wishes to correct, rather than to punish; to save, rather than to lose” (Jerome).
Strange children, he says, are those who, from the womb, and from their swaddling-clothes, were dedicated to the worship of idols, perhaps when the fathers offered the thanksgiving and sacrifices for births to the demons. Therefore, ‘strange children’ are the ones who are not in God. Or, according to another interpretation, the ones from the foreign wives” (CyrAl; see Dt 7:3, 4).
5:10 The princes of Judah, the military leaders, are guilty of moving the boundaries. This may be an allusion to the Judean advance into the Benjamite territory in 733 BC. But Judah's princes do not stop at Benjamin; they begin to pluck portions out of the Ephraimite territory, which never belonged to the Southern Kingdom. This wrongdoing is compared with the crime of those who move the boundary markers (Dt 19:14; 27:17; Pr 22:30).
“By My place we have to understand God's place, His splendor and majesty” (Jerome).
“These may refer to those among the Hebrews who afterward came to believe in Christ. In such a thirst and long captivity they will seek the face [5:15], namely, the Son” (Theoph).
The Church understands this text as a messianic prophecy regarding Christ’s Resurrection: two days refers to the time the body of Jesus lay in the tomb; the third day points to His glorious Resurrection, promising we shall rise with Him. St. Paul writes that Jesus “rose again the third day according to the Scriptures” (1Co 15:4), most likely alluding to this passage from Hosea.
Among the Church's early writers, Tertullian (ca. AD 160–225) is the first to relate this passage to the Resurrection of Jesus, and more precisely to the myrrhbearing women who went at daybreak (Lk 24:1) to their Master's tomb to anoint His body.
God does not reject worship as a whole, but He criticizes the way Israel perceives it. Instead of a means to enter into a relationship with God and to foster community ties, the worship gradually becomes a goal in itself (Am 5:21ff.; Mic 6:6ff.). This applies also to Orthodox people who see the liturgy as “boring.”
“The kingdom of the ten tribes has become like any other nation because they went away from the Lord. And he [Ephraim] is like a bread beneath the ashes that is not turned, that is, he does not repent” (Jerome).
Why was Ephraim compared with a dove and not with other birds? The other birds hurry to protect their offspring even at the risk of life. And when they see a bird of prey, snake, raven or crow approaching their nest, they . . . attack with their beak, and wound with their claws, and with a crying voice show the parent's suffering. Only the dove does not grieve for or miss [its] robbed offspring. Ephraim is rightly compared with this bird because he does not suffer for his devastated people but is indifferent to their salvation” (Jerome).
8:1-14  Here God is addressing Hosea immediately after the conclusion of the Syro-Ephraimite war (733 BC). He charges Ephraim (vv. 10, 11) with unfaithfulness. Idolatry, political plots, and lack of trust in Him with respect to foreign relations—all these make the inhabitants of Samaria (vv. 5, 6) consider God's instructions a strange thing. For this reason, His punishment is near: Israel, the worthless vessel (v. 8), will be brought into captivity. Judah will experience the same fate because of her arrogant attitude toward God.
A multitude of statutes: This saying is one of the earliest evidences that by the eighth century BC the Torah (“instruction” or “law”; Ex 24:12; 34:1) was circulated, at least partially, in a written form.
“Having collected the fruit of the vine into the wine vats, they offered the firstlings as a libation to the demons, and not to the God who gave them. They also offered loaves of bread as first fruits of the harvest—except that the sacrifice will become for them defiled and impure, he says, and the offerings will be considered as mourning bread (that is, disgusting, impure and odious). For what reason? For the law considered unclean anyone who approached a dead body either by blood relationship or rather by the very touching of the body. . . . Therefore the mourning bread is that bread which was at hand as food for those who were mourning for the dead; for those who strive to avoid contamination with a dead body it is considered terrible even to taste this bread” (CyrAl).
“Having good shoots and fruit-bearing branches, she [Israel] produced many clusters, and the abundance of the grapes equaled the great number of the branches. But she who before was of such a kind offended God afterward, turning the abundance of the fruits into a great number of offenses. The more people she had, the more altars she built, and she overmatched the abundance of the land by the number of idols” (Jerome).
They ate the fruit of deception, namely, they had a useless and senseless hope. For the true fruit is the one that can save and help, the love toward God and the glory of righteousness. On the contrary, the false fruit would reasonably be considered impiety, for in the end it altogether descends to what is abominable” (CyrAl).
The New Testament application of this passage in Mt 2:15 concerns the return of Jesus, Mary, and Joseph from Egypt. Matthew did not use the Septuagint version (his children), but rather a Hebrew manuscript which had the singular “my son.”
11:3-4  “I bound the feet of Ephraim, that is, the whole Israel . . . although he was awkward. God Himself declares why this is so: ‘I will take them in My arms.’ This image is from child raising. Those who take infants in their arms are those who bind their feet, bringing their feet together. For it is necessary, I think, that the thighs and knees of anyone who sits down should be drawn together. And in fact this is so. ‘I bound the feet’ as, for instance, it was written about Abraham, who bound his son Isaac when he thought to bring him as a sacrifice to God. One must note that the Hebrew version and other versions do not have ‘I bound the feet’ but rather ‘I became as one who nourishes Ephraim’” (CyrAl).
Here, as in numerous other places in Scripture, God speaks as though He were a man. He condescends to communicate in our terms. In this dilemma, it is the infinite, overwhelming love of God that triumphs. His heart turned against His just decision to punish the apostate people (10:8, 14, 15).
They wept and entreated Me: The only choice Israel has is to beg God for mercy.
“Moreover the Lord liberated everyone, and redeemed them through the suffering of the Cross and the shedding of His blood, when His soul descended into Hades, and He did not experience corruption to His flesh; and He speaks of the death itself as well as Hades: ‘I will be your death, O Death!’ For that reason I have died so that you may die through My death. ‘I will be your sting, O Hades’ for you devoured all with your throat” (Jerome).
“Become rich in supplies of goods, promise to bring to Him the gifts of the lips, the thank-offering songs and confession. For such things as these are the fruits of the tongue” (CyrAl).
Israel's return to the Lord may be compared with the repentance of the prodigal son (Lk 15:11ff.). God responds generously to repentance. In the parable, the father sees the repentant child and runs to meet him. In Israel's case, God also begins the healing as soon as Israel shows the first signs of repentance. If love unconditionally flows from God upon Israel, it means that love is His foremost attribute. Hosea may be considered the spiritual forerunner of John the Evangelist, who gave one of the most beautiful definitions of God when he wrote, “God is love” (1Jn 4:8).
Amos preached repentance during a time of spiritual drought that preceded judgment (Lk 3:1, 2); indeed, Christ's Advent was an earthquake that shook the world (Mt 28:2), and the coming of the Holy Spirit a judgment by fire (vv. 4, 7, 10, 12, 14; 2:2, 5).
These judgments are clearly against God's spiritual enemies: demonic powers, idolatry, false teaching, pride, hypocrisy, etc. Gregory the Great sees Gilead, which means “heap of testimony” (see Gn 31:47, 48; Jos 1:12–18 and note), as showing forth the witness of the faithful; and the saw made of iron as being “the sword of error,” or false teaching, which leads the people astray. “When therefore, we endeavor to instruct these people not to entertain perverse views, we must first admonish them not to seek their own interests. For if the root of pride is cut away the branches of false assertions become withered.”
In the ultimate perversion of good, Judas sold Christ for thirty pieces of silver (Mt 26:15).
The Lord accused the Israelites more severely “and showed that they deserved greater punishment, because they sinned after receiving the honors that he had bestowed on them” (JohnChr).
As a lion will not roar in a forest that has no prey, so the passions will not attack the believer who brings “every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ” (2Co 10:5).
John Chrysostom writes on the question of whether God is the author of evil: “Now evil is a many-faceted thing. . . . There is evil, which is really evil: fornication, adultery, covetousness, and the countless dreadful things, which are worthy of the utmost reproach and punishment. Again there is evil, which rather is not evil but is called so: famine, pestilence, death, disease, and other of a similar nature. . . . These were evils intended to become the sources of good to us, chastening our pride, goading our sloth and leading us on to zeal, making us more attentive.”
“If there are but two legs or a piece of an ear, leap back from him who has wounded you. . . . Do not despair of salvation. . . . The Lord does not wish the death of the sinner, but that he return and live” (BasilG).
“We ought to strive with great care that we may not be that city upon which the rain of the Word of God either does not come at all, or, at least, only late and rarely. Without any doubt, if the dew or rain of the Word of God is provided too late, the fruits of souls will be the same as earthly fruits which do not receive rain” (Caes).
“In their hardness of heart and with their frequent habit of sinning, they are beyond the purgation of this very brief age and the punishment of the present life” (JohnCas).
As both God and Man, Christ, the Anointed One, holds the thunder of His divinity within His humanity. His very breath was created “in the midst of the earth” (Ps 73:12; see Zec 12:1) when He was conceived by the uncreated Spirit in the womb of the Virgin.
“God can do all things, but the virgin who has fallen will not be raised up. . . . Such are evil virgins in the flesh, not in the spirit; foolish virgins, who, having no oil, are shut out by the Bridegroom” (Jerome). Israel is a “fallen virgin” not because she is chaste, but because she has never experienced the joys of marriage; therefore she will be struck down without leaving a legacy. It will be as though she had never existed.
House of Joseph refers to Joseph's two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh (Gn 46:20) and their descendants, who were the main tribes of the Northern Kingdom of Israel. By extension, it refers to all of Israel.
Justice and righteousness are perfectly fulfilled in Christ.
The Sun of Righteousness rises in the morning and transforms (v. 8) the repentant soul from death into life. But on the day of the Lord, those who flee God will be plunged into the very darkness (v. 20) that they love so much (see Jn 3:19–21).
Christ, the upright word Incarnate, was hated for publicly rebuking the scribes and Pharisees in the gates (Mt 21:45, 46; Lk 11:45–12:1; 13:14–17; Jn 7:7; 8:20; see also Pr 9:8).
“For when a man rules his own self—and that counts for more than to govern others—his heart is in the hand of God, and God turns it where He wills. If He turns it to the good, perfect goodness is His. And so let us be in the hand of God that we may seek the good . . . that you may live, and so the Lord God Almighty will be with you” (AmbM).
Those who adhere to the “propriety” of religious practice, but whose hearts are rebellious, will be judged harshly; while those who may not follow the “proper” rules, but who love God as far as they are able, will be accepted by Him.
5:27  Beyond Damascus points to Assyria as the nation that will conquer and exile Israel, bringing about the Lord's judgment. This prophecy was fulfilled in 722 BC (4Kg 17:5, 6).
Basil the Great, quoting this passage, comments that it is shameful when we spend our time running about “searching for anything not demanded by real necessity but calculated to provide a wretched delight and ruinous vainglory.”
Justice was overturned when Pilate, having declared that Christ was innocent, submitted to the anger of the Jews and allowed Him to be crucified (Lk 23:13–25). Chrysostom remarks further that bitterness was hell's response when Christ entered.
Like all true prophets, Amos grieves and intercedes on behalf of his people.
Adamant is a stone of unbreakable substance. Ephraim the Syrian writes that this “stone” is Christ, set in the midst of the people. “The leaders of the people were gathered together against Him and wanted His downfall because His teaching did not please them. But He said, ‘It will crush and destroy whomever it falls upon’ (Mt 21:44), because He had resisted idolatry, among other things.”
Gregory the Great writes on the work of grace in the life of the humble: “What a skilled worker this Spirit is. There is no question of delay in learning what the Spirit teaches us. No sooner does the Spirit touch our minds in regard to anything than we are taught; the Spirit's very touch is teaching. The Spirit changes the human heart in a moment, filling it with light. Suddenly we are no longer what we were; suddenly we are something we never used to be.”
8:8-10 The day of Christ's Crucifixion was indeed a day of mourning (v. 10). The earth quaked (Mt 27:50–53), and the sun was darkened at midday (Mk 15:33). In a more immediate sense, this prophecy may also have been fulfilled on June 15, 763 BC, when a total solar eclipse occurred in Palestine.
8:11  Basil the Great writes that when the people “put to death the bread of life, a hunger for the bread came upon them.”
This prophecy is fulfilled in Christ and His Church. In the Incarnation, He shook the gateway of humanity under the Old Covenant; destroyed demonic powers with the sword of the Spirit; descended into Hades (v. 2); sanctified creation in the river (v. 5) of baptism; made his ascent to the heaven (v. 6); and established His Church on the earth (Acts 1:8, 9; 2:1–11). He restored the faithful remnant (v. 12); brought in the nations (v. 12); and planted His Church among them. Drink wine (v. 14) foreshadows the Eucharist.
At Nativity services in the Church we sing this hymn to the Mother of God, who is typified by the tabernacle: “Fulfilled is the prophecy of him that cried aloud, saying, ‘I will raise up the tabernacle of holy David that is fallen.’ You, O Undefiled, did prefigure His words, through whom the dust of man has been wholly refashioned into a body for God.” Chrysostom writes on the fallen tabernacle of our human nature, “For it was not possible to raise it up otherwise, unless He who fashioned it in the beginning stretched out a hand to it and formed it again from above by the regeneration of water and the Spirit. Behold the awesome and ineffable character of the mystery. He dwells always in this tabernacle, for He put on our flesh, not to put it off again but to have it always with Him. If this were not so, He would not have deemed it worthy of His royal throne.”
This verse points to the Gentile believers, who had been dead in their sins, but now, through the apostles' universal preaching, are called by His name (see Acts 2; 11:26; 15:13–19).
Give heed, O earth: Micah's oracle announces judgment not only for a specific place and time, but for all time and for all people. The physical cities of Samaria and Jerusalem, with their rebellious and sinful inhabitants, are icons of mankind. Some, like those in Jerusalem, practice “right religion” in God's house, but with sinful hearts. Others, like those in Samaria, have forgotten how to worship God and have turned to idols (v. 7) of their own making. Though God's immediate judgment on Samaria and Jerusalem is destruction, His universal judgment is Christ Himself, who will come down (v. 3) in the Incarnation and destroy sin, death, and the devil (see Is 31:4).
Like wax before the fire echoes Ps 67:2, which is used in the Resurrection services in the Orthodox Church.
Samaritans were among the first to repent and receive the gospel (Jn 4:1–42). Therefore, this prophecy is ultimately fulfilled in the Church, Christ's vineyard.
The city embodies all the sins of the people. The images used in worship at Samaria, the wealth gathered in her sanctuaries, are referred to contemptuously as the price of a harlot.
1:10-16 Though this passage is often considered one of the most difficult in the book, some clarity emerges when it is viewed with the understanding that the Old Testament inevitably points to and is fulfilled in Christ and His Church. As God used the Gentiles to strike the Jews in judgment (v. 11), so in the Incarnation He came down to cut off (v. 16) Israel's heritage because of their ungodliness and to save His inheritance: His Bride, the Church.
A universal indictment against those who work evil in the earth against the poor and needy for their own gain. The passage can also be taken as a description of those who persecute Christ (a man) and His Church (his house . . . his inheritance).
ultimately, the evils are the cross, which bent the neck of the proud and powerful like a yoke.
The Jews who provoked the Spirit (v. 7) will lose their inheritance, which will be taken away (v. 4) and given to the Gentiles.
This verse is regarded by scholars as difficult at best and corrupted at worst.
He will say: This rendering in the third person (as found in the LXX) is opposed by the Hebrew text, which consistently reads in the first person (“I will say” or “I said”). The third person form is thought to be the more original.
You who hate good and love evil: The negative form of an idea articulated in Am 5:15, “We hated evil and loved good.’ And restore justice in the gate.”
The closest parallel to this passage is the charge against the shepherds in Ezek 34:2, 3:

“O shepherds of Israel who feed themselves, should not the shepherds feed the sheep? 3 Behold, you drink the milk and clothe yourselves with the wool. You slay the fatlings, but do not feed My sheep.”
Micah is a true prophet of God, as opposed to the false prophets of v. 5. Note that Micah's prophecy against sin under the Law emphasizes the Spirit's judgment and power; while Isaiah's parallel prophecy (see Is 61:1, 2), which is fulfilled in the New Covenant, emphasizes healing and liberty in Christ (Lk 4:17–21).
St. John Chrysostom, in his sermon on Jn 16:21, 22, sees Christ's words echoing those of the Prophets (see also Hos 13:13; Is 13:8; Jer 4:31). He writes, “Now, He was making use of a comparison frequently employed by the Prophets, also, when they compared their sufferings to the excessive pain of birth pangs. What He meant is something like this: ‘Suffering as keen as birth pangs will take possession of you. However, the pain of childbirth becomes a cause of joy.’” Indeed, the daughter of Zion will “give birth” to a new creation when she has been redeemed by Christ (see note at Jn 16:21, 22).
5:6, 7  The remnant of Jacob will be among the nations: This phrase does not necessarily imply the scattering of Israel, but rather a focal point for the gathering of the nations together in Christ, as in 4:1–3 and 4:6, 7.
6:1-5  A covenantal “lawsuit,” filed by the Lord against Israel. Here the prophet functions like an “attorney” in God's lawsuit against His people.
This passage recalls the liturgical themes that run through the services of Great and Holy Week, especially Orthros of Great and Holy Friday (Service of the Twelve Gospels).
The classical definition of true religion: Micah in one verse knits together the basic themes of the books of Amos (righteousness—to do justly), Hosea (steadfast love—to love mercy), and Isaiah (humility and faith—to be ready to walk [or “to walk humbly”] with the Lord your God).
This verse is quoted by Christ in Mt 10:35, 36 and Lk 12:53.
All our sins will be cast into the depths of the sea: The Fathers agree that this phrase foreshadows baptism.
Cyril of Alexandria interprets ch. 1 as a prophecy of the coming of Christ, when the Jews would revile and reject Him and incur the curses mentioned, understood spiritually. But Cyril is optimistic about the full restitution of the Jews, noting the solution found in v. 20—they need only to look up to God in faith.

The book begins in a manner similar to the other prophets, describing the advent of the Word of God to Joel. This is not merely a formula (see Jer 1:2; Ezk 1:3; Hos 1:1), but is God's way of arresting our attention, beckoning us to read the work not merely as literature, but as Holy Scripture. The advent of the word of the Lord to the prophet should lift our minds to Christ, the eternal Word of God.

Joel the son of Pethuel: The prophet's patronymic is included since Joel was a relatively common name (see 1Ch 4:35; 5:4, 8, 12; 6:13, 18, 21; etc.). Furthermore, the meanings of names in the ancient world were considered far more significant than they are today, and the overtones of Joel and Pethuel resonate throughout the text. The meanings of these names are ambiguous, although Jerome understood Joel to mean “God is” or “God is setting out,” and Pethuel to mean “God is opening.”
Both the past and the future are called on to testify to the magnitude and weight of the coming destruction. Not only does this mark out the special nature of the coming onslaught, but it reminds us of the way persons in the past and the future participate in the present.

Scripture memorializes two types of events. On the one hand, the righteous exploits of God working through His saints (e.g., Ps 104) are held up as examples to be followed. On the other hand, there are the mistakes of the people of God and their consequences (e.g. Ps 105). Joel begins with the latter, while finishing with a promise of the former.

Elders . . . all of you inhabiting the land: Not only does the prophet call for the attention of the elders and the general population, but by formulating his petition in this manner, he indicates that his message is to be read by both the spiritual (the elders) and the carnal (the inhabitants of the land). The message of Joel is fitted to each person according to his spiritual fitness and place in his journey towards God, yet all should pay attention.
Caterpillar, grasshopper, locust, red blight: Exactly what creatures these words signify, whether in the Greek or in the Hebrew, we cannot say for certain. While some have suggested the four words describe four kinds of insect, others claim they refer to different stages in the lifecycle of the locust. Both are educated guesses.

On the metaphorical level, the text can be seen as four different waves of assault against the land. While Ephraim of Syria saw this as a reference to four different Mesopotamian kings, subsequent fathers accepted this verse as a prophecy of the four major conquests of Israel: the Babylonians, the Persians, the Greeks, and the Romans (see Dan 2).
Joel addresses the people of Israel as if they were all drunkards. Drunkenness represents the general proclivity of Israel to satisfy their pleasures. The prophet addresses people who are using good things to excess, drinking not to quench their thirst but to become drunk. Christ used this same theme when He warned those who were making merry in His own day (Lk 6:24–26).
1:6, 7 Here the prophet not only begins to describe what is in store for his wayward people, but he phrases this eight-line poem as if it were a dirge to lament the occupation of the land. Joel composes it both to shame Israel and to draw attention to the gravity of the situation.

Lion: The prophet turns from the locust metaphor to that of a lion to describe the conquering enemy, highlighting their powerful inhumanity. The first targets are the grapes and the figs, i.e., the juice and the sweetness of the land, representing the livelihood and wealth of Israel. This is the same manner in which the devil and the passions assault our own spiritual life. When we succumb to the temptations of the flesh, the powers of evil enter into our land and first attack the virtues of our character and our good deeds.
The bride weeps, presumably, for the death of her betrothed. In this same manner the apostles, in the days of Christ's betrayal and death, were like virgins girded with sackcloth, lamenting the death of their bridegroom. Indeed, in our own time, when God judges His People for their sins, we should assume this same demeanor, repenting, being cleansed by our tears, and awaiting the return of Christ our Savior.
Joel 1:9, 10, 13: The meat-offering and the drink-offering (v. 9); grain-offering and drink-offering (v. 13): The grain-offering is of bread, and the drink-offering is of wine. Joel, by reemphasizing the loss of bread and wine in the land, not only recalls the image of agricultural plague but anticipates the future life of the Church. We have before us the image of the Church stripped of the eucharistic sacraments through the disobedience of the community. In this situation, the priests are called to lament the plight of the land and intercede for their wayward people (see 2:17).
By calling the farmers to mourn, Joel not only includes landowners in the national calamity, but also reinforces vv. 9, 13. For just as the priests are to mourn over the people they tend, so the farmer is to weep over his care—his crops. The loss of property is, in the sight of God, a rather insignificant matter. More importantly, the prophet calls us to go beyond and grieve over the destruction of other people, and of the sins which ravage our souls.
They put to shame the delight of the sons of men: The phrase, a Hebraism, literally translates “have shamed their joy.” That is to say that joy, a good thing in and of itself, was being abused and defiled by the Israelites.
For the loss of the sacrificial rite, see note at vv. 9, 10. It would be a mistake to read this as an anticlerical passage, for the prophet neither upbraids the priests nor questions the importance of the priesthood. Rather, Joel calls the spiritual leadership of the land to fulfill their proper role in times of national distress.
See Is 58:4, 5. This is but one more reason for fasting in the life of the Church—to repent of the sins of the community. The leaders and elders of the land are called to change their luxury into sackcloth (v. 8) and to cry out incessantly and fervently to God. Fasting without contrition of heart is nothing.
The threefold woe is the appropriate response in this disaster since the Holy Trinity has been offended. This reminds us as well that the Day of the Lord is not the visitation of Christ alone, but is a judgment that involves the participation of all three Persons.

The day of the Lord could suggest a day either of punishment or of reward. As it turns out, Joel uses the term here and in 2:1, 11 to refer to a day of judgment, but as he turns to the promised salvation of God, the day of the Lord becomes a day of restitution for the people of God (2:31; 3:14, 18).
The prophet interrupts his narrative with a prayer, reminding us that our deliverance from disaster comes not from any other so-called gods, but from the Lord Himself.
1:20  Just as all the beasts look to God to give them their food in due season (Ps 103:27), so they do here, since He will fill them with every good thing by His hand (Ps 103:28).
In this chapter the prophet switches to the future tense. While ch. 1 appears to discuss a plague that has already occurred, ch. 2 warns of yet another imminent plague. Furthermore, Joel moves from agricultural images to military ones. The repentance of the Church is the aim of the passage. Joel depicts the coming disaster in a number of ways, but he emphasizes throughout that God's sovereign plan is ultimately at work.
St. Cyril notes that nothing was more warlike than the fully equipped horse, which “leaps over the earth in such a way that, I suppose, it mimics the clatter of chariots. And they gallop over any mountain crest, and fly down every hill, and produce the crackle of a flame devouring a reed.”
Repentance is an ascetic effort. Joel emphasizes the inner state of the heart, bidding us to rend not our clothes but our hearts. This does not mean that the prophet opposed physical expressions of repentance. The penitent is to fast, weep, and mourn, all physical acts. Everyone in Israel was to gather to call upon the Lord, a physical and liturgical act. These acts, done in the right manner, only assist our repentance. If, in fact, we are justified simply by confessing our sins (1Jn 1:9), how much more so when our repentance is expressed physically, through our bodies and the community?

Interestingly, the prophet never tells us of what Israel was guilty. His emphasis remains on the coming judgment and the need to repent.
Between the porch and the altar: The altar represents the animal sacrifices which were offered to the Lord, while the porch refers to the people. So while the altar became a place of life through the death of the sacrificial animal, the porch was also a place for the dying who sought life. The priests, by placing themselves between the porch and the altar, were to mediate this life to the people. Because of the sacrifice of Christ, the porch and altar have been united. Christ's death brings life to us.
These two verses form the center of the book. The passage summarizes all that has been written so far and introduces the rest of the book, which presents God's promises and explores the eschatological hope of Israel.
Army from the north refers to the Assyrian or Babylonian forces, since locust plagues generally came from the east or southeast. Nevertheless, this northern adversary will be driven by the Lord into a dry land, referring to the deserts from which locust plagues would come. The eastern sea and western sea refer to the Dead Sea and Mediterranean Sea, respectively.
The prophet calls on the land, the beasts of the field, and the children of Zion to rejoice. Just as the prophet distinguishes between two types of people earlier in the book (see note on 1:2, 3), so he does here, as well. The beasts refer to the more carnal Israelites while the children of Zion refer to the spiritual. The land refers to both of these groups.
The prophet now turns his gaze towards the final rest of the people of God, prophesying the coming of Christ and the descent of the Holy Spirit. These eleven verses are fulfilled ultimately in Christ, the sacramental life of the Church, and Pentecost.
The trees bear their fruit: In this verse Joel foreshadows the cross of Christ, the tree which bore the greatest fruit of all. The vine and the fig tree refer to the establishment of the Church (see Rom 11:17–24; Jn 15:1; Lk 13:6–9). Rain, wheat, wine, and oil refer to the food that is right for you, namely the sacraments of Holy Baptism, the Eucharist, and the sealing of the Holy Spirit.
When Peter quotes this verse, he changes after this to “in the last days” (Acts 2:17), one of several modest modifications of the verse. Peter's adaptation of Joel indicates that he understood the passage to be eschatological. Your sons and daughters shall prophesy: The gift of prophecy was to be given to both men and women without distinction (see Acts 21:9).
There shall be proclamation of the good news: The Greek can also be translated “and there shall be heralds of the gospel,” suggesting a prophecy of the missions of the Twelve and the Seventy Apostles, all of whom were appointed by Christ.
In this chapter Joel deplores the mistreatment of Israel and prophesies the coming judgment of God on all the nations. While on one level the prophecy can be read as a promise of the restoration of Israel after the exile, the images go beyond this. Making use of apocalyptic imagery, Joel also refers to the last days of humanity, in which Israel will be spiritually restored and become the source of life for the rest of the nations. Captivity of Judah and Jerusalem: This prophecy refers to the restoration of Judah from the exile in Babylon. The Hebrew version does not mention the exile.
The judgment of all nations can be understood in one or more of three different ways. It may, on the one hand, refer to the attempted siege of Jerusalem during the building of the wall (see 2Ez 4). There is a strong case for this interpretation because of the earlier reference to the restoration from exile. Secondly, the passage may refer to the age of the Church, in which God deals with the persecutors or heretics who attempt to assail her. Thirdly, this may be understood as the final judgment of all people for their sins. In any case, God is dealing with nations who are willingly attacking His people.

The Valley of Jehoshaphat most likely refers to the Kidron Valley, just east of Jerusalem. The triumph of God over His enemies in a valley is echoed in 1 Enoch 53; 54, but here the valley is fiery. This image was retained in the New Testament, where Christ refers to a valley in which trash was burnt, Gehenna (translated “hell”), as a symbol of judgment.
All the coast of Philistia refers to the non-Jewish nations that lived in Galilee and its environs. Under Babylonian and Persian administration, many non-Jewish peoples moved into the northern regions of Israel.
The slave trade was widespread in antiquity. The abduction of Israelites for sale into slavery is attested as late as the Maccabean period (1Mc 3:41; 2Mc 8:11).
This passage is sarcastic in tone. God does not desire the death of a sinner (Ezk 18:23, 32), but knowing that the nations will attack Israel, He goads them on. He is well aware that their attack will come to no avail, but he uses the assault as an opportunity to bring them into judgment.
Spears: The Greek word used here indicates a special kind of spear. It was a barbed pole used to probe for concealed pits into which an advancing soldier might fall.
While the nations turn from farming to warfare, the Lord does the opposite, attending to agriculture, harvesting grain, and treading wine. While the treading of grapes is typically an image of the massacre of enemies, Joel emphasizes the moral aspects of the image. The runoff of the grapes is not simply blood, but the result of the abundance of evil in the nations (see Rev 14:17–20).
4:16-17 The language used by Joel is reminiscent of descriptions of the last days found in the New Testament. In the final judgment the Lord shouts out (1Th 4:16) and establishes an incorruptible Jerusalem (Rev 21:9–27).
In previous verses, God deals with the Mesopotamian army. Here He promises to dispense with Israel's other enemies, Egypt and Edom.
The Lord shall dwell in Zion: Joel closes his book in fitting manner, pointing to the final state in which God will abide among His people. Although this verse was fulfilled in Christ, only in the last days will it be completely fulfilled in the restoration of all Creation.
The Old Testament contains twelve references to men named Obadiah. Of this prophet we know little except that his name means “Servant of the Lord.” The people of Edom, descendants of Jacob's elder twin, Esau (see Gn 25:19–26), often stood in conflict with Israel (see 3Kg 11:14–17). Throughout this short book, Edom and Esau are employed interchangeably as titles for an actual kingdom and as general examples of rebellious humanity.
1:2-4 Edom is made . . . least among the nations, that is, humbled in response to its arrogance of heart and boasting. The clefts of the rocks mentioned in v. 3 are likely an allusion to the Edomite fortress of Sela, also called Teman and Petra, surrounded by cliffs rising up to 2,000 feet in height. Rebellious Edom here typifies the extent of human pride and arrogance with its seemingly boundless scope, yet still brought under the yoke of God.
Obadiah proclaims the destruction of Edom as thorough and complete: whereas thieves steal only what they need or desire, and grape-gatherers leave gleanings behind (see Lv 19:9; 23:22), Edom will be wholly and completely cast down.
Edom's indictment for the slaughter and ungodliness committed against its brother Jacob is primarily centered on their failure to protect Israel from the foreigners who oppressed it, rather than any specific oppression on the part of the Edomites (though they were not entirely innocent in this regard; see v. 13). In failing to protect Israel, Edom incurred the guilt of a good undone, of a lack of fraternal love and responsibility. Perhaps the severity of this crime gives rise to the fact that the judgment against Edom is here pronounced before the full indictment against the nation is proclaimed (it follows in vv. 12–14), rather than after as is usually the case in prophetic literature.
This whole passage is stirringly anticipatory of Jesus' parable of the sheep and goats (Mt 25:31–46) and His proclamation that actions done or left undone to the children of God are done directly to Christ (Mt 25:40, 45). In addition to the historical events undoubtedly referred to in these verses, Edom is also taken up once again as a typification of sinful human attributes: lack of benevolence and pleasure in another's misfortune (v. 12); passivity and the desire for profit from another's loss (v. 13); the hindering of another's escape from undue persecution (v. 14).
Those who would engage in acts such as those described in vv. 12–14 are reminded, as you have done, it shall be done to you—a connection between action and consequence that is maintained by Christ in His model prayer: “Forgive us our debts, / As we forgive our debtors” (Mt 6:12). The day of the Lord, that is, His judgment, will come upon all the nations. Such people may rage in their pride and deceit (the likely meaning of so too shall all the nations drink wine), but eventually they shall have their comeuppance and it will be as if they never existed. The faithful of the Lord, however, shall be delivered and sanctified (v. 17), preserved even through the destruction of those hardened in sin (v. 18).
This passage, which delineates the possessions of the land as they will be found after God's judgment of Edom, may well be an addition to the original prophetic oracle. The Greek text is confusing (as is the text in the Hebrew) as to the precise geographic extent of the lands delineated, but the general thrust of the proclamation is clear: Judah, oppressed by Edom and its allies, will inherit the land of its oppressors at their defeat.
The final proclamation of the prophecy is hopeful both in a political sense, inasmuch as Judah shall exact vengeance on the mountain of Esau, and in a more eschatological sense: the divided people shall again be one (kingdom is in the singular), and rather than existing under the tumultuous leadership of judges or kings, the kingdom shall be the Lord's.
Jonah's calling is set apart from that of the other prophets because he is commanded to preach not to his own people, the Jews, but to the Ninevites. The Book of Jonah points to Christ's Great Commission (Mt 28:19, 20) in four ways: (1) Arise and go to Nineveh parallels Christ's words, “Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations.” (2) Jonah's deliverance from the belly of the whale foreshadows the baptism of which Christ speaks in the same passage: “baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit.” (3) Jonah's preaching to Nineveh foreshadows the apostles' preaching to the nations in obedience to Christ's command: “teaching them to observe all things that I have commanded you.” (4) God's protection of Jonah is echoed in Christ's words, “and lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the age.”
Nineveh was the capital of the Assyrian Empire. See Tb 14:4, 8; 3Mc 6:8.
Hold means literally “belly,” as it is translated in 2:1, 3 (see note at 2:3).
In Jonah's weaknesses we see our own fallen humanity, but as he turns towards God, we begin to see a figure of Christ emerge. To be called by His name, we must first become His servant.
Christ and His disciples had a very similar experience on a boat in a storm (see text and note at Mt 8:24–26).
God's power in nature, combined with Jonah's witness, persuade the sailors to convert to the God of Israel. Later, the Spirit's presence in Jonah will convince the Ninevites to repent and seek salvation. Similarly, God's presence in creation (Rom 1:20), combined with the presence of the Holy Spirit in believers (Acts 2:38–41), draws men to God.
Three days and three nights is a prophetic type of Christ's three-day sojourn in the “heart of the earth [Sheol]” (Mt 12:40; see also Mt 16:4; 1Pt 3:19: “He [Jesus] went and preached to the spirits in prison [Sheol or Gr. Hades]”).
His God . . . my God: The pronouns “his” and “my” emphasize a personal relationship with God.
Belly of Hades: The word translated “belly” can also be used to mean “womb.” Jonah's deliverance—first, out of the “belly of the ship” (1:5, 6) and now from the whale—is a type both of deliverance from death and of spiritual rebirth in the waters of baptism. Just as Jonah's “rebirth” makes possible the repentance and salvation of the Ninevites, so our Lord's Resurrection from the dead makes possible our salvation. In the Old Testament, Hades (Heb. Sheol) was the place of all the dead, a place of shadowy existence, of being cut off from the presence of God. It is used especially in poetic passages as a synonym for death. Hades held all the righteous dead before the crucifixion and Resurrection of Christ.
To the Hebrews, the sea was a frightening place, full of chaos and death. To be cast into the sea was to sink down into Hades. See Ps 87:7, 8.
Jonah's prayer echoes the language and imagery of the Psalms. See especially Ps 17:5, 7; 30:23; 41:8; 49:14; 68:2, 3; 119:1.
According to the message I previously spoke to you: A reminder to Jonah that the message and the mission had not changed.
In an amazing response to Jonah's preaching, the Ninevites show us the true meaning of repentance in the following ways: (1) By the ancient practice of fasting, which implied a total fast. (2) By wearing sackcloth and ashes. Sackcloth was a rough, uncomfortable cloth made of goat or camel hair, used for making grain bags. It was worn as a sign of mourning (see Gn 37:34; Est 4:3; 1Mc 2:14; Mt 11:21). Putting ashes on one's head also symbolized mourning or repentance (see 2Kg 13:19; Is 58:5; Jer 6:26). (3) By prayer. (4) By changing their behavior. True repentance is not just feeling sorry, but involves both the heart and actions.
The king acted after the people. This was a spontaneous, popular movement, not imposed by the crown but inspired by the Holy Spirit.
4:1-7 Once again, Jonah's weakness controls him. Here Jonah's excessive nationalism is expressed in his disappointment at God's mercy. He knew God's character, and anticipated what would happen; yet, like the proud brother in the story of the Prodigal Son (Lk 15:11–32), he hoped to see the Ninevites destroyed. “After all,” he might have said, “why would God want to save foreigners?” The gourd that is damaged by the worm is an icon of this attitude, which is personified in the unbelievers who allow pride and jealousy at the salvation of others to enter their hearts. Many like these will put Christ to death, thus bringing about their own destruction.
The Lord's question to Jonah is rhetorical and a rebuke. The tone of the Greek implies that, in fact, Jonah does not have the right to feel the way he does.
The people of the nations live in spiritual darkness until the light of the gospel is brought to them by God's messengers: the apostles, preachers, and all the faithful, who bear equal responsibility to “make disciples of all nations” (Mt 28:19). And many livestock: The Lord's compassion extends to all He has created, including the animals.
The burden: See Hab 1:1 and note. Nahum's prophecy takes on its deepest meaning when Nineveh is seen as an icon of sinful humanity. The “good tidings” (2:1) of the gospel turn the hearts of men away from idolatry (1:14–2:2); while the fire of the Holy Spirit (2:5) and cleansing in the waters of baptism (2:7–9) destroy demonic powers, purging and renewing the repentant heart.
The Church teaches concerning Holy Confession that unless one is sincerely repentant, the priest's prayer for absolution is meaningless and ineffective.
He threatens the sea and makes it dry: At the Great Blessing of Water on Theophany we sing, “The waters saw You, O God; the waters saw You and were afraid. The Jordan turned back, seeing the fire of the Godhead descending bodily and entering its stream. The Jordan turned back, beholding the Holy Spirit coming down in the form of a dove and flying about You. The Jordan turned back, seeing the Invisible made visible, the Creator made flesh, the Master in the form of a servant. The Jordan turned back and the mountains skipped, looking upon God in the flesh; and the clouds gave voice, marveling at Him who has come, the Light of Light, true God of true God.”
This Old Testament imagery of the earthquake (also see 1Kg 4:5; 3Kg 19:11; Ps 103:32) was fulfilled ultimately at the Crucifixion (Mt 27:51). Clouds symbolize the Holy Spirit (see Ex 13:21, 22; 24:12–18 and notes). A cloud was at Christ's feet at His Transfiguration (Lk 9:34); and He Himself says He will come again in a cloud (Lk 21:27).
The overwhelming flood is fulfilled in baptism.
The good tidings are the gospel of peace, preached by the apostles. See Rom 10:15.
As torches of fire: See Jdg 7:16. The specter of the universal ravager, fire, is invoked to suggest an image of total destruction.
Nineveh was situated on the Tigris and Khosher Rivers, and ancient sources such as Xenophon and Diodorus note that the city was destroyed by flooding. Nineveh worshipped the goddess Ishtar, which would be led away by those who captured the city. This passage also points to the destruction of God's enemies in the waters of baptism.
A picture of the few terrified survivors, looking sadly on the ruins of their once-magnificent city.
The power of the lions, which represent the enemies of God, would be destroyed by the more powerful sword of the Spirit, “for all who take the sword will perish by the sword” (Mt 26:52).
3:4-7 The final judgment against the great harlot, an image of all that is evil, is found in Rev 17–18.
Prophets frequently describe prophetic oracles as “burdens” (Heb. massa I: “burden, carrying” and massa II: “pronouncement, prophecy,” both deriving from a verbal root nasa, “to carry”) from the Lord, possibly because the oracles nearly always spell out heavy judgment from God (Jer 23:33). In contrast, Jesus describes his burden as “light” (Mt 11:30). John says that because of all God's love has done for us, keeping His commandments is not burdensome (1Jn 5:3).
Habakkuk laments the seeming silence of God in response to the rampant injustice and violence in the nation. When God reveals to Habakkuk the horrors in Judean society from His point of view, the prophet is horrified. He cries for God to act, but there is no answer from God. “How long?” is a familiar refrain among the Old Testament prophets (Zec 1:12) and the psalmists (Ps 12:1) when God appears silent, remote, and powerless (Is 63:15). God hates violence on the earth and will judge severely the cruel treatment of humans by other humans (Gn 6:5–7; Ps 10:6; Rev 6:10).
God frequently responds to humans in surprising ways. But God's “answer” to Habakkuk's lament is beyond belief.
The Chaldean standard for judgment is not God's righteous law, but their own purposes of conquest. Despite their evil, God can still use ungodly people and sometimes unwilling servants to accomplish His purposes, as in the cases of Pharaoh, Balaam, and Judas.
Violence will be punished with violence. God will use the Chaldeans to inflict punishment upon the evildoers of Judah. Israel's history showed that God was willing to use other nations to punish Israel. The cycle of Israel's covenant unfaithfulness, punishment, repentance, and subsequent restoration is amply described in Judges and 3 & 4 Kingdoms. What is new and surprising to Habakkuk is the extent of Judah's punishment, for God hints at their exile and utter destruction as a nation. The nation of Judah falsely believed that their fickle repentance (Hos 6:1–3) as well as God's covenant with David and the presence of the temple in Jerusalem would protect them forever (Jer 7:3) from God's unrelenting anger. They were sadly mistaken.
In a moment of self-recognition, even the godless Chaldeans realize they are not a law unto themselves. Although they are the vessels of God's wrath upon Judah, they are still answerable to God for their crimes against humanity.
With surprising boldness, Habakkuk questions God's judgment. Here Habakkuk is like many other biblical prophets: Abraham (Gn 18:23ff.), Moses (Ex 32:11ff.), Jeremiah (20:7), or Amos (7:1ff.). Throughout the Bible, men and women wrestle mightily with God and His will, like Jacob with God at the River Jabbok (Gn 32:22).
Habakkuk complains that the Chaldeans, God's chosen vessels, show absolutely no respect for human dignity.
Despite his questions, Habakkuk displays his stubborn faith in God's ultimate purposes. While waiting for what surely will be God's reprimand, Habakkuk is already marshaling his strength to answer back.
Habakkuk hears and sees God's response (1:1)! God's answer must be written so clearly that its readers can take immediate action.
During tumultuous times, God first commands Habakkuk to wait patiently for His vision to arrive, despite all contrary appearances or delays. Heb 10:37, 38 quotes these verses from Habakkuk to exhort its hearers to endure suffering boldly as we await the fulfillment of God's promises.
Against those Judaizing Christians who wanted to bind the entire Law (particularly circumcision) upon Gentile converts, Paul quotes Habakkuk to show that we are justified by faith, not by the works of the Law (Gal 3:11; Rom 1:17).
Pride is the fountain of all vices. In the following verses, Habakkuk describes the profile of the arrogant individual with whom God is not pleased (2:4). His increasingly ravenous appetites are indeed hellish and deadly.
The Bible warns that the arrogant man will surely be destroyed for his evil.
2:10 Man has a relentless hunger for material gain, which he thinks will insulate him from misfortune; but wealth is false security. This deluded quest for self-sufficiency is described elsewhere as virtual atheism \((\text{Ps 11:4, 5})\). The yield is not security but death and destruction. There is no security other than in God.
While the powerful engage in empire building, the truth of God's ultimate judgment over the proud is known by the smallest and the numerically insignificant. The city built by bloodshed and conquest will ultimately be destroyed. Only the city built with righteousness will endure.
Elsewhere, Hosea describes the fundamental human problem as lack of knowledge of God (Hos 4:1, 6; 6:6). This ignorance unfortunately is self-inflicted because men suppress the truth about God (Rom 1:18–32).
The proud man, for his debauchery and violence, will ultimately drink the wine of God's wrath. The Book of Revelation describes the eschatological judgment upon the “great Babylon” in terms of God giving her to drink of “the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath” (Rev 16:19).
The mystery of God is best honored with silence. When God revealed Himself out of the whirlwind, Job too was found speechless (Job 40:5; 42:3).
St Augustine believes the two living creatures are either the two testaments, the two thieves, or Moses and Elijah talking with Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration.
This verse is quoted in Orthodox hymnology (in the Festal Menaion) on the Entry of the Most Holy Theotokos into the Temple (Nov. 21) and on Christmas.
Augustine believes this verse refers plainly to Jesus.
The revival that occurred in the days of Josiah prefigured the coming of the gospel in Christ, which will culminate on the final Day. Christ was the final sacrifice (v. 7), whose death and Resurrection was, and is, the ultimate judgment against sin in the earth. Indeed, with His stretched-out hand (v. 4), which was pierced through on the Cross, He destroyed idolatry, punished the proud princes of darkness, and cut down the Old Covenant.
St. Jerome writes that this verse was fulfilled when Christ went to Jerusalem (Mk 11:11). He was looking at everything in the temple “as though He were searching with a lantern . . . but He did not find what He wanted. . . . The Savior searched; the Apostles searched; in the temple they found nothing, so they left it.”
All the islands of the nations (v. 11): A prophecy that is fulfilled in the Gentile Church.
3:1-13 Christ gathered the nations together and judged them with the fire (v. 8) of the Holy Spirit. The day of My rising up is a clear prophecy of the Resurrection.
1:14 Zerubbabel: See 2:23 and note.
I will shake heaven and earth: “There have been two remarkable transformations of the human way of life in the course of the world's history. These are called two ‘covenants,’ . . . two ‘shakings of the earth’ [Heb 12:26; Mt 27:51]. The first was the transition from idols to the Law; the second, from the Law to the gospel. The gospel also tells of the third shaking, the change from this present stage of things to what lies unmoved, unshaken, beyond” (GrgNa; see Heb 12:28). Indeed, writes Augustine, Christ moved heaven and earth when He was born of a Virgin; and moved the sea and dry land when He made His name known throughout the whole world.
The choice things of all the nations shall come in: Augustine remarks that this phrase prophesies the building of the Church from those chosen from among the Gentiles. These are Christ's “living stones” (1Pt 2:5), renewed by faith and empowered by grace, building a house far more glorious than any earthly temple.
I will give peace: “Since the restored temple signified the Church, which Christ was to build, those words can mean only ‘I will give peace in that place (the Church) which this place (the rebuilt temple) prefigures.’ . . . Not, however, until the House of the New Testament receives its final consecration will its greater glory in relation to the house of the Old Testament be made perfectly clear” (Aug).
This is Haggai's third discourse, intended to teach that the people must depend on God's grace for life and for holiness, and not on themselves or even on God's temple. God is good to us, says Haggai, not because we deserve it, not even because His presence makes us holy, but simply because He has chosen to bless us. God offers us an opportunity to return to Him through repentance and confession, as is illustrated in the parable of the Prodigal Son (Lk 15:11–32), recounted to us just two weeks prior to the Great Fast of Lent.
Ask the priests concerning the law: “For such is the important function of the priesthood to give answers to those who question them concerning the Law” (Jerome).
The oracle is private, addressed to Zerubbabel only. Note that he is addressed not as a descendant of David but as being from the tribe of Judah, implying that the Davidic kingship is not about to be reestablished. Official, royal acts in the ancient world were authenticated by the use of the monarch's signet. In designating Zerubbabel as his signet, the Lord was, in effect, stating that Zerubbabel would be acting as His vicegerent, charged with carrying out His supreme rule and divine will. On a deeper level, this is a strong messianic prophecy. “When our soul becomes peaceful . . . then she will receive Christ like a signet ring upon her, for she is the image of God. Then she will be according to that image, because heavenly is the heavenly man. And we need to bear the image of the heavenly one, that is, peace. . . . I wish the Lord Jesus may say to you, ‘Put me as a seal upon your arm’ [SS 8:6]. May peace glow in your heart, Christ in your works, and may there be formed in you wisdom and justice and redemption” (AmbM).
Zechariah records an exact date when his visions began. The eighth month is a reference to the Hebrew calendar, while the second year of Darius is a Persian rendering of time. Zechariah is the son of Berechiah and grandson of Addo the prophet. The identity of the prophet and the time of the prophecy are not merely historical references; they are eternally significant because the revelation of God came to Zechariah at this time.

The word of the Lord is an action of God in His graceful self-disclosure. The word of the Lord comes to Zechariah veiled, but when the Messiah comes in Bethlehem of Judea five centuries later, He comes in the flesh. Indeed, the language of the LXX here parallels the language used by John to describe the Incarnation (see Jn 1:1–18). The Word who comes to Zechariah is truly the eternal Son of God, the Word of God, the Second Person of the Holy Trinity who becomes flesh as Jesus Christ.
Zechariah informs the people of God's wrath against them. In the Bible, God is a God of wrath as well as of love. Indeed, the wrath and love of God are not contradictions within Him but are manifestations of His One Being. A God who was not angered over the sins of His creatures would be a God who did not care.

The issue of impassibility is also raised here. For the Church Fathers, God is impassible. This means that the nature of God does not change. God is not controlled by passions, desires, emotions that change unpredictably and radically as in man. God is consistent, pure, and simple. Impassibility, however, does not mean that God does not care. His wrath shows that He cares deeply. God loves His creation perfectly. His love and wrath are not changing, inconsistent, impure, or unreliable. God is not like man. His wrath and love are not like human wrath and love.
The dichotomy between the Old and New Testaments held by the arch-heretic Marcion and by many modern heretics as well is shown to be wrong since the God of the Old and New Testaments is the Holy Trinity. In the Old Testament, God has wrath and love just as He does in the New Testament. Zechariah delivers the same message of repentance later preached by Christ Himself. Repentance is necessary for salvation. There is no right relationship with God without turning from sin to God.
Zechariah warns the people not to become like your fathers. The prophets warned the former generation, calling them to turn away from their evil ways. Sadly, God notes, they did not listen. There is continuity between the message of the previous prophets and the message of Zechariah. This message is the same precisely because it is from the lips of God. The message of the prophets is fulfilled by Jesus Christ (Mt 5:17).
Zechariah asks a question that plagues humanity: Where are your fathers and the prophets? He reminds them of their own mortality by reminding them of the death of their fathers and the prophets. The prophets and their fathers are dead and buried in Mesopotamia because they did not repent. Zechariah is also presenting a contrast between men, who are transient and mortal, and God, who is immortal and transcendent. The previous generation is dead and gone, but God lives and remains the same. As Paul exclaims, “Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever” (Heb 13:8).
God commands His people to receive My words and My ordinances. God does not force His way upon mankind. He honors free will. He wants human obedience, fidelity, and fellowship. He calls people to repentance, but He never circumvents human free will.
The first vision occurs between mid-January and mid-February, 520 BC, three or four months after Zechariah delivers the initial call to repentance.
Zechariah unveils eight visions promising the restoration of the temple. All eight visions follow a pattern: (1) vision, (2) questions, and (3) answer. Eight is the number of re-creation in Holy Scripture. Jewish males were circumcised on the eighth day. Thus, the eight visions indicate a renewal of the covenant with the people of God.
Zechariah sees the vision, then asks the angel talking to him for an interpretation. Even the prophet must have guidance to understand the Word of God. The meaning of God's self-disclosure is not self-evident. This is why the Church, and not any mere individual, is the interpreter of Holy Writ.
The horsemen are angelic hosts, that is, angels in the armies of heaven. These particular angels are scouts. They have traveled around the world and found everything peaceful.
The Angel of the Lord intercedes for the exiled Jews, pleading for mercy toward Jerusalem and Judah. The Angel of the Lord in the Old Testament is often a type of Christ, sometimes referred to as “Christ in the Old Testament.” In this case, we have a type of the first and second Persons of the Godhead. The eternally begotten Son intercedes for the people of God before the eternal Father. Zechariah thus foreshadows the High Priesthood of Christ.

The Jews have been in exile seventy years (586–519 BC). The Lord replies with kind and comforting words, a comfort to the people, no doubt.

The holy angels serve before God, minister to men, and also intercede for men. The Church teaches the faithful to pray to the angels to intercede on behalf of mankind and the people of God. This is one instance in Holy Scripture of the dialogue of prayer occurring between a holy man and the angels.
Zechariah is enjoined to cry out the good sayings and comforting words of God to the people. God is jealous for both Jerusalem and Zion with great jealousy. This is a Semitic construction meaning that God is really jealous. The Greek word rendered “jealous” is the origin of the English word “zeal.” It means “jealous,” but also means “to strive after,” “eagerness,” and “admiration.” “For I, the Lord your God, am a jealous God” (Ex 20:5) is the explanation for God's commandment against idolatry. It may sound strange to modern ears to hear God speak of His holy jealousy, yet what husband would not be jealous in a positive sense for his wife? One would question a husband's love for his wife if he did not care whom she had conjugal relations with, spent time with, gave money to, or heaped devotion upon. Love does not preclude a zeal for the beloved or a protective, positive, proper jealousy. God is jealous for His people against all falsehood that destroys His creation.

The source of God's jealousy here is the foul way the enemies of the Jews treated them in the exile. God was angry with His people and directed these nations against Judah as divine punishment. These enemies, however, went farther than God intended. God uses evil for good and evil men for good purposes, but this does not excuse the evil or ascribe divine authorship to it. The wrath of God against His people does not justify the violence and wickedness of those who are instruments of it.
The vision of the four horns and four craftsmen is a message of hope and comfort for the people of God. Horns symbolize power in the Old Testament. The four horns are the hostile armies that carried first Israel, then Jerusalem and Judah into exile.
The vision of the measuring line pushes the promise of 2:1–4 further. The destructive work of the four horns now being completed, the way is clear for the heavenly surveyors to survey Jerusalem for rebuilding.
God calls the exiled back to the land of promise in a second exodus, promising to bring back His people from across the globe.
Let all flesh fear before the presence of the Lord: This phrase calls to mind the cherubic hymn of the ancient Liturgy of St. James (sometimes sung as a carol in Western Christmas celebrations): “Let all mortal flesh be silent, and stand with fear and trembling, and meditate nothing earthly within itself: For the King of kings and Lord of lords, Christ our God, comes forward to be sacrificed and to be given for food to the faithful; and the bands of angels go before Him with every power and dominion, the many-eyed cherubim and the six-winged seraphim, covering their faces and crying aloud the hymn, Alleluia, Alleluia, Alleluia.” This is the proper approach to the presence of God in our lives, in the liturgy, and most especially during Communion. The prophet speaks of the divine humility and self-emptying of Christ for us. We are likewise called to humble and empty ourselves in His presence for Him.
The Hebrew name Joshua (Greek Jesus; Aramaic Yeshua) means “Savior” or “He who saves.” It is a common name in the Old Testament (Joshua son of Nun, Jesus son of Sirach, Joshua the high priest here, among others) and at the time of Christ. Many cultures around the world today name children Jesus.

The scene opens with the high priest Joshua standing in the presence of God being opposed by the devil. Satan is the accuser who opposes the people of God (see Job 1; 2).
St. Michael the Archangel would not dispute with the devil over the body of Moses, but said, “The Lord rebuke you” (Jude 9). Even more astoundingly, Jesus Christ (the Lord) says, “The Lord rebukes you.” This is fulfilled in the temptation of Christ, when He relies upon the written word of Holy Scripture rather than His own power as Son of God to rebuke Satan and resist temptation (Mt 4:1–11; Mk 1:12, 13; Lk 4:1–13).
Joshua the high priest wears the filthy garments of the Jews of his time, while Jesus Christ the Great High Priest wore them in the Incarnation for all people. Jesus our Lord took the flesh of a servant, wore our filthy rags, bore our sins, and was accused on our behalf before God and by man unjustly.
This promise is for peace, safety, luxury, blessing, and paradise.
The LXX makes the Christological typography of the fourth vision crystal clear. Paul calls Jesus the High Priest who supersedes the high priest in the Jerusalem temple (Heb 3:1, 2; 7:21). The high priest in the Old Testament is also a type of Christ, as is the case here. This includes the Jewish high priest contemporary with Christ and the apostles (Heb 9).
Awakened from a dream by an angel, Zechariah asks him to explain its meaning. Zechariah sees a golden lampstand, a seven-branched candlestick called a menorah. The menorah is a symbol for Israel. It appeared in Solomon's temple and appears still in the Jewish synagogue. St. John the Theologian saw Christ in the midst of seven lampstands (Rev 1:12–20), which are seven churches.
Zechariah also saw two olive trees. He does not know what they mean. The two olive trees may be either Israel and the Church (the old and new Israel) or the Old and New Testaments.
The word of the Lord declares to Zerubbabel through Zechariah, ‘Not by mighty power nor by strength, but by My Spirit,’ says the Lord Almighty. The power of God, not human power, will rebuild the Jerusalem temple (see Ps 126:1). The divine and human synergy is thus affirmed here. Human labor is necessary, for God will not make the temple appear magically. Even so, the human efforts of the attempt to rebuild the temple thirteen years previously failed because the people did not depend on the Holy Spirit. Human efforts alone achieve nothing in the Kingdom of God. Human efforts under the power of God the Holy Spirit yield everything God wills.
Zechariah asks twice more about the olive trees. He is finally told, “These are the two sons of richness who stand beside the Lord of all the earth.” They represent the two powers or functions held by the two men, Zerubbabel (political leadership) and Joshua the high priest (sacerdotal leadership).
The sickle is “scroll” in Hebrew. Both are indicative of judgment. The sickle is huge, of roughly the same dimensions as the tabernacle in the wilderness (see Ex 26:15–28) or the porch of Solomon’s temple (see 3Kg 6:6, 7).
The seventh and third commandments are given here as representative of the first and second tablets of the Law (see Ex 20:1–17). The first tablet of the Law addresses the relationship between God and man; the second tablet speaks of the relationship between man and man. Covenant-breakers are excluded from the covenant. Israel is forewarned not to forsake the covenant with God again. The same judgment that led to the exile seventy years previously awaits them should they fail to be faithful.
This is a vision of a measuring basket or ephah (a measuring bucket for grain) going forth with a woman named lawlessness in it. The angel puts a lead weight in the mouth of the basket to keep her in it. Two angelic women whisk the measure off to Babylon, where it is placed on a prepared foundation. This passage assures the people of God that paganism will be destroyed. Good will overcome evil.
The activity of the Holy Spirit is often accompanied by activities of the wind or breath throughout the Bible.
The concluding vision of four chariots brings to mind the first vision (1:7–17). The four horsemen in the first vision were angelic warriors, since chariots were used by such soldiers in the ancient world.
The heavenly chariots span the four directions of the compass. Peace, rest, and security are given to the Lord's land. This reminds us of God's providential care of us through the activities of the angels.
Zechariah is commanded by the word of the Lord to collect gifts from the rulers and useful men of captivity into the house of Josiah and place these gifts of gold, silver, and crowns at the feet of Joshua the high priest. The promise is made that the crown goes to the one who endured. Others then shall come to rebuild the temple. In the New Testament, crowns are cast at the feet of Jesus Christ the Great High Priest (Rev 4:10). St. Paul promises crowns to believers who endure (1Co 9:24–27).
The word is variously rendered “Dayspring,” “Sunrise,” and “Orient.” The Hebrew reads “Branch.” This verse provides the backdrop for the hymn sung during the wedding service as the bride and groom circle the analogion and at the ordination of a priest as he is led around the altar: The Lord's redemptive work takes place in the family and in the Church.
This date would be mid-November to mid-December, 518 BC.
The authorities ask whether to continue the fasts associated with the fall of Judah and the Babylonian Captivity. The fourth-month fast commemorated the fall of Jerusalem. The seventh-month fast commemorated the murder of Gedaliah. The tenth-month fast commemorated the siege of Jerusalem. The fifth-month fast remembered the burning of the temple.
As He often does in the Scriptures, God replies with a series of rhetorical questions designed to arouse the contemplation of one's inward disposition. During these fasts over the past seventy years of exile, the outward disposition was maintained but the hearts of the people were not devoted to God.
The people failed to live justly in relation to their neighbors. They were disobedient to God's Law and Spirit given in Moses and the prophets. This brought great wrath from God. The result was the exile.

Nowhere is fasting condemned here. In fact, fasting continued as part of Israel's practice. Jesus Christ fasted. The apostles and early Church did, too. Fasting is an integral practice of the Church through the ages. The prophet is not saying, “Your heart is not in it, so stop the fast.” Instead, he calls for repentance so that the heart and life are cleansed by proper fasting. Proper fasting involves the heart in right relationship to God and man. The prophet calls for his hearers to fast rightly, not to stop fasting because they are living wrongly.
These verses spell out the cost of refusing to listen to God: God will not listen to them in their time of need.
Chapters 7 and 8 are a unit representing a single prophecy. The question about fasting raised in 7:1–14 is addressed again in 8:19, showing the literary unity of the two chapters.
Chapter 8 contains ten sections, each beginning with Thus says the Lord Almighty.
8:1-3 God's zeal is a protective love that does not wish to see His people degraded and harmed. God's zeal here is for Jerusalem and the temple mount specifically. God will return to Zion, to the temple, to dwell between the cherubim on the mercy seat of the ark of the covenant in the holy of holies. Jerusalem will once again be what she was intended to be, the True City, the Mountain of the Lord Almighty, the Holy Mountain.
The picture of security includes elderly men and women sitting in the open squares of Jerusalem while children are playing (see Is 65:19, 20).
God will bring the exiles back. They shall be to Me a people and I will be to them a God in truth and in righteousness: This is a type of Christ in the Incarnation, in which God tabernacles with man (Jn 1:14), and of the New Jerusalem in the Eschaton (Rev 21:3).
Zechariah exhorts the people to find strength to rebuild the temple. Jerusalem shall not have economic and political peace until that is accomplished. When man puts his own interests above the spiritual, moral, and liturgical things of God, prosperity is fleeting.
The exile curse is lifted. The postexilic blessing is on the way. Thus, the prophet exhorts, be of good courage!
God demands that His people speak the truth, judge with truth, and avoid false oaths (Mic 6:8). Truth is essential for the people of God in every aspect of life: religious, personal, social, judicial, and political.
8:19-23 The matter of fasting which began this lengthy section (7:1–8:23) is addressed again. Fasting becomes joy, gladness, and feasting. Jerusalem will become a place for universal worship of God among all peoples (Is 2:3). Restored Judah has a mission to be light to the nations. This mission is fulfilled in Christ and now belongs to the Church.
The hem of the Jewish man's garment refers to the prayer shawls worn by Jewish men, which had tassels representing all the commandments of the Law. The Hebrew text has “wings” instead of “hem.” The Orthodox deacon's stole represents angelic wings. When the deacon holds the right half of the stole up, this represents angelic activity. When he lets it down, it represents angelic rest.
The second half of the Book of Zechariah consists of two burdens or oracles. Both burdens are related to the Messianic Age. The first burden (9:1–11:17) focuses on the Passion of Christ, while the second burden (12:1–14:21) focuses on the Second Coming of Christ.
9:1-8 The cities mentioned here are pagan cities of Syria and Philistia falling within the limits of the promised land (Gn 15:18–21; Ex 23:31). This prophecy may point to Alexander's conquests after 333 BC. The destruction of Judah's enemies precedes the Messianic Age. The restoration, Messianic Age, and coming day of the Lord are the themes of chs. 9–14.
The Triumphant Entry of Christ into Jerusalem is foretold here (see Mt 21:1–9; Mk 11:1–10; Lk 19:28–38; Jn 12:12–19). Matthew and John cite v. 9 (Mt 21:5; Jn 12:15). Rather than riding proudly on a warrior's chariot in victory, the Messiah-king rides humbly on a donkey, notes St. Ambrose. Justin Martyr comments, “Jacob predicted that Christ would ride upon an ass [Gn 49:11] and Zechariah confirmed it.” He views the unharnessed colt as signifying the Gentiles and the harnessed donkey as symbolizing the Jews.
9:11 The fathers typically see this verse as a reference to Christ's descent into Hades to set the captives free.
Zechariah condemns the spiritual leaders (shepherds) who fleece the flock of God by false visions and false dreams using Semitic idols. God will punish them as well as deliver Judah.
11:1-17 The Good Shepherd (see Jn 10) is contrasted with the bad shepherds of 10:1–12. He replaces the bad shepherds Himself.
11:12-14 The Good Shepherd is betrayed. Matthew cites this passage in his Gospel (26:15; 27:9). The pieces (or shekels) of silver are the price for a slave (Ex 21:32).
This mourning may also apply to the apostles, the women, the Mother of God, and others who mourned Christ at His crucifixion. It may also refer to repentance as a result of beholding the Crucified, seeing who He is and why He is dying and turning to Him in faith and obedience.
Smite the shepherds and draw out the sheep is “Strike the shepherd and the sheep will be scattered” in the Hebrew text. Jesus cites this verse in Mt 26:31 concerning the falling away of the disciples upon His arrest. As it appears in the LXX, the passage matches vv. 1–8, continuing the warning against the false prophets and the promise of the people's delivery.
The people of God are tried. Two thirds of the people shall die but the third part will remain. This trial is compared to the way silver and gold are purified by fire. In the end, God calls those who are purified by His Name, and in turn they call Him their God.
The prophet foresees the nations gathered in battle against Jerusalem, God's delivery of His people, and the establishment of a secure, peaceful land (see Is 66:15–23; Ezk 38–40; Joel 4:9–21; Mk 13:7–27; Rev 20–22). In the New Testament, this is to be accomplished at the Second Coming of Christ and the last battle between God and Satan.
The Lord's feet will stand on the Mount of Olives in this reference to the Messianic Age. This applies both to the Incarnation and the Second Coming of Christ. Jesus and the disciples stayed on the Mount of Olives during Holy Week (Lk 21:37), and, of course, Jesus spent the night on the Mount of Olives when He was betrayed (Mt 26:30). Whether or not Christ will touch down upon the Mount of Olives at His Second Coming is another question. The eschatological imagery here, however, indicates judgment in the presence of God.
Christ is the living water (Jn 4:10–14). In the Apocalypse, a river runs through the Holy City (Rev 22:1–5). The Garden of Eden was at the headwaters of four great rivers (Gn 2:10–15). In the garden of Paradise, Christ is the living water who sustains, refreshes, and gives life to the inhabitants.
The grotesque imagery of the destruction of the enemies of Jerusalem reminds the reader of the utter seriousness of God's judgment. The passage warns that those who do not come up to Jerusalem to worship the King (who is the Lord) are destined for the same fate. Sometimes we look at the judgment of God upon wicked figures and think ourselves safe from wrath because our evil is small by comparison. The fact that we are not murderers of millions does not make us safe. The standard of God's judgment is whether we worship Him in Spirit and in truth (Jn 4:21–24).

Zechariah concludes with a condemnation of Egypt and all nations that do not come to Jerusalem to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles (also called the Feast of Booths; see Lv 23:33–36). This feast was associated with covenant renewal and the deliverance of Israel. Christ is the eternal Word of God who, in the Incarnation, “dwelt [or tabernacled] among us” (Jn 1:14). So then, all who reject Christ and do not enter the Church to celebrate and serve Him are condemned.
The Canaanite is a merchant. The connotation appears to be that merchants will no longer be necessary or allowed in the Lord's house. The cleansing of the temple by Christ comes to mind in this regard (see Mt 21:12, 13; Mk 11:15–19; Lk 19:45–48; Jn 2:13–17). One is also reminded how easily God's house is turned into a bartering place and how churches can be used for profits rather than prophecy. The booming industry of Christian items today is alarming. It has always been easy to confuse piety and profits in relation to the Lord's house. The day is coming in the Kingdom of God when this shall be neither permitted nor necessary. Indeed, the coming age is one when God Himself shall supply every need of His children. Buying and selling will no longer be necessary.
Malachi means “my messenger.” A burden or oracle is a prophetic poetic message in the form of a question and answer dialog between God and the people. Malachi is a long oracle rebuking the hypocrisy of the people of God. Take it to heart is good advice for reading any of the prophets.
In what way have You loved us? God declares His love for His people, but they reply coldly. God reminds them of the covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Jacob I have loved, but Esau I have hated is a Semitic way of emphasizing God's choice of Jacob, not of indicating hatred for the unchosen (see Gn 25:23; Lk 14:26; Rom 9:10–13).
The priests offered defiled bread, as well as blind, lame, and sick animals, as sacrifices contrary to Mosaic directives. Malachi observes that they do not treat their civil ruler with such contempt.
1:9, 10 The Lord calls the people to make atonement and to pray. He will not, however, accept an offering favorably while the priests and people continue their liturgical misdeeds. When liturgical actions are void of repentance and faithfulness, the clergy and people simply go through the motions.
A remarkable and clear prophecy that the Gentiles, in their worship of God, in every place or church will burn incense before Him—as Israel had done. To this day, incense is offered in nearly every service of the Orthodox Church.
In Malachi’s day people complained that worship brings on weariness. Today, people complain that worship is “boring.” Worship was not designed by God as entertainment, but for His people to have communion with Him.
The word here is dung (Gr. anaustrov). The Hebrew text also reads “dung.” The offal of offerings was removed from the sanctuary and burned (see Ex 29:14; Lv 4:11, 12). God detests false offerings so intensely that He threatens to rub dung on the faces of the priests and take them out to the dung heap as refuse. This passage was so disturbing that later Targums translated it, “I will make visible on your faces the shame of your crimes.” In this instance, Malachi delivers an angelic message with an earthy tongue, demonstrating the severity of the priestly misdeeds.
Malachi reminds the priests of the Levitic covenant and what they are meant to be and do (see Nm 25:12, 13; Dt 10:8, 9).
A stunning job description of the priest serving Christ today.
Christians call God Father because Jesus Christ, the eternally begotten Son of God, revealed Him as Father (Mt 3:17; 6:9), and He has made us the children of God (Jn 1:12).
Sons of Israel profaned the holy things of the Lord. Too often they followed foreign gods through intermarriage with pagan women, which was prohibited (see Ex 34:11–16; Dt 7:1–4). St. Paul echoes this truth in saying, “Do not be unequally yoked together with unbelievers” (2Co 6:14).
In this passage, God says I hate two things: hypocrisy (v. 13) and divorce (vv. 14–16). Regarding divorce, the husband is held accountable, for he has forsaken his wife. We learn that (1) marriage brings companionship—an intimate relationship and partnership between husband and wife; (2) marriage is a covenant between the Lord and the husband and wife, not to be broken—which is why the historic Church sees it as a sacrament which is permanent; and (3) marriage produces the fruit of offspring—we pray in the wedding service, “And let them behold their children's children.” Thus, God's final word to husbands: do not forsake her (v. 16).
The people weary the Lord, accusing Him of blessing evil doers and withholding justice. The truth is that their own evil acts cause their troubles.
My messenger: The Lord will send John the Baptist to prepare the way (see Is 40:3) as forerunner of the Messiah. Our Lord Jesus Christ verifies this prophecy about John in Mt 11:10, 14.
As with many prophecies of Christ in the Old Testament, the first and second comings of Christ are not separated. The Lord comes as both Savior and Judge. As Savior, He redeems the creation from sin, death, and the devil. As Judge, He will both purify and terrify: And who can withstand His appearance? The offering is the body and blood of Christ.
Sorcerers, adulterers, and those who swear falsely indicate practices deeply destructive to the soul and to society. Sorcery or witchcraft is an attempt to manipulate creation for one's own ends. Adultery is sexual infidelity to one's spouse or with the spouse of another. Swearing falsely by God's name is lying and perjury, taking God's name in vain.

This list of those who exploit wage-earners . . . oppress widows and afflict orphans . . . pervert the justice due foreigners, and do not fear Me demonstrates the biblical concern with social as well as personal morality. The Old Testament prophets, Christ Himself, the New Testament apostles, and the saints of the Church all address social matters. Creation is a singular reality and cannot be arbitrarily divided into personal and social categories.
God has not changed and does not change. The Scriptures (Heb 13:8) and the Church Fathers apply this verse to Christ.
3:8-12  How have we insulted you? God answers this self-righteous question pointedly: they have withhold tithes and offerings. A tithe is a tenth of one's income; offerings are additional gifts. Some modern Christians reject tithing, claiming it is a part of the Law not applicable today. But they forget that Abram (Abraham) tithed to Melchizedek five hundred years before the Law was given to Moses (Gn 14:18–20). And Melchizedek is a type of Christ (Heb 6:19–7:6). To those who tithe, God promises a blessing until it is overflowing.
3:13-15 Speaking against God is the heart of the problem. They call people who serve God foolish and accuse Him of blessing the wicked, thereby attempting to put Him on trial.
Contrast such people with those who feared the Lord and reverenced His name. Their names are in a book of remembrance (Ex 32:32–34; Is 4:3; Dan 7:10).
3:19 For all who do wickedly, the day of the Lord, the last judgment, shall burn them up.
For those who fear the Lord, Christ the Sun of Righteousness, He shall bring healing.
Elijah the Tishbite and Moses were present with the Lord at His Transfiguration (Mt 17:1–13).
The Giver of the Law of Moses will soon become incarnate, writing His laws on our hearts and minds and remembering our sins and lawless deeds no more (Heb 10:16, 17).
Isaiah in Hebrew means “Yahweh saves” or “Yahweh is salvation.”
The image of Israel is that of an entire body covered with wounds and sores—a body that not only refuses treatment, but will not even recognize that it is sick.
God will not allow His people to be completely wiped out. One good seed will still yield much fruit, and a few will listen to the words of the prophet.
1:11-15  God will not forgive (v. 14) false religious piety, but He will accept the sacrifice of “a broken spirit, / A broken and humbled heart” (Ps 50:19).
Righteousness is God's presence, which lodged in Zion, but the people forsook Him.
1:22  Silver is worthless: the words of the prophets have been corrupted with bad interpretations. They mix wine with water: correct doctrine has been watered down by human reason.
1:23 The people are orphans because they have become disobedient to their heavenly Father. The widow has rejected the Bridegroom.
1:24-31 God's judgment, tempered by His mercy, will humble and establish order as it was at the beginning for those who repent.
2:2-3 The mountain is a symbol of the Church, which will proclaim God's way to all the Gentiles (see Mic 4:1–4).
Their sin is made worse because they hand over those who are righteous.
3:16 Daughters of Zion are the wealthy women of Jerusalem who lived near the royal palace and the temple during Isaiah's time. Their humiliation is a metaphor for the coming humiliation of Jerusalem.
The Spirit of judgment: God will send a flood of affliction on the people to wash away their sin, and the Spirit of burning will be like a purifying fire to purge them of their guilt. These two images of water and fire also prefigure the washing of regeneration in baptism.
The song of the vineyard is similar to Jewish harvest songs used on feast days. In Jn 15:1–6, Christ calls Himself “the true vine”; His Father “the vinedresser”; and those who are grafted, “the branches.”
The prophet Isaiah describes their sins: greed (v. 8); love of pleasure (v. 11); indifference to God (v. 12); intentional evil acts (v. 18); mocking God (v. 19); perversion of truth (v. 20); vanity and conceit (v. 21); dishonesty (v. 23); and finally, rejecting God's law and despising His word (v. 24).
5:26-30 These verses describe the historical consequences of the sins laid out in vv. 8–23.
The year King Uzziah died: Certain biblical scholars date this event at 734 BC. The Fathers teach that the sins of the king caused prophecy to cease for a time (see 2Ch 26:18ff).
A live coal touching the mouth: Isaiah experiences a symbol of the Eucharist, which is taken from the altar to be served to the faithful. In fact, after an Orthodox priest receives communion, he quietly quotes the seraphim's proclamation (v. 7).
Isaiah's vision has strongly influenced the development of Orthodox Christian worship. For the Church, like heaven, has an altar, a throne, smoke from the incense, and believers singing “Holy, holy, holy,” the Thrice-Holy Hymn.
People sin by choice, not by nature, volitionally stopping their ears and closing their eyes.
The Hebrew phrase Shear-Jashub means, “A remnant shall return.” Thus, Isaiah's son is a symbolic confirmation to King Ahaz of the Lord's promise to heal and save a remnant. The firebrands are an expression of contempt for the kings of Israel and Syria, but they will do no permanent damage.
The sign was not given to Ahaz, who had doubted the earlier prophecy, but to all the Hebrew people (JohnChr). This messianic prophecy is fulfilled when the virgin Mary gives birth to Christ. The Hebrew word almah, “unmarried woman,” designates “a hidden virgin, shut off from the occasional sight of men” (Jerome). The Greek word used in the LXX is parthenos, which means “virgin.” Immanuel, meaning “God with us,” refers to Christ's divine nature. Messiah coming as a Child (v. 16) refers to His human nature.
The Jews should have been rich and fruitful, but in their rebellion and disobedience they became barren. Nevertheless, after God has chastised them, He will restore them to good pasture.
Here God uses three different methods to declare His prophetic warning to the people: the book, the two witnesses, and Isaiah's son. The prophetess is Isaiah's wife.
Those who fear God will not know Christ as a stumbling stone when He comes, but those who succumb to the enemy will fall and be broken against Christ, the “precious cornerstone” (see 28:16; Rom 9:33).
8:16 The law given to Moses will be closed with the teachings of the apostles.
8:17-18 The children are interpreted as Christ's apostles and disciples, who performed many signs and wonders.
Compare the prophet's question, Why do they seek the dead on behalf of the living? to the angel's triumphant statement to the myrrhbearing women in Lk 24:5: “Why do you seek the living among the dead?”
God gave men and women a natural law within them—the ability to choose the good and avoid the evil—but they chose selfishness. Then God gave the law of Moses, and it too was broken. Great darkness falls upon the soul that is without the light of the commandments.
9:3  The day of Midian refers to the defeat of the Midianites by Gideon and his men without the use of weapons (see Jdg 7:9–25). These men prefigure the apostles, who spread the gospel throughout the world with only “the weapons of peace,” the preaching of the Cross.
A Child is born speaks of Christ's human nature; and a Son is given unites His two natures in one Person. The Son of God is also the Son of the Virgin.
9:8-4 The prophet warns of God's judgment against Israel's pride and arrogance (9:8); its elder and prophet who teaches lawlessness (9:14, 15); its self-destruction through civil conflicts (9:18–20); and its judicial leaders (10:1, 2). This section is laid out in four stanzas separated by the refrain repeated in 9:11, 16, 20, and 10:4: “His anger is not turned away.”
Isaiah predicts the coming attack by the Assyrians and their defeat during the siege on Jerusalem. He also reminds the people that God, not Assyria, controls history (v. 14). The Light of Israel (v. 17) that will sanctify God's people speaks poetically of the Holy Spirit.
The Assyrian king attempted to attack Egypt by way of the coastline and failed. In this way, the yoke that was threatening Jerusalem was destroyed.
At the Baptism of Christ, the Holy Spirit . . . shall rest upon Him (see Mt 3:16). The righteous and faithful Messiah will judge people by what is in their hearts; His teachings shall strike the earth; and His breath—a metaphor for the Holy Spirit—will destroy the ungodly.
The uncreated Son of God will assume created human flesh, restoring the relationship with Him that mankind lost as a result of the Fall (see Rom 8:19–23). The whole world shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord.
11:10 His resting place is interpreted by some of the Fathers to be the tomb of Christ, an honorable place of veneration. It is also true that Christ finds His “rest” in His saints, in whom He dwells.
11:11-12 Salvation will come first to the Jewish remnant, and then to Gentiles ... from the four corners of the earth (see Acts 1:8; Rom 1:16). The teaching of the apostles will spread like a mighty wind, destroying idols and correcting error, even into Egypt. The Cross is the sign. Our Lord said, “And I, if I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all peoples to Myself” (Jn 12:32).
11:16 The highway that once led Israel out of captivity in Egypt will later be opened for Mary and Joseph to bring the Child there for protection from Herod, and for the apostles to return there with the Gospel of Christ.
Compare this song of praise to the Song of Mary in Lk 1:45–55.
This passage has several layers of meaning: (1) It prophesies the ultimate downfall of Babylon; (2) it prophesies Christ's Passion and Resurrection, when Christ will be lifted up on the cross and the hosts of heaven will gather to battle the powers of darkness (compare vv. 9–13 to Mt 27:51–54; Lk 23:44, 45); (3) it describes the anger of Christ at the Last Judgment.
Babylon was a glorious city which will be utterly destroyed. It is also a metaphor for sin. Demons who will dance in the desert present a stark image of hell, the ultimate place of rebellion. (See also 14:23; 34:14; Rev 18:2.) The donkey-centaurs, from Greek mythology, are from the waist up a man, from the waist down a horse, and they often function as symbols of rebellion against divine order and hostility to civilization. The phrase is usually translated “wild beast” and is likely a symbol for demons.
14:1, 2 In 586 BC, Cyrus of Persia allowed Israel to return home in their land and rebuild the temple in Jerusalem. The sojourner—the Gentiles—will be added to Israel, the Jews, when the Church is established (see Rom 11:23).
The king of Babylon is compared to Lucifer (v. 12) or Satan.
Note the five times Lucifer says I will in this passage. In this five-step process, he fully intends to take the place of the One True God! Likely the mountains toward the north are those to the north and east of Jerusalem.
14:32 God accomplishes these things in history to show the nations that Zion, symbolic of the Church, has been established by the God of Israel as a place of refuge where the humble of His people shall be saved.
The night is a metaphor for spiritual blindness, and Moab is a metaphor for souls lost in a land of darkness.
The idolaters of Moab who mocked the God of Israel have now been taken away, while Mount Zion is a protected rock.
The Moabite outcasts are a type of the Gentiles who will abandon their idols to worship Christ. Eusebius interprets the tabernacle of David as the Church of Christ established in Moab, which is modern-day Jordan.
Tiglath-Pileser III of Assyria conquered Damascus in 732 BC (see 4Kg 16).
17:9 The Amorites and the Evites were the indigenous peoples of Palestine who lost their land when the Hebrews came up out of Egypt.
18:1-3 The king of Damascus sent ships with messengers to Egypt and Ethiopia to appeal for help against the Assyrians. A Christological interpretation may be applied: The first messengers to bring Christ to this region were the Holy Family (see Mt 2:13–15). Tradition holds that the Evangelist Mark established churches there.
Before the harvest, God will use the Assyrians as sickles to force the vine to produce grapes. The branches that are cut off will be discarded (see Jn 15:1–8).
This prophecy was fulfilled historically a few years later in 714 BC, when Piankhi's 25th Dynasty rose to power, causing widespread domestic strife in Egypt.
Tartan was the official title of the leader of the armies of Assyria. Sargon captured Ashdod in 711 BC.
Isaiah's shame is a sign of the greater shame that will befall Egypt and Ethiopia, and it also prefigures the Messiah to come. The Son of God, taking the form of a servant, humbled Himself, becoming obedient to the point of death (see Php 2:8). Christ ministered on earth three years and fulfilled all by hanging naked on the Cross—the shameful death that put death to shame.
21:6-12  A watchman is appointed to guard a city. Similarly, a Christian must remain ever vigilant to guard the soul against the onslaught of sin.
When the Assyrians conquered Babylon in 689 BC, they smashed the idols of the Babylonians. This verse can be interpreted to mean that God uses even adversity to destroy sin.
A prophetic scene of anarchy unfolds: the people wander in the Valley of Zion (v. 5). Panic, fear, cowardice, and chaos overtake them. They refuse to seek refuge in Mount Zion and run to worthless houses instead (v. 1). Jerusalem fell to the Assyrians, and the people were taken captive into Babylon in 587 BC.
The enemy is at Jerusalem's gates, yet the people answer the call of the Lord of hosts for repentance by throwing a drunken feast. “For the kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit” (Rom 14:17).
Shebna was likely a Hebrew priest who had neglected his priestly duties because of his pride.
22:20  Eliakim replaced Shebna before the attack on Jerusalem. Yet, by the end of his administration, Eliakim too would fall (v. 25).
Tyre and Sidon were the leading coastal cities of Phoenicia (modern Lebanon). Carthage, a city in North Africa, was founded by Tyre and maintained commercial relations with them and with the Citaevans (Cyprus).
The Lord will judge Tyre and Sidon (v. 4) because of their arrogance. Eventually, the Light of Christ will come to Tyre and Sidon, and multitudes from there will follow Him (see Mk 3:8).
Seventy years: Even though the people of Tyre had been sinning against God for “a multitude of generations,” God, in His mercy, will limit His chastisement to one man's lifetime (Theod). This prophecy was fulfilled in full when the Church was established in Tyre (see Acts 21:3–5).
The Fathers associate this chapter with the end of this present age. At the Last Judgment, the inhabited earth in its desolate state will, in effect, be turned right side up, for “the last will be first, and the first last” (Mt 20:16). The curse has alienated all of creation from the Creator. God intended for man to offer up creation to Him, but instead, man has plundered the world (v. 3; see also Rom 8:18–22).
This passage is also a picture of the Book of Acts, where the apostles will cry aloud, proclaiming the name of the Lord wherever they go. The islands are the churches that will be established in the midst of the sea of lost humanity, rejecters of the natural law written on their hearts (see Rom 2:14, 15).
God will shake the heavens and the earth “that the things which cannot be shaken may remain” (Heb 12:26, 27).
At the end of the age, God will bring His hand upon those who will not be humbled of their own free will.
An ancient and true counsel: Isaiah praises God for “the mystery which has been hidden from ages” (Col 1:26)—a mystery that the prophet knows will someday be revealed in full, which is Christ in His saints, the Church. And Isaiah responds with total obedience: So be it, O Lord.
25:2-3  God stops the ungodly not simply to punish sinners but to bring them to repentance. The poor and wronged, not the strong and proud, will bless and praise Him.
25:8  Humanity's rebellion against God has given death the power to prevail, but Christ will destroy death and then wipe away every tear (see Rev 21:4).
This is our God: The Apostle Thomas fulfills this prophecy when he sees the resurrected Christ and cries out, “My Lord and my God!” (Jn 20:28).
25:10-12 The King of Glory will spread forth His hands upon the cross in order to humble the arrogance of all men.
26:5-6 Compare with what Virgin Mary sings in her hymn: “He has put down the mighty from their thrones, / And exalted the lowly” (Lk 1:52).
26:7-8 The godly are being prepared to follow Christ when He comes. Compare to Christ's parable of the virgins (see Mt 25:1–13).
26:16 Hard circumstances are seen by the righteous as a reason to remember the Lord. The holy prophet calls them a small affliction; or as St. Paul writes, “our light affliction, which . . . is working for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory” (2Co 4:17).
The dead shall rise up: “Christ is risen from the dead, trampling down death by death, and upon those in the tombs, bestowing life” (Paschal Troparion; see also 1Co 15).
Isaiah is a powerful “prophet of doom,” but he is also a good shepherd to his people. After spending the night in prayer, he consoles them with these words.
The sword is Christ, the Incarnate God, who will slay the dragon, Satan. “He who follows the serpent shows that his life is crooked, uneven, and filled with contrariness; but he who follows after the Lord makes his paths straight and his footsteps right” (BasilG).
27:6 Those who are left will bud and bear fruit. These are the true children of Jacob.
King Hezekiah destroyed the idols in Jerusalem temporarily (see 2Ch 31:1; 4Kg 18:4); but Christ will permanently destroy the idolatry of sin for all mankind.
This prophecy concerns Jerusalem's captivity.
The sons of Israel are symbolic of the apostles, who will blow the great trumpet of truth, gathering Christ's scattered sheep together in a single flock on the holy mountain, the Church.
This passage is interpreted by Eusebius and Cyril as relating to the downfall of the Pharisees and chief priests, who are the crown of arrogance, and to the specific treachery of Judas, who was descended from the tribe of Ephraim.
28:4-6 Just as the fig replaces the fading flower, Christ will supersede the fading law and become the crown of hope, woven of glory.
28:16 As a cornerstone unites two walls, Christ will unite Jew and Gentile believers (see 1Pt 2:6).
The reference is to the battle of Joshua against the Gibeonites, during which God destroyed the enemy with large hailstones (see Jos 10).
Ariel, which means “Lion of God,” is Jerusalem. After David was anointed king over Israel, he besieged Jerusalem and took it (see 2Kg 5:3–7).
A right heart before God in prayer is even more important than right words, for God hears our “groanings which cannot be uttered” (Rom 8:26; see also Mk 7:6, 7).
The wisdom and counsel of the proud is but foolishness in God's eyes.
Godly works will help identify the Messiah when He comes.
Those who trust in Egypt or in any human government will labor in vain. “It is good to trust in the Lord / Rather than to trust in man” (Ps 117:8).
30:6 Jerusalem is the desert, which will be devastated by the nation of Nebuchadnezzar. The quadrupeds are the foolish and rebellious people.
When God's children refuse to listen to the prophets, they are attempting to stop the very mouth of the Holy One of Israel, Christ Himself.
Return and groan: After warning them of their imminent destruction, the Lord exhorts the people to repent and be saved. Still, they did not will to listen.
30:18  God will wait for His people, testing their hearts, and giving immediate grace and mercy to those who abide in Him.
Affliction is given by the Lord, the Physician of souls, to open blind eyes and deaf ears to the truth.
The king of the Assyrians thought he would reign over Jerusalem, but because of Hezekiah's prayers the angel of the Lord slew Sennacherib's army (ch. 37).
The people continue to trust in horses and chariots rather than in God. The prophet Isaiah says He wisely sends evil to them (see Pr 3:11, 12).
31:4 God watches over His people as a young lion watches over his prey.
31:8 God will deal an invisible blow against the Assyrian army when it is overthrown by an angel of the Lord (37:36).
According to the Fathers, a righteous King prefigures Christ, and rulers prefigure the apostles.
Christ will hide His words by speaking in parables to the multitudes, but will explain Himself in private to His disciples, for out of their hearts will flow a glorious river of living water (see Jn 7:38).
After Christ ascends to heaven, the Holy Spirit will come upon the believers at Pentecost, and the Church, a fruitful field, will be established.
Those who sow are those who teach salvation. All waters prefigure holy baptism. The Church will be formed from both Jew (the ox) and Gentile (the donkey).
The enemy may distress the believer physically, but not finally. In Christ the enemy will be conquered by his own treachery.
The faithful offer a prayer of thanksgiving for what the Lord has done, for through affliction they have learned to put their trust in God.
According to the Fathers, the saints, who dwell with God in the heights, have also become the dwelling place of God (1Co 3:16). Zion here represents the Church.
33:14  Who will tell you a fire is burning?: Christ Himself will tell His people about the eternal place of torment for the lawless and ungodly.
The mighty rock is a symbol of the Church, which will offer Christ, the bread of life, to the believers. And in the Church, the water of baptism into Christ will be plentiful.
Eyes set on the kingdom of heaven will behold Christ in His glory (Mt 24:30).
33:22 A marvelous summary of how God reveals Himself to His people.
34:1-4 These verses are echoed in Christ's teaching about the end times (see Mt 24:7–29).
Reference to the measuring line is also found in Lk 6:38: “With the same measure that you use, it will be measured back to you.”
35:8-9  The dispersed will walk the holy way—a highway of holiness, carrying the Light of Christ to the world.
An ancient Assyrian account of the events surrounding the siege of Jerusalem affirms that forty-six fortified cities in Judah had already been taken by Sennacherib.
36:3 Shebna and Eliakim are mentioned in ch. 22.
The Rabshakeh was a chief officer in the Assyrian army.
The Rabshakeh warns that the time for diplomacy has passed, and that Egypt, weak as a broken reed, will be more likely to hurt than help Judah. The situation for Jerusalem seems hopeless. But Assyria's pride in its own power, mockery against God's people, and blasphemy against God will be met with a punishment equal to the sin (37:36–38).
36:21 Just as Christ remained silent before His accusers, Eliakim, Shebna, and Joah made no reply to the Rabshakeh's blasphemous claims against God.
When King Hezekiah went into the Temple, he did not pray for deliverance, despite his distress. Instead, he asked Isaiah to pray that God rebuke the enemy's blasphemy, and to pray for the remnant in Jerusalem.
Isaiah’s prayers are answered when, for the time being, the king of Assyria halts the siege on Jerusalem in order to deal with the threat from the Ethiopians.
Even from a distance, the enemy continues to blaspheme the God of Israel. But note how Hezekiah's attitude has changed. This time (in contrast to 37:1–4), he prays directly before the Lord, asking Him to secure Jerusalem so that all the kingdoms will see and know that the God of Israel is Lord of all (v. 20).
37:22 The mighty King of Assyria will be laughed . . . to scorn by vulnerable Jerusalem, because she is God's daughter.
37:36-38 The Angel of the Lord steps in. God will utterly annihilate the enemy without a weapon, and the king will die at the hands of his own sons.
At the time of his physical affliction, Hezekiah had also become afflicted with pride (see 2Ch 32:25, 26). By telling him of his imminent death, the Lord revealed Himself to Hezekiah, who wept loudly. He humbled himself and prayed, and immediately, Isaiah was given a new word for the king: healing and another fifteen years of life.
This miracle of the sun moving back . . . ten steps is a sign for Hezekiah of God's faithfulness. But it also prefigures Christ, the Sun of Righteousness. He will turn shadow into day and darkness into light, for the turning back of the human heart from death to life is His greatest miracle of all (see vv. 16, 17).
39:1-4 Hezekiah put his entire nation at risk by parading all the treasures and wealth of his house before the foreign king.
Showing no apparent concern for his people and their posterity, King Hezekiah seems concerned only for peace and righteousness during his own times.
The Fathers agree that the prophet adds these narratives (which are almost identical to 4Kg 18:13–20:19) in order to emphasize that his prophecies are from God, as evidenced by their fulfillment in history.
God raises up priests to comfort and strengthen the people, whose hearts are weighed down by sin, which is pardoned.
This passage is a prophecy of John the Baptist, who will be the voice proclaiming the coming of salvation through baptism into Christ our God (see Jn 1:23).
40:9  You who bring good tidings prophesies the preaching of Christ and His Apostles.
This prophecy is fulfilled in Christ: “For the Son of Man will come in the glory of His Father with His angels, and then He will reward each according to his works” (Mt 16:27).
40:11 Christ's own words bear witness to the fulfillment of this prophecy in Himself: “I am the good shepherd; and I know my sheep, and am known by My own” (Jn 10:14).
Over 2000 years before science proclaimed the earth was round and revolved around the sun, Isaiah spoke of the circle of the earth.
This is a messianic prophecy, but it also may refer to Cyrus of Persia, who will conquer Babylon in 539 BC, allowing the captive Jews to return and rebuild the temple. Cyrus is named in 44:28 and 45:1.
I Am, repeated twenty-seven times in chs. 41–49, means “I am the existing One.”

This is how the Son and Word of God revealed Himself to Moses (Ex 3:14).
When I Am becomes incarnate in Christ, the Gentiles will recognize the truth, and they shall not be moved. The Church will be put together well, for “unless the Lord builds the house, / Those who build it labor in vain” (Ps 126:1).
This prophecy will be fulfilled not only at the fall of Babylon and the return of the Jews from exile, but also through the Apostles and the Church, which will prevail against every type of persecution.
Israel, few in number: This also looks ahead to the Church, established at Pentecost with just twelve apostles.
The Lord's hand (or “arm”) is Christ Himself (see 26:11; 52:10; 53:1; 59:1; 66:1, 2).
42:1 I put My Spirit upon Him mentions all three Persons of the Holy Trinity. “I” and “My” speak of the Father; “Him” is the Son; “Spirit” is the Holy Spirit.
Christ does not share His glory with another, whether it be carved images or people who take personal credit for things God has done.
42:10-12 In Christ, the glorified Church will sing . . . a new song (see Rev 5:9).
42:13-17  This passage prophesies Christ's mighty acts of vengeance against His enemies at the Judgment. He will turn darkness into light (v. 16) for the faithful.
Fire all around: This prophecy was fulfilled historically when the Romans sacked Jerusalem and destroyed the temple in AD 70.
The Lord names His people you are Mine because He, together with His Father and the Holy Spirit, created man and will assume human nature. Christ will pass through every affliction with us: taking sin, suffering, and death on Himself; overthrowing our adversaries; and offering us His salvation.
God will gather His Church from all nations. Christ is the Servant (v. 10), chosen by the Father to bear witness to all mankind (Jn 8:18).
44:3 God promises to put My Spirit on Israel's seed, the Apostles, at Pentecost (see Acts 2:17).
Christ declares in the Book of Revelation, “I am the Alpha and the Omega, the Beginning and the End” (Rev 1:8).
St. Paul writes that God has declared Himself since creation. But men hide themselves from God, making and worshiping idols, changing “the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like corruptible man—and birds and four-footed animals and creeping things” (Rom 1:22, 23).
Here again is the message of salvation: God formed man in His own image, but we strayed from Him. Christ blotted out our sins, that we might return to Him. His promise to us is, I will redeem you. And thus we, His people, will be glorified.
Around 539 BC, Cyrus will conquer Babylon and send the Jews back to Jerusalem, where they will rebuild God's holy house, the temple.
45:1, 2  Cyrus's work will be temporary; Christ's will be eternal.
Christ Himself echoes this promise in His High Priestly Prayer: “And this is eternal life, that they may know You, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom You have sent” (Jn 17:3).
What are you making: The lesson here is clear: like clay which is molded by the potter, we do not demand an accounting from our Creator.
45:25 The children are the blood descendants of Israel, but the apostles and the Church are their seed. It is the seed who shall be made righteous and glorified. Interestingly, the Masoretic Text omits the phrase “the seed of.”
An encouraging promise to believers in old age, reminiscent of Ps 70:17, 18.
There is no greater prayer than “Thy will be done,” for God does all things for our good (Rom 8:28), and His counsel (or will) shall stand.
The virgin daughter of Babylon is an image of a nice person without God: comfortable and prosperous on the outside, empty on the inside, and full of shame.
48:1, 2 The people, called by the name of Israel, “having a form of godliness but denying its power” (2Ti 3:5), cannot lay claim to a true inheritance of truth or righteousness. This is also a warning to the Church never to be Christians in name only.
Not only did God make it well known the people must not worship idols, He also warned the people against blaming the idols when things went wrong, saying, My idols did them.
I have spoken: In Christ, the Word is made man.
48:16 The Lord and His Spirit have sent Me: A reference to all three Persons of the Holy Trinity, in which the Son reaffirms the prophecy made in 9:5, naming Him “the Angel of Great Counsel.”
The way in which the people were called to walk is the law, God's commandments. To do so brings peace . . . like a river.
49:1 The promise of the coming of the Messiah will stand for a long time, until it is fulfilled when He is revealed from His mother's womb in the Incarnation. For the angel Gabriel said to the Virgin, “You will conceive in your womb and bring forth a Son, and shall call His name Jesus” (Lk 1:31).
Christ will come, not to “bring peace, but a sword” (Mt 10:34). In some patristic writings, the chosen arrow is a metaphor for the divinity of Christ, and the quiver a metaphor for His humanity.
In Christ's divinity, the Father will be glorified on earth (v. 3); and in Christ's humanity, those who are brought back to Him will be joined to Him and know His strength. In this way, creation will be reconciled to God.
The walls of the earthly Zion, the Jewish nation, will be laid... waste, but the heavenly Zion, the Bride of Christ, will be rebuilt quickly by both Jewish and Gentile believers on Zion's desolate foundation.
The message of the cross will be set up as the signal of salvation.
The Word became flesh and gave Himself over to violent suffering so that He might take our suffering and destroy it. This remarkably detailed prophecy was written over 700 years before the Crucifixion.
51:1, 2 The promise given to Abraham and Sarah will be fulfilled when the resurrected Christ bursts out of the tomb hewed from a rock.
The prophecy of comfort for God's people promises that salvation will go forth from God through His Incarnate Son, who is the Messiah of Israel and the light of the Gentiles.
Christ is often referred to in Scripture as the arm of the Father.
This promise is echoed in Christ's teaching found in Mt 24:35: “Heaven and earth will pass away, but My words will by no means pass away.”
The people are fearful of mortal man, but forgot the God who made them.
Christ said, “I did not come to judge the world but to save the world” (Jn 12:47).

God judges sin and shows mercy to those who repent. The cup of destruction is God's chastisement.
The people are called for the third time to awake (see 51:9, 17). Note the progression: (1) awake and remember God's faithfulness (51:9–16); (2) awake, for you have been forgiven (51:17–22); (3) awake, for you shall be redeemed (52:1–3). Only Christ is able to redeem the soul. Christ will offer Himself as a sacrifice, paying the price, so to speak, to “reality itself” (GrgTheo).
“It is due to their sins that they have been sold, but it is by the benevolence of God that they have obtained deliverance” (Theod).
53:2  He had no form or beauty: “He sat upon the foal of an ass; He was despised among the people and humbled Himself even unto death” (Iren).
53:3-4  God became dishonored, for Christ assumed a true human nature. “O marvel at the loving kindness of the Word, that for our sakes He is dishonored, that we may be brought to honor” (Athang).
53:5 Christ, who was free from sin, took our chastisement and gave us peace. By His bruise we are saved from an eternity of suffering and estrangement from God.
The Lord, God the Father, delivered Him, God the Son, to die for our sins. This is the message St. Paul proclaims in 2Co 5:21.
53:7  “The shepherd of Israel, and now of the whole world also” (GrgNa) became “the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world” (Jn 1:29).
Christ was led to death, yet death could not hold His perfect, sinless body (see Acts 2:24).
He committed no lawlessness: See Heb 4:15.
The Lord, God the Father, cleansed Him, God the Son, of His wound because His body could not remain subject to corruption and death. The offering made by Christ enables man to receive the same healing and eternal life.
53:12  He was considered among the lawless is a reference to “the robbers who were crucified with Him. . . . Both of them were before this transgressors, but one was so no longer” (CyrJer).
54:1 The Gentiles were once barren and desolate, but the Church of the Gentiles will give birth in the Spirit to many more... children than Israel has in the flesh.
Enlarge and spread out further suggests that the Church of the Gentiles will be much greater and larger than the tabernacle constructed by Moses.
54:9, 10  God's covenant with Noah was made on behalf of the whole world, and God will no longer be angry so as to cause another flood. Noah's Flood prefigures the waters of baptism, and the ark, not mentioned here, is a type of the Church.
According to some of the Fathers, choice stones represent those who lead holy lives filled with virtuous deeds. The foundations are the prophets, apostles, and evangelists.
Eat and drink without money: “Christ does not ask money, but faith—which is more valuable than money” (AmbM; see also Rev 21:6, 7).
Neither are your ways My ways: See 40:13 and 1Co 16. Reason alone will never bring us to God. Rather, we confess that we are finite; He is infinite. Thus we come to Him by faith.
My word is the gospel of Jesus Christ, which will accomplish God's will. There are times the preaching of the Gospel seems to bear no fruit, but God is at work whether or not we see visible results.
56:1, 2  My mercy shall be revealed: God's word to the prophet reveals the future, but also interprets the past.
The righteous eunuchs will have an eternal name in heaven (v. 5), better than an earthly family. “They will pass from the old shadows of time into the new lights of eternity” (Aug).
56:6, 7  The foreigners are the Gentiles, who are welcome at God's holy mountain, the Church.
The righteous is Christ (Cyr, Theod).
The lawless people are no longer considered children of Abraham, but of the prostitute (see 1:21).
This prophecy is fulfilled in John the Baptist (see 40:3).
57:15 God is at once the Lord Most High, inconceivable and unknowable, and the Holy One who dwells among His saints and strengthens the fainthearted.
God calls Isaiah to rebuke the people loudly, like the trumpet that was traditionally blown when a fast was called (Joel 2:15). The people display an outward religious piety that hides the wickedness in their hearts.
Fasting and other ascetic acts do not necessarily indicate virtue. Blessed Augustine reminds us that even heretics fast! God will not see these actions if we mistreat others. God chooses rather that we humble our own soul. “A sacrifice to God is a broken spirit” (Ps 50:19).
The gospel is both social and redemptive. First, the physical needs must be met, and then the spiritual needs can be satisfied.
I am here: God is instantaneous in answering the prayers of the righteous. Sometimes He will reveal His presence through circumstances, and sometimes with a still, small voice, but always He will help us to know He dwells with us.
Generations of generations: The inheritance of the faithful will never be cut off.
Just as Israel was called to be built on unchanging ancient foundations, so is the Church. What makes the Orthodox Church orthodox is its commitment to remain faithful and unaltered from generation to generation.
59:1, 2  God is able to save, but He will not have mercy where there is no repentance.

“Remember God at all times, and He will remember you whenever you fall into evils” (IsaacS).
59:3-4 “For persevering with delight in wicked actions, they hasten thereto without turning back, even treading under foot the commandment with regard to neighbors, and instead of loving them, desire evil against them” (AthanG).
This passage offers the words that can be spoken to show repentance and receive forgiveness from God (Theod).
Paul uses this verse in his passages on spiritual warfare (Eph 6:13–17; 1Th 5:8).
59:20-21 Christ who delivers will come to Zion, “the lost sheep of the house of Israel” (Mt 15:24). Turn back ungodliness: Then the Holy Spirit will be given to the Church at Pentecost, and the proclamation of the Gospel will be established forever. “Since we too delight in this grace, let us therefore celebrate in our hymns Him who is the dispenser” (Theod).
This is the hymn we sing at Pascha (Easter) in the liturgical services. “On this day, the whole creation rejoices and exults, for Christ is risen and Hades despoiled” (JohnDm).
For St. Cyril, this passage refers not only to the return of the Jews from exile, but also to the assembling of the Church from all nations.
Midian, Kedar, and Ephah are nations of nomads descended from Ishmael, and Sheba is an Ethiopian tribe. Eusebius sees these nations, along with their camels, sheep, rams, and wealth, as metaphors for the spiritual gifts and sacrifices which will be offered on God's altar. In this way, His house of prayer, Christ's Church, will be glorified. Gregory of Nyssa comments that “virtue is a light and buoyant thing,” and those who live virtuous lives fly like clouds (v. 8).
It is this passage to which Jesus referred in Lk 4:16–21 when He stood in the synagogue and read from the prophet Isaiah. He told the people, “Today this Scripture is fulfilled in your hearing.” Jesus made it very clear that He is the Lord God of whom Isaiah wrote. “Christ said: ‘The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me.’ And rightly did He say ‘upon Me,’ because He was speaking as the Son of Man. For as the Son of Man, He was anointed and sent to preach the Gospel” (AmbM).
Many in Zion awaited the Messiah, glory instead of ashes. One thinks of the aged Simeon (Lk 2:22–35), who was “waiting for the Consolation of Israel,” and the prophetess Anna (Lk 2:36–38), “who looked for redemption in Jerusalem.”
Eternal gladness or joy is one of the fruits of the Spirit (Gal 5:22, 23). The “seal of the gift of the Holy Spirit” is given to the believer at chrismation, which is also called the “oil of gladness” (v. 3).
St. John Chrysostom teaches that the garment of salvation is Christ Himself, as do others of the Fathers. This explains why St. Paul wrote that in baptism we “put on Christ” (Gal 3:27).
Christ's crown of beauty is those who keep themselves pure, like the wise virgins waiting for the bridegroom (Mt 25:1–13). Christ rejoices over His bride, the Church (see Eph 5:22–33).
The guards, according to some Fathers, are the priests. Others see them as angels who continually guard and watch over the Church.
The prophecy refers to the Incarnation, when the Son of God takes on human flesh, becoming like us. Similar passages are Ex 15:11; Ps 85:8; Jer 10:6, 7.
Grain and wine are the fruits of righteousness, given to the faithful—both righteous Jews and foreigners—in the Holy Eucharist.
62:10-12 The standard for the Gentiles is the Cross, the Savior is Christ, and the redeemed of the Lord are the Church.
Christ is clothed in the flesh of His humanity and stained with the blood of His Passion. Having been crushed by His enemies in His death, He in turn has crushed them under His feet.
Judgment and mercy are bound together, but by God's grace, “mercy triumphs over judgment” (Jam 2:13). God so loved the world that the Lord Himself saved them. But note how their rebellion grieved His Holy Spirit, causing Him to turn against them.
Note how this verse parallels Heb 13:20: “Now may the God of peace who brought up our Lord Jesus from the dead, that great Shepherd of the sheep . . . .”
Moses prefigures Christ, for just as Moses was raised up to lead the people through the Red Sea, Christ passed through death and was raised up into life, that He might lead all His people from death to life.
Isaiah begins his prayer for God to remember the inheritance (v. 17) promised to His people long ago with the word return, which is echoed in the final words of Revelation: “Even so, come, Lord Jesus” (Rev 22:20).
63:17 God hardened their hearts with His patience. He allowed them to continue in their disobedience. Thus, when the chastisement comes, it will be fully justified.
If God's presence causes His adversaries to be troubled, how much more will His mercy help those who wait for Him? (See also 1Co 2:9.)
God is angry because sin has caused us to go astray. He will meet with mercy those who do true righteousness and remember Him (v. 4).
The filthy rag is a woman's soiled menstrual cloth. And note it is representative not of our unrighteousness, but of our righteousness! (See also Rom 3:10 and Tts 3:57.)
I stretched out My hands: This phrase points to “the salvific Passion on the Cross on which He extended His hands” (Theod).
The people violate the law deliberately and continually, and therefore deserve God's anger (v. 5); yet because of the intercession of even one, God declares that He will not destroy them all (v. 8). “If, within the cluster, a single mature seed is found, it is a cause for saving the entire cluster for the purpose of offering the first fruits to God” (Theod).
Orthodox faithful bless themselves with the sign of the cross of Christ, in the name of the true God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.
This prophecy is partially fulfilled in this age, where those who have been united to Christ are a “new creation” (2Co 5:17); but it will be fulfilled completely in the age to come, when Christ comes again with a new heaven and a new earth (see Rev 21:1–4).
66:1 “God, then, being immaterial and uncircumscribed, has no place. For He is His own place, filling all things” (JohnDm; see also Jn 4:20–24).
Believers are reminded that even those who hate them are still brethren, for God alone repays His enemies with justice.
According to the Fathers, this prophecy is fulfilled first in the Virgin Mary, and also in the Church. “He who was of the Father, yet without mother, was born of a woman without a father's cooperation. . . . For, as pleasure did not precede it, pain did not follow it” (JohnDm).
The Church will indeed be born in one day, at Pentecost (see Acts 2:41; 4:4), and she will in turn give birth to a nation, whereas the old covenant of the law will be sterile.
Christ the Bridegroom is describing the glorious union of Himself with His Bride, the Church. Regarding verse 12, St. Ambrose says, “The Holy Spirit is the river.”
Here the Second Coming of the Lord and the Last Judgment are depicted.
The cross is the sign of salvation which the apostles shall declare . . . among the Gentiles (see Mt 8:19).
Worship, sacrifices with psalms, will be open to both Gentiles and Jews, and Christ will choose priests to serve His Church from the Gentile believers.
1:1 Jeremiah means “God appoints or exalts.” Anathoth is his hometown, within the land of Benjamin.
1:2-3  Jeremiah prophesied during the reigns of Josiah, Jehoiakim, and Zedekiah.
Like Moses before him (Ex 4:10), Jeremiah claims he does not know how to speak. As with all the prophets, God put His words in Jeremiah's mouth (v. 9).
Note the three sins of Judah, and of all mankind: (1) forsaking God; (2) false worship; and (3) preoccupation with themselves.
This is ironic, since Israel never was committed entirely to the Lord. Yet in the faithfulness of the patriarchs and prophets, Israel can be said to have been faithful. Ultimately, however, the passage depicts God's relationship with all nations. Although they were taken over by enemies, God redeemed them through the Holy One of Israel, who is Christ.
Chettim is Cyprus and other Greek islands; Kedar is a region in northern Arabia.
In both the old covenant and the new, the problem is the same: people forsake God, the living water, and damage the cisterns or containers, the places of God's dwelling. As Orthodox believers, therefore, we adhere both to Christ and His Church.
Baal was the idol-god of neighboring nations, and the unfaithful Jews became his disciples. Following this or any false god leads to death, a common burial place.
2:36 Repeat your ways is literally “redouble your path.” When we sin, we usually do the same things over and over again.
Israel's apostasy from God is described as fornication (v. 7), adultery (v. 8), and being faithless (v. 10). These words are those of the Lord (v. 6). This is not only bodily sin, “but any sin you have committed” (GrgNa).
This is the first great messianic prophecy of Jeremiah. It finds its fulfillment in:

1. faithful shepherds (v. 15), the apostles;
2. the Holy One of Israel (v. 16), our Lord Jesus Christ;
3. Jerusalem the Throne of the Lord (v. 17), which looks ahead to the eternal Kingdom (Rev 21:2; 22:1); and
4. the inclusion of the Gentiles (v. 17), which speaks of the Church.
The God of Israel is here prophetically called God of the Gentiles, who is the Father. Thus, when the disciples ask Jesus how to pray, His answer begins with “Our Father” (Lk 11:1, 2).
Circumcise ... your heart: St. Cyprian tells us “the first circumcision of the flesh is made void, and the second circumcision of the spirit is promised instead” (see Col 2:11). He further notes, “Then, because that sign did not avail women, but all are sealed by the sign of the Lord” (that is, Holy Baptism).
Wash the vices from your heart: “It is not the filth of the body, but the impurity of the soul, to which God is averse” (JohnChr).
The Lord specifies that those most responsible for Israel's apostasy are her leaders.

What is wrong? They do not know Me. Throughout Christian history there have been many secular and religious leaders open to the same charge. St. Paul advises, “from such people turn away!” (2Ti 3:5).
The implication is, there are none to be found in Jerusalem seeking faithfulness to whom the Lord can be merciful.
Poor . . . do not know the way of the Lord: “The poor man is . . . he who lacks the great doctrines, as is the view also of the prophet” (BasilG).
The foundations . . . belong to the Lord: Despite her faithlessness, still the foundations of the city are established by God.
Our prophets were as wind: In modern idiom, they were full of hot air! St. Jude called them “clouds without water” and “autumn trees without fruit” (Jude 12).
5:19  Foreign gods: The Greek word used to describe false gods suggests “strangeness” or “an alien disposition.” Here, the Lord uses that meaning to promise Judah that the kinds of gods they worship will determine the kind of life they live. This is true for all people, not just Judah.
When God's people have an inattentive and disobedient heart (v. 23), they not only miss the good things He offers (v. 25), they neglect the orphan and the widow (v. 28). When dedication to the Lord is compromised, social justice is not to be found.
Beth Haccerem: St. Jerome taught this was located between Tekoa, Amos' birthplace, and Jerusalem.
Destroy her foundations: The ancient method of leveling a city was to uproot its very foundations.
6:9  See Lam 1:22. To glean a vine is to strip it of all its fruit, leaving it desolate, as is promised with the coming attack on Israel.
As in 4:4, circumcision was always understood to be a spiritual act. Without a circumcised heart, circumcision is in vain—just as an unbaptized heart pollutes our baptism.
St. Athanasius connects this passage with Jn 14:6, where Jesus says, “I am the way, the truth, and the life. No one comes to the Father except through Me.”
6:17 The watchmen are the prophets, as distinguished from the shepherds who led the communities.
Ironically, the call to holiness is heard outside Israel, pointing to the opening of Israel to the Gentiles.
Although sacrifice to God was still practiced in Israel, it was compromised by their idolatry, just as our worship is polluted if we participate in the liturgy, yet habitually do what it forbids. “For it was not because He was angry, like a man, as many venture to say, that He rejected their sacrifices; but out of compassion to their blindness” (Iren).
7:2 The captivity of Judah was not fated, but was God's appropriate response to the freely made decisions of a disobedient people.
Jesus cited this verse when cleansing the temple (Mt 21:13), suggesting that while in Jeremiah's day the question of the temple being a den of robbers was preposterous, by Christ's time it was a sad fact.
Cake dough: the Hebrew word chavon is transliterated into Greek. These were sweet breads dedicated to pagan gods, the host of heaven.
7:21-22 The Lord highlights their obedience as more important than adhering to the letter of the command.
Tophet: The place where children were being sacrificed to Molech (4Kg 23:10). The sad end of this child sacrifice will be cannibalism, effected during the siege of Jerusalem (Bar 2:3).
The places of pagan sacrifice are prophesied to become a killing field.
This desecration of the graves of the patriarchs and kings was executed by the Babylonians. The drying here refers to the heat of the sun. Although the saints whose bones were exposed were in no way to be worshiped, God desired that their exposure to the elements would finally convince Israel of her error.
These are apparently popular sayings, widespread among the people.
8:12 Gall to drink: Unsanitary water, the only kind to be had then in the city. While this was a proper corrective response to Israel's sin, they went far beyond this, later in time, by giving Christ, who knew no sin, “wine mingled with gall” (Mt 27:34).
8:17 Vanities is another term for idols.
The seasons of the siege, carried through the summer, not only match well the chronology of the Babylonian invasion (probably that of 597) but highlight how devastating a siege can be. No crops could be grown and harvested that year, while all the inhabitants of the greater territory crowded into the city walls to be saved from the terror.
8:20  Balm: A resin of mastix or terebinth, used for perfumes, medicines, and ointments.

Jeremiah's tears remind us that God's punishments were not without purpose. God deeply cares for all whom He disciplines (Heb 12:5, 6), and He sends His rebuke to correct and transform us.
Jeremiah seeks to withdraw from his people since he is exasperated by their disobedience. “Thus, for wickedness and falsehood, and for deeds, in which they [proceed] from iniquity to iniquity, he reproves their practices; but, because they knew not the Lord, and were faithless, he charges them with unrighteousness” (AthanG).
Dwelling place of serpents: An especially diabolical image, given the habit of dragons or serpents to persecute the saints (Rev 12:7–9).
Boasting in oneself and one's capabilities is here forbidden. In our devotion to God, we are called to boast only in the glory of God or, in the words of the Apostle Paul, “Christ... crucified” (1Co 2:2).
“And to show how those from among the Gentiles were foretold as more true and more believing, we will cite what was said by [Jeremiah] the prophet; for he spoke as follows: ‘Israel is uncircumcised in heart, but the Gentiles are uncircumcised in the flesh’” (Justin).
The gods that did not make heaven: “For ‘by Him were all things made, and without Him was not anything made that was made,’ which His Father also everywhere by the Prophets declares to be especially characteristic of His own Essence. And the Prophets are continually busy on this kind of demonstration, not only of itself, but when they contend against the honor shown to idols; ‘Let the gods perish,’ says one, ‘who have not made heaven and earth’” (JohnChr).
The inhabited world: The Greek term oikoumene refers to the extent of the world that was civilized, not necessarily everywhere people lived. God is therefore the One who makes possible political stability, education, and other blessings of life.
My tabernacle . . . is ruined: Mourning the loss of right worship, the Lord depicts His house in terms of the ancient tabernacle instead of Solomon's temple, which is about to be destroyed. Led by foolish shepherds who no longer seek Him, the people had shunned the pattern of worship that God had given to Moses on the mountain long ago (Ex 25:40). Those who would worship God “in spirit and truth” (Jn 4:24) must not neglect the gift of Holy Tradition handed down in the Scriptures and the Church, lest we be led astray and scattered.
10:20-21 This prayer of Jeremiah is ultimately to be answered at the Judgment. But for now, Jews and Gentiles alike are invited to call upon the name of the Lord.
11:13 Wherefore to Jeremiah also He said, ‘Pray not for this people, for I will not hear thee,’ not as wishing to stop his praying (for He earnestly longs for our salvation), but to terrify them: and this the prophet also seeing did not cease praying” (JohnChr).
Jeremiah here, as elsewhere, serves as a foreshadowing of Christ, the truly innocent lamb who was sacrificed by those who planned to exterminate His entire legacy.
Anathoth: See 1:1. This explains, in part, Christ's saying regarding the rejection of a prophet in his hometown (Lk. 4:24).
12:1 Here Jeremiah takes up a theme dealt with far more extensively in Job (see, for example, Job 12:6).
If we grow weary in the trials of ordinary life, how do we expect to handle swift horses or floods? The answer is, through Christ.
The suffering of the Incarnate God. “Look with awe then at the Lord who was judged. He suffered Himself to be led and carried by soldiers. Pilate sat in judgment, and He who sits on the right hand of the Father, stood and was judged” (CyrJer).
Jeremiah quickly changes his audience to the Gentiles, promising them inclusion among the people of God should they learn to worship Him. The full reality of this was not encountered until the coming of Christ.
13:1 A linen sash was used as a loincloth.
The Euphrates: Although residing in Judah, Jeremiah is commanded to go to Babylon to hide the sash, then return later to uncover it. Although it is feasible Jeremiah took such a trip before the destruction of the city, it is more likely that God transported him. Whether this happened in the body or in the spirit is unclear.
13:7 Behold: The surprise is ironic. Jeremiah knew very well the cloth would be rotten, just as he knew Judah would be ruined by her pride. The rotten sash is a picture of Judah (vv. 10, 11).
This passage may be alternately translated, “If you will not hear it secretly, your soul will weep for your pride.” That is, if you do not read the Law and the covenants spiritually, your soul will be left barren.
13:19 This verse suggests that Judah was so completely conquered, she provided a classic example of how a country would be deported from that time on.
13:26  I will uncover your backside to your face: Physically speaking, this is an impossibility—and therefore we must take it as a spiritual warning. Our backside is uncovered to our face when we become aware that our sins and faults are seen by the whole world!
14:1-10 The prophecy of a drought can refer to either a period without rain (v. 4) or the judgment of God (v. 10), or both.
14:13 Their prophets: Jeremiah identifies here a group of prophets who generally told the ruling class what they wanted to hear. Their prophets, not “our” prophets, suggests distance between them and the Lord.
Returning to the theme of the drought, Jeremiah identifies God with the coming of the rain, which He made.
15:1 God refuses Jeremiah's intercession, but this is not to suggest His punishment was irreversible, since Judah herself, by obeying the Lord, could have averted her own destruction.
Four ways: See Ezk 14:21. The inclusion of beasts highlights the fact that when the Creator is incensed against sinners, not even creation itself can hold back from rising against them.
The sun set ... at noonday: “... plainly announced that obscurcation of the sun which at the time of [Christ's] crucifixion took place from the sixth hour onwards, and that after this event, those days which were their festivals according to the law, and their songs, should be changed into grief and lamentation when they were handed over to the Gentiles” (Iren).
15:18  Deceitful water: St. Cyprian calls this “the resemblance of baptism,” done under “a shadowy pretense.” Presumably, this is a reference to baptisms performed by those who stand outside of communion with the Church.
God answers Jeremiah's prayer (vv. 15–18) for protection from his persecutors very graciously: I am with you to save you (v. 20).
Here Jeremiah serves as a model for virginity, a virtue to be fully enshrined in Christ and His Mother. While in the case of Jeremiah, the virginity undertaken highlights the imminence of captivity, in Christ's time it revealed the imminence of salvation.
Mourning and consolation are forbidden to Jeremiah. But whereas this was commanded to Jeremiah because of the disgrace of the nation, in Christ we will cease to mourn because of the glory of the Resurrection.
16:7  It is in light of the glory of the Resurrection that we Christians mourn the dead in Christ with the bread and cup of the Eucharist.
The Lord promises a restoration to the house of Israel that would eclipse the Exodus from Egypt. In like manner, our delivery from sin by the work of Christ eclipses both!
The fishermen and the hunters are the Babylonians and the Romans.
16:19-21 The repentance of the Gentiles is here foretold, a constant theme in the Book of Jeremiah.
17:1, 2 The shrub here is the tamarisk. St. Basil the Great notes, “it is an aquatic plant [it needs water], and yet it covers the desert. Thus Jeremiah compares it to the worst of characters—the double character.” Later, St. James would write, “a double-minded man [is] unstable in all his ways” (Jam 1:8).
The heart is deep beyond all things: St. John Chrysostom labors the point that only God can know men's hearts, citing Ps 7:9; 1Kg 16:7; C2hr 6:30; and Mt 9:3, 4.
Jeremiah delivers the word of the Lord that Israel should stop violating the Sabbath. The reward for obedience is a gathering of the nations into Jerusalem to offer sacrifice (vv. 21, 22). Although this was done after the exile, it was not completely fulfilled until the Gentiles joined the procession on the Day of Pentecost.
This is the passage referred to by St. Paul in Rom 9:21, and it highlights the Apostle's intention. The ability of the potter to do what he wants with his pots is always present. But God, as the good potter, does with His vessels according to the obedience or disobedience of the vessels. He makes good vessels, but vessels can choose evil and crumble in His hands without His intervention. But out of the rubble, the potter is able to recreate something beautiful.
As the Jews sought to devise a plan against Jeremiah to strike him down, so they also plotted against Christ, to destroy Him (Mk 3:6).
Graveyard: So called because the Israelites had offered their children to Baal and Molech there (vv. 4, 5). Also, this is the place where the people of Judah were to be buried after the siege.
The sin of cannibalism was later confessed by the people of Judah (7:31; Bar 2:3).
20:1 Pashhur: A priest and the first civil authority to try to coerce Jeremiah into giving false prophecy.
This is the song of complaint that Jeremiah offers to God from prison. Although tempted to neglect his call as a prophet, Jeremiah cannot help but act on it (v. 9).
A burst of exaltation in the midst of depression. Jeremiah exemplifies the attitude of hope found among martyrs. In facing evil persecution, the saints were always aware of the overwhelming power and authority of God.
Who brought the good news: This is the same concept as expressed in the NT when a boy was born, that is, the gospel.
21:1  Pashhur: A priest; a different Pashhur from the one mentioned in 20:1.
King of Babylon: Although rarely named in the LXX, Nebuchadnezzar is the one referred to.
The declaration of two paths of life and death was to remind Israel they had abandoned the Law, which also set forth these two ways for the people of Israel (Dt 30:15).
21:13 Sor: The same people who were the recipients of Ezekiel's prophecy in Ezk 26.
Gilead/Lebanon: The former was famous for its spices (8:20); the latter was renowned for its fine cedars.
Shallum: An alternative name for Jehoahaz. The custom of calling one person by different names is found throughout Scripture.
In the place: Egypt (4Kg 12:31–34; C2hr 36:1–4).
They: Not only Ahaz, but all the deceased kings.
The type of death he incurred is recounted in C2hr 36:6.
Zedekiah, the successor to Jeconiah, was his kinsman (2Chr 36:10).
23:3 God promises the increase of His flock without the assistance of the negligent shepherds.
23:4 This verse was fulfilled only in Christ, who puts an end to all fear and terror. He is love, and in perfect love there is no fear (1Jn 4:18).
Behold, days are coming: This phrase indicates the next prophecy deals with a great future event. Raise up for David the Righteous Orient: Christ is the Orient, the perfect light from the East whose Incarnation, death, descent, Resurrection, and Ascension rises to David. We sing of Christ at the sacraments of marriage and ordination, “Orient is His name.”
The Lord our Righteousness is Jesus Christ, who will come that Judah and all people will be saved.
23:16 Speak from their own heart: The ultimate hallmark of a false prophet is that he is the source of his own “divine teaching,” just as heretics are the human inventors of their own novelties.
23:17  Error of his heart is literally, “things they want,” emphasizing that the fault lies in the decisions of the false prophets, not in some outside, compulsory force.
24:1-10  By distinguishing two baskets of figs, the Lord makes it clear that not every single person in the land was to be taken away into captivity, but only the worst. In fact, it seems that as some were to be deported, others of those already exiled were brought back. It may have been in light of this passage that our Lord Jesus Christ commanded us to judge a tree by its fruit (Mt 7:16–20).
25:1 Fourth year: 606/605 BC.
25:3  Thirteenth year: 605/604 BC. Twenty-third year: 595/594 BC.
25:18  My throne: Generally, the throne of a foreign power, but here the throne of God when He comes to include Elam in His inheritance.
By the River Euphrates: This took place when the army of Egypt came against Babylon, but was later defeated in Syria in the fourth year, or 606/605 BC.
Hoping to imitate the river Nile, the king of Egypt planned to cover the earth with Egyptian power.
26:8 Ethiopia/Libya/Lydians: Vassals and allies of Egypt.
Migdol/Memphis: Cities in Egypt. Migdol is on the northeast border of Egypt near the delta; Memphis is close to modern-day Cairo.
Apis is the bull god or chosen calf of Memphis.
Greek sword: Interestingly, the LXX translators deemed it right to use an image of their own time (200 BC) to convey the meaning behind the Hebrew term (600 BC) for a “fierce army.” This sword symbolized the swift ferocity of any ruler who would be comparable to Alexander the Great.
Ammon is the chief god of Thebes, located in upper Egypt.
26:26 God does not discipline His children without purpose, but does so with healing in view. Although most of the Book of Jeremiah deals with Judah's punishment, God always points out that it is righteous and purposeful correction.
This chapter and the following are the longest in Jeremiah and fall at the center of the book. Thus, the promises of the destruction of Babylon evenly split the warnings to Israel, showing that the Book of Jeremiah is not about the destruction of the people of God, but their restoration; not about the triumph of God's enemies, but their demise. After dealing with Egypt, which exiled Jehoahaz, Jeremiah deals with Babylon, which conquered Egypt.
Bel and Merodach are two famous Babylonian deities or idols.
Just as destruction came on Israel from the north, Babylon also falls at the hand of a power from the north: Persia.
The demise of Babylon comes in the repentance of the children of Israel. In like manner, when we repent, our enemy and his demonic forces are routed.
27:25 The vessels of His wrath are political powers with whom God is angry, yet whom He nevertheless uses to accomplish His will on earth. It is in this sense that the same phrase is used by the apostle Paul in Rom 9:22, likely reflecting on the way God used Babylon.
Redemption is carried out by the Lord Almighty, so it should be no wonder that Christ, our Redeemer, is Lord and God.
The islands are either the colonies of Babylon in the Mediterranean, or a reference to her ultimate expansive size.
28:11  King of the Medes: possibly King Cyaxares, later conquered by Cyrus the Great in 500 BC.
28:13 Babylon's fall comes through her own gluttony, a reminder to us all that we place our end in the things we crave, whether God or material goods.
Ararat is an area in modern-day Turkey, where the ark rested (Gn 8:4). The Ashkenaz are the Scythians, a people then located in modern-day Armenia.
Just as he did with Judah, God sends His messenger to Babylon, about to sink or be destroyed, which dramatizes the threat.
The Philistines were also called “foreign tribes” who inhabited the land of Canaan. This descriptive title foreshadows the eventual gathering of all nations, tongues, and tribes as the people of God. St. Ambrose reminds us that calling the Philistines by this name teaches us to love our enemies, since there were far worse names an enemy could be called.
Teman was a grandson of Esau (Gn 36:15).
30:2  Dedan: A town in the desert toward the Arabian peninsula.
Messengers may also be translated “angels.” Either is appropriate, given that the struggle of war was occurring on the spiritual level as well as the political.
Kedar: The descendants of the son of Ishmael (Gn 25:13). The sons of Kedem were associated with the Ammonites (see Ezk 25:4, 10).
Hamath is where King Zedekiah would be sentenced by Nebuchadnezzar (52:27).
Ben-Hadad is a king in Damascus who plundered Israel (4Kg 13:3).
Horns are a dual symbol of power and of a wine cup. God intends to put an end to both their power and their merriment.
Bethel is a reference to the golden calf set up as an idol in Israel (3Kg 12:29).
Although once entrenched in glory and security, Moab will soon be entrenched in a damp place, likely a swamp.
This shout is a cry of dismay made by workers at the winepresses.
Here Jeremiah sums up the previous six chapters, the natural place for such a passage. God's judgment is prophesied for all the nations, including Israel and Judah.
The day of the Lord comes at the end of the age, when judgment is accomplished. This passage must therefore be understood prophetically, since there has never been a time in history when the Lord has judged His people completely over all the earth. Every sin will be slain, every demon vanquished, at the final coming of Christ our King.
This prophecy was given before the destruction of the Temple, the house of the Lord.
Here Jeremiah foreshadows Christ, who was also unjustly slandered, yet allowed the wicked and unjust to have their way with Him and shed innocent blood.
Rulers: This is the first indication in the book that the leadership is beginning to hear Jeremiah's message.
This refers to the prophet Micah (Mic 1:1). The prophecy in question comes from Mic 3:12.
Micah's example of fair treatment is now contrasted with the case of an otherwise unknown prophet who was persecuted to the ends of the earth. As we listen to the prophets of Israel, we likewise read the writings of the Fathers of the Church who faithfully proclaimed God's oracles, interpreting rightly the Holy Scriptures.
This is sound advice for those who give heed to the fortune tellers, false prophets, and cult leaders of our day.
This does not mean that the vessels will never be returned, for they were (Bar 1:8). The false prophets were delivering a false word.
35:1 Fourth year/fifth month: 593 BC.
Hananiah symbolizes an early return of the exiles by breaking Jeremiah's yokes or shackles. Implied here as well is that he freed Jeremiah from his confinement, an act that was calculated to win Jeremiah's support. The true prophet, unlike Hananiah, refuses to heed the flattery and vain promises of men.
The words of the letter: A similar letter was sent by Jeremiah in the Epistle of Jeremiah.
King Zedekiah could send this letter safely since he was essentially a vassal of Babylon at that time.
This passage beautifully summarizes the Christian struggle in this life. We live in a dry and barren land, in exile from our true homeland, which is Christ's holy kingdom. But we learn to live within our exile, enlarging the Church and becoming a blessing even to those hostile to us. The gardens are literally “paradises.” Hence, the passage admonishes planting and cultivating a life that resembles heaven on earth.
Seventy years: Jeremiah speaks both historically and mystically. There was a return of exiles under Cyrus after seventy years. During His earthly ministry, Christ chose seventy men to be heralds of the Gospel (Lk 10:1–20). These seventy lived a godly life of obedience to Christ, suffering martyrdom and spreading the Kingdom—the true regathering from exile in the world.
36:14 A prophecy of the Incarnation, when God the Son truly will appear to us in His flesh.
36:24 The suggestion seems to be that Jeremiah had Zephaniah read aloud his very own rebuke.
This, of course, never happened to fleshly Israel. Only with the coming of Christ were God's people liberated from the control of foreigners.
37:9  David their king is a reference to the Messiah, both the Lord God and the final king of David's line.
A prophecy of the coming of Christ and His judgment. The children (v. 17) are the faithful who enter the Church. Testimonies (v. 17) translates the Greek word martyría, pointing to the martyrs of Christ.
An extended prophecy of the compassion of Christ for the Church.
O virgin of Israel: The renewal of Israel includes moral purity, pointing to the Virgin who truly sanctified Israel by giving birth to Him who is the source of true purity, Christ our God.
The vineyard in Samaria speaks of the establishment of the gospel among the Gentiles.
38:8 The Passover, later to be known as Pascha or Easter. This is an explicit prophecy of the crucifixion of Christ, which happened on the Passover, thereby bringing a great multitude into the kingdom of God.
38:12  The fruitful tree speaks of the cross.
Here we are reminded of the slaughter of the Holy Innocents of Bethlehem (Mt 2:18).
The new planting is the Church, the new Israel, as well as the New Testament (1Co 3:6–8).
In the gospel it is made clear that no one person will be guilty of the sins of another, only of his own sin.
The implanting of the new covenant, the law in the heart, was clearly effected with the coming of Christ (2Co 3:3; Heb 10:15–18).
The prophet points to the giving of the Holy Spirit to the Church so that knowledge of and communion with God can be for all men, not just for holy prophets and kings as in the old covenant.
Tenth year: 587 BC, the beginning of the siege of Jerusalem.
This incident reveals that the prophet had hope in the field he purchased, even though he was aware of the impending disaster. But the purchase took place outside of Jerusalem in an unprotected area, revealing that the Jews were to leave Jerusalem and become servants in Babylon.
The Greek word translated to offer has a sacrificial connotation, the exact word used in the anaphora of the Eucharist. This makes the deed all the more horrible, that Israel saw the death of their children to be an acceptable sacrifice to a god.
Everlasting covenant: After this prophecy, only the covenant of Jesus Christ was of an eternal nature.
Jeremiah emphasizes that the new covenant will be made on the basis of faithfulness, not the letter of the Law.
Christ alone brings healing for our wounds. The service of healing is a sacrament in the Church (see Jam 5:14–16).
The LXX transliterates a generic Semitic word for lord to prevent any confusion resulting from a use of the Greek word kurios, translated “Lord,” a reference to God.
Jeremiah reiterates the prophecy of the coming destruction of the land, linking it this time to slavery and servitude. For Christians, this is a lesson in forgiveness and becoming the servants of others. For, if we do not forgive others, God will not forgive us (Mt 6:14, 15). If we want to become great in the kingdom of God, we must become servants to others (Mk 10:43, 44).
Setting his servant free comes in obedience to the Law (Dt 15:12–15).
The Rechabites were a nomadic people who had been forced by the approaching Babylonian troops to enter Jerusalem, meaning they would endure the siege of the city.
This Jeremiah is different from the prophet, who was commanded not to marry (16:1, 2).
God promises to bless those who obey their father, a point which highlights the apostle Paul's reflection on those who live without the Mosaic Law, yet nevertheless have a law of their own (Rom 2:14, 15).
Fourth year: 606/605 BC.
This chapter chronicles the writing of the words of the Lord that came to Jeremiah on a scroll. This event came early in Jeremiah's ministry.
43:4   Jeremiah enlists Baruch as his scribe to record the words of the Lord on the scroll.
43:5-6 For a reason not known, Jeremiah was not permitted to enter the house of the Lord. Thus, he asked Baruch to read the scroll in his stead.
Sometime after the scroll was read to the people, it was read by Baruch to the rulers of Judah.
Upon hearing the message from the scroll, the rulers' response was twofold: (1) they wanted the king to hear the message; (2) they sent Baruch and Jeremiah into hiding.
The message troubled the king to the extent that he cast the scroll into the fire page by page.
Jeremiah conscripts Baruch to rewrite the scroll, using the occasion to predict the death of King Jehoiakim.
Zedekiah replaces Jehoiakim as ruler in Judah.
44:7-10 The image here plays off the earlier deliverance of Jerusalem under Hezekiah, when 185,000 Assyrians were killed (4Kg 19).
44:12 Buy: Probably the purchase of property mentioned in 39:6–25.
The Greek word here translated embittered is identical to that found in the famous Paschal sermon of St. John Chrysostom: “It [death] was embittered!” From the vantage point of those familiar with that homily, we see the embitterment of death foretold in the anger of the rulers.
Interestingly, it is a Gentile, not a Jew, who pulls Jeremiah from the pit. Throughout the OT we see the willingness of the Gentiles to respond to a servant of the Lord.
45:14-28 Zedekiah is eager to receive Jeremiah's secret counsel, but whatever gratitude he has is not enough to free Jeremiah from prison (v. 28).
Ninth year: 588 BC. These verses are a summary of 52:2–20.
Ebed-Melech is rewarded for his service to Jeremiah (see 45:7–13).
Freed from prison, Jeremiah is allowed to remain in Judah among the people who were left there (v. 6). Mizpah, a town seven miles to the north of Jerusalem, becomes headquarters for Gedaliah's regime.
Johanan warns Gedaliah that Ishmael seeks his life, but the governor does not believe him.
Seventh month: Probably the same year Jerusalem was sacked, 586 BC.
The death of Gedaliah will mark the end of the five-year stay of the Jews in Judah.
Shechem, Shalem, and Samaria: Three areas near Israel in the north of Judah, which had already changed in ethnic composition after the Assyrian deportation.
Hence, Ishmael killed seventy men. Gedaliah himself was mourned by the exiles for those seventy years of exile by an annual fast (Zec 7:5).
Just as Jeremiah was sought out for guidance and to seek God's will, so today the faithful in Christ are encouraged to seek spiritual direction. It appears that at this point, Johanan and his group were serious: We will heed the voice of the Lord our God.
After ten days, the prophet received the word of the Lord, and it was clear: Do not go to Egypt (v. 19).
It appears that in the ten days that elapsed between their question (49:3) and Jeremiah's answer (49:7), Johanan and his followers had decided not to stay in Judah. For as soon as Jeremiah ceased speaking, they said, That is a lie. Recall that in Gn 3:1, the devil called God's direction into question.
Tahpanhes is an Egyptian city bordering Sinai. Johanan and his followers took Jeremiah with them (v. 6) and entered Egypt.
The mention of Nebuchadnezzar puts Johanan and his followers on notice that even Egypt is not a safe haven from the king of Babylon.
51:8 Not only are Jews disobedient to God for entering Egypt, now they revert to worshiping other gods, namely the “queen of heaven” (the goddess Ishtar; see v. 17 and note).
51:16 The rebellion of those in Egypt reaches its lowest ebb when they announce to Jeremiah, We will not listen to you.
Just as the Scriptures speak of “false christs and false prophets” (Mk 13:22), here we have a counterfeit queen of heaven (see note at v. 8). The true queen of heaven is the Mother of God, seated at the right hand of her Son and King (Ps 45:9).
This is Jeremiah's final warning to those in Egypt, and it is not good news. The Lord makes a promise to them: I will visit you for evil (v. 29).
Like Jeremiah, Baruch was evidently taken to Egypt against his will. The Lord assures him, I will give you life (v. 35).
This chapter is a summary of the rise and fall of Zedekiah (vv. 1–9), the destruction of Jerusalem (vv. 10–20), the captives in Babylon (vv. 21–24), and the release of Jehoiachin from prison (vv. 25–28). It parallels almost verbatim 4Kg 24:18–25:30.
52:21 The two priests were Seraiah and Zephaniah (4Kg 25:18).
Thirty-seventh year: Spring 560, in anticipation of the Babylonian new year. Jehoiachin was then 55 years old. Evil-Merodach was the successor (562–560 BC) to Nebuchadnezzar.
Although told that no successor would occupy David's throne (22:30), Jefhoiachin is treated kindly by the Babylonians. This event occurred more than 25 years after the sack of Jerusalem.
1:2 The LXX dates put this event at 581 BC, five years after the Chaldeans sacked Jerusalem. Most scholars believe the Book of Baruch was written about him, not by him, at a time much later than the events the book describes, to honor him.
All the people (v. 4), from noblemen on down, when they heard the words of this book (v. 3), not only experienced repentance, but took up a collection for those who remained in Jerusalem.
The exile in Babylon is noted in Jer 24:1.
The money was for offerings (see also Jer 17:25; 48:5).
God's people have always been called to pray for the . . . king and all who are in authority (see Jer 27:6–8; 36:4–7; Rom 13:1–7; 1Ti 2:1, 2).
The prayer that begins here and goes through 3:8 is quite similar to a prayer in Dan 9:7–15. This prayer is offered by those who stayed behind in Judith (see also 2:4).
1:19-20 Out of . . . Egypt: Though over 1000 years had passed since the children of Israel under Moses escaped from Pharaoh and crossed the Red Sea on dry ground, this miraculous event was a benchmark in their history. Here, the descendants of the fathers of the Exodus confess their national sins since that point in time.
One of the consequences of sin is evil imaginations. In 2Co 10:4–6, St. Paul instructs us to cast them down and bring our thoughts captive to Christ our God.
The cannibalism admitted here includes the children the Jews ate when Jerusalem was besieged; they also sacrificed children to the god Molech (see Jer 7:31; 19:9; Lam 2:10; 4:10; Ezek 5:10; 4Kg 23:10; Dt 28:53).
See Dt 28:13.
The Lord brings calamities upon us in His righteousness for our good, that we might turn back to Him.
When Israel—and the Church—receive God's mercy, the news spreads quickly (see Acts 17:4, 12). The prayer for the whole earth is a prayer for the Church to know . . . the Lord our God.
Bones . . . carried out, prophesied in Jer 8:1–2, suggests the Babylonians desecrated the reliquaries of the patriarchs.
Bones . . . carried out, prophesied in Jer 8:1–2, suggests the Babylonians desecrated the reliquaries of the patriarchs.
2:26 God allows His house to be laid to waste as part of His sinful people's punishment and their restoration (see Jer 7:13–14).
2:35 The everlasting covenant is fulfilled in Christ and His new covenant (Jer 32:38–41; Ezk 36:26–29; Am 9:15; Heb 13:20).
The prayer of the dead of Israel suggests the intercessions of the departed saints with the Lord (see Lk 16:22–31).
The fountain of wisdom is a likely reference to God the Father (see Jer 2:13, where the Father and Son are together depicted as a fountain and living water). In WSir 1:5, the Word is described as the fountain of wisdom (see Lk 2:40, 52; 21:15; Jn 4:13, 14).
3:17-18 Christ alludes to these truths in Mt 6:26–34.
3:20  The young have seen the light, i.e., have been born alive (see Job 3:16).
Here the cosmos is the house of God.
This is a description of the Wisdom of God (1Co 1:24).
This is a description of the Wisdom of God (1Co 1:24).
Here a song begins, continuing through v. 29. Jerusalem appeals to the exiles to endure the punishment until God delivers them from Babylon, symbolizing the coming of Christ “your Savior” (v. 22).
The Eternal One: Although the immediate object of this prophecy is the return from exile, the only glory and radiance that are eternal are those of Christ Himself (see Is 61:1–3).
4:30  He who named you: Scripture does not describe a precise naming of Jerusalem; this refers to the renaming described in 5:4 (see Is 60:14; 62:4; Jer 33:16; Ezk 48:35).
Verse 36 describes the salvation of God as coming from the east, symbolizing the coming of Christ. Verse 37 refers to the return of the exiles.
5:1-9 This discourse points to the glory of the Church in every nation under heaven (v. 3).
5:2 Double robe of righteousness: God's righteousness comes to those living in shame (see 2:6).
See Is 40:4, 5; Eph 5:21–33.
The city is Jerusalem, once full of people but now in captivity in Babylon.
During Lent we pray, “O Lord and Master of our lives . . .” Here, the oppressors have become the master. This captivity is the result of the ungodliness of God's people. A stark picture of life outside of fellowship with God.
Jerusalem remembers tells us the author is looking back to the fall of the city and the grief of her people as they endured deportation to Babylon.
Jerusalem sinned grievously sums up the cause of God's discipline of His people.
Tragically, the phrase the objects of their desire for food is a reference (as in 2:4) to the eating of their own children to stay alive. We ask incredulously, how could they possibly do that? But remember: in our time, we do not eat them; we abort them.
1:18  I provoked His mouth is a reference to breaking the laws God spoke to Moses and thus to His people. From 1:18–22, the “I” is the city of Jerusalem, and the warning for her disobedience was issued and recorded in Dt 28:15–68.
He brought them down: The Greek word suggests a violent smashing.
The Lord became like an enemy is a warning of the gravity of the dread judgment seat of Christ.
When God's people turn on Him, her prophets see no vision from the Lord. Bluntly, heaven shuts its mouth (see Pr 29:18).
2:12 This verse is likely another reference to cannibalism (see 1:11; 2:20, 4:10).
See Jer 33:16 and Bar 5:4.
2:22 In God's judgment, no one will escape.
These verses either start with or contain the word He, a direct reference to God.

There is no doubt in the writer's mind: judgment comes from God, and He is not passive.
Here we see an abrupt change in tone which acknowledges the goodness (v. 22) and mercy (v. 28) of God. The message: No matter the gravity of our sins, or what our enemies have planned for the demise of our souls, our hope is always in the love and mercy of God.
Chapter 4 returns to the distress of Jerusalem. The gold has lost its brightness.
A powerful contrast: Even the serpents, symbolic of the devil and his hosts, nurse their young, but captive Israel is cruel.
Here, Israel is worse than Sodom.
4:7-8 Not only did the people apostatize, the Nazirites became blacker than soot. The Nazirites (Nm 6:2, 19, 20) were the “monks” of Israel who never cut their hair, refused wine, and devoted themselves entirely to God. By this we see that Israel was utterly desolate.
4:13-14 The theme of desolation continues. The prophets, the priests, and the watchmen have all forsaken God.
A barometer of indifference toward God, in both Israel and the Church, is lack of respect for the priests and disdain for the elders.
The Greek word for Anointed is Christos. Christ is symbolized as a victim of the destruction of God's people brought on by their disobedience.
For the punishment of Edom, see Jer 30:1–16.
5:1 What happened to Israel can happen to Christians who disgrace themselves in the sight of God.
The foreigners are not just the Babylonians, but could also be a reference to idols (Jer 5:19).
5:5 In the old covenant and in the new, when we depart from God's will we have no rest.
This prayer offers a glimmer of hope to close the Book of Lamentations. The phrases turn us back to You and we shall be converted tell us this is not merely the request of an individual, but that of a nation.
This verse describes a pagan religious procession such as someone like Daniel would daily witness (see Dan 3:1–7).
Israel must keep her identity pure and distinct. In the same way, the Church, the new Israel, is called to separate herself from the heretics or those willfully estranged from Christ (see 2Co 6:14–17).
This verse describes the important role of the guardian angel, who watches and guides us through the day. For other examples, see Ex 23:20–23; 32:34; Ps 90:11.
The idols are said to be unable to do the very things that the Gospels show Christ doing.
Plated is a reference to wood overlaid with silver and gold.
1:43-44 The petty rivalries and jealousy show that this is just common prostitution masked by false religion.
1:45-46 These verses portray the irony of a mortal creature fashioning his own gods.
1:48-49 These verses portray the irony of powerless gods being saved by the priests who pray to them for blessings and protection.
Revealing the foolishness of their faith, the priests will sacrifice their gods to save their own lives.
Being real and serving a practical purpose makes everything from a king to a pillar to a forest fire superior to a false god and idols that do nothing.
1:68  Compare note on vv. 48, 49.
Purple: Valuable dyed cloth that was a sign of wealth or power.
1:73 The one who is righteous turns from idolatry (see 1Jn 5:21).
St. Gregory the Great comments that after establishing the time and place in history, the Prophet Ezekiel mystically “shows forth the Lord,” for in Christ's thirtieth year He was baptized and the heavens were opened (see Mt 3:17).
St. Gregory writes that Ezekiel recognized the Incarnation of the Only Begotten when he saw the hand of the Lord. The amber signifies Christ, who “tempered” His divinity by taking on humanity, that humanity by grace might take on divinity. “Like amber in the fire, God is made man in persecution.”
Ezekiel identifies the four living creatures as cherubim (10:9–16), the guardians of the throne of God (Ex 25:10–22; 3Kg 6:23–28). Like those of St. John's vision (see Rev 4:6–9), they are seen by the Fathers to typify the Four Evangelists, while their unity in the spirit (vv. 12, 20) illustrates the spread of the gospel.
St. Gregory the Great comments that the man is Matthew, because he begins his Gospel with Christ's genealogy (Mt 1:1). The lion is Mark, “because of the crying in the wilderness” (Mk 1:1). The ox is Luke, “because he started with a sacrifice” (Lk 1:8). The eagle is John, who “stretched toward the very substance of divinity” (Jn 1:1). Gregory also sees in them types of Christ, who became a man in the Incarnation, an ox on the Cross, a lion in the Resurrection, and an eagle in the Ascension. Finally, says Gregory, they symbolize “every one of the elect, who are perfect in the way of God,” whose virtues are reason, self-sacrifice, fortitude, and contemplation of heavenly things.
1:13 The burning coals (v. 13), writes St. Gregory, are “holy men” (see Is 6:6 and note). The lamps signify the light of the gospel (see Jdg 7:16).
The wheels signify Holy Scripture, and the wheel within a wheel illustrates that “the New Testament lay hidden by allegory in the letter of the Old Testament” (GrgGt).
St. Gregory sees in the wings an image of the virtues of the righteous.
The man on the sapphire . . . throne prefigures the Incarnation of the Son of God from the Virgin Mary.
The rainbow images the new covenant (see Gn 9:13–15).
The roll of a book signifies Holy Scripture, which Christ unrolled (Mk 4:34; Lk 24:25). Scripture “is written within by allegory, and without by history; within through spiritual understanding, but without through the plain sense of the letter still befitting the weak” (GrgGt). Lamentation and mourning indicate repentance, while woe points to the Final Judgment (Lk 6:25).
For the faithful, the taste of Christ the Word in our mouth is even sweeter than honey (see Ps 18:10; 118:103; Jer 15:16; Zec 5:1–4; Rev 10:8–11).
Israel rejected Christ, but the Gentiles received Him (Lk 11:29–33).
The gospel spread first by preaching the sound, and later by the Holy Scriptures (the wheels).
The captivity is an icon of the world held captive to sin. Here the prophet foreshadows John the Baptist preaching repentance and baptizing the Jewish faithful at the Jordan. Seven days signifies a time of completion.
3:17-19  The watchman must warn the lawless of the coming judgment, or he will be held accountable for his silence.
The righteous man images the Old Testament faithful, who heeded the prophets' warning and recognized Christ when He came.
After the gospel was preached to the Jews, it was taken to the plain, i.e., the whole world. Ezekiel's being shut up and put in chains points to the cutting off of prophecy to make way for Christ. Note that John the Baptist, the last Old Testament prophet, was put in prison (Mk 1:14); and his father, Zacharias, had his tongue bound (Lk 1:20).
St. Gregory the Great comments that the Prophet is called son of man so that when he is exalted, he might remember his fallen state.
Ezekiel lying bound on his side images the death of Christ, the Lamb of God, who bore the acts of unrighteousness of all humanity.
It would have been unthinkable for Ezekiel to carry out this command as first given. The Apostle Peter made a similar protest (see Acts 10:9–16). But in a striking reverse parallel, Christ made Himself to be sin for our sakes (2Co 5:21), so that all who waste away in their wrongdoings (v. 17) might partake together of the bread of heaven and the water of eternal life.
5:1-4  The hair and its destruction by fire, sword, and wind all point ultimately to the final judgment (compare Job 1:13–22; Is 7:20). The hair sewn into the garment illustrates the faithful remnant who have bound themselves to Christ.
5:5-6 Jerusalem is the Church, which was indeed put . . . in the midst of the nations that she shall speak the gospel of truth.
Even the nations that did not know God had ordinances. This verse points to the presence of the natural law, or free will, in man. See Rom 2:14, 15.
The final fulfillment of this judgment was carried out in the Incarnation, when Christ came to wield the sword of the Spirit against all idolatry.
The Lord's judgment against sin is to withhold mercy, thus allowing the abominations of sin.
8:1-4 Scholars date this Sept. 17, 592 BC. It takes place in exile, in Ezekiel's house near Babylon. His vision of God gives us a heavenly perspective of the glory of the Lord.
8:6  The remainder of this chapter concerns great acts of lawlessness done on temple grounds. Present are idolatry (v. 10), hypocrisy (v. 12), preoccupation with Tammuz, a false god (v. 14), and lastly, sun worship (v. 16). God's verdict? No mercy (v. 18).
These men are messengers of God, and the one man among them prefigures Christ our High Priest, clothed in vestments of righteousness, carrying out the command (v. 11) of the Father.
10:1, 2  As the man in the long robe went between the wheels, so Christ permeates all of Holy Scripture, the Old and New Testaments alike. St. Gregory the Great sees in the coals a type of holy men. See Is 6:6, 7.
The brightness of the Lord's glory refers to His uncreated energies, in which He reveals Himself. These Old Testament theophanies (see Ex 40:34; 3Kg 8:11) are fulfilled and perfected in the glory of the divinity of Christ (Jn 1:14).
10:8-17  See ch. 1 and notes.
Wheel translates the word Gelgel, used in the LXX as a proper noun, a transliteration of the Hebrew glgl. In the Vulgate, St. Jerome translates it “turnings.”
10:17-18 As the glory of the Lord passed from the house to the cherubim, so God's glory departed from the earthly Israel to the heavenly Jerusalem, over and above them.
Ezekiel's miraculous prophetic appearance in Jerusalem must have given Israel's princes quite a shock; even so, they refused to repent. Indeed, Pelatiah dropped dead on the spot (v. 13). Ananias and Sapphira met a similar fate in the New Testament (Acts 5:10). The apostle Philip was transported in a similar way, but this time his audience, a Gentile eunuch, listened and was converted (Acts 8:26–39).
I will give them the land: This prophecy is being fulfilled in the New Israel, which is the Church, composed of both believing Jews and Gentiles (the nations).
Jerusalem was destroyed and its inhabitants taken into captivity in 586 BC, about six years after this prophecy was given.
The ruler is Zedekiah, who ruled from 598–587. He fled Jerusalem by night through a break in the city wall; then he was taken captive and his eyes put out (see 4Kg 25:7 and note).
Christ echoes this passage in His parable of the good steward (Lk 12:42–48).
I, the Lord, shall speak My words points to Christ, the logos of God.
Israel's false prophets in reality see nothing at all.
13:4-5 Self-appointed prophets have no firm foundation of truth, but run after “every wind of doctrine” (Eph 4:14). True prophets discern when a message is from God and not “from their hearts” (v. 3).
Christ condemns the Pharisees with similar language, calling them “whitewashed tombs” (Mt 23:27), while Paul calls the high priest Ananias a “whitewashed wall” (Acts 23:3).
God sometimes uses evil to bring good. For instance, God will cut off the supply of food so that hardship might bring His people back to Him. None but the likes of righteous Noah, Daniel, and Job—all of whom typify Christ—would listen. Yet in His mercy, the Lord leads “sons and daughters” (v. 22), who typify the Church, to salvation.
Chapters 15–17 reveal the passing away of the old covenant and the coming of the new covenant in Christ. Chapters 15 and 17 are parables, while ch. 16 speaks of God's love for lawless Jerusalem. The vine is an image of Israel under the old covenant, which was replaced when Christ, the “true vine,” came (see Jn 15:1–6). The branches in the forest typify the Gentile nations from which believers will be “grafted into” the vine (see Rom 11:17–25).
A moving account of God's mercy upon a people stricken with perversity of soul (v. 5). Water, oil, and fine linen are Old Testament images pointing to baptism.
Like mother, like daughter! A sobering parable of how ungodly parents beget lawless children.
Though we have dishonored God, still He will remember us when we turn to Him. This calls to mind the repentant thief who called out to Christ, “Remember me when You come into Your kingdom” (Lk 23:42).
This parable was fulfilled historically when Israel went into the Babylonian captivity.

Some scholars say that the first great eagle is Nebuchadnezzar (v. 3), the second (v. 7) Pharaoh.
As the branches were planted on Israel's mountain, so the Gentile Church (the humble tree) grew out of earthly Israel (the high tree).
This chapter deals with our relationship with God. The soul who sins, he shall die (v. 4): Each person is guilty only of his or her own sins. Man inherited death and a tendency to sin from Adam (Rom 5:12); but human nature, though stained by the fall, remains in the image of God (v. 19). A man may turn away from righteousness (v. 24), but he is also capable of seeking God's grace and experiencing a new heart and a new spirit (v. 31; see 11:17–25).
18:32  See 1Ti 2:4.
The mother lion refers to Judah. The two young lions (v. 5) are Jehoahaz and Jehoiachin, the last kings to reign in Judah (4Kg 23:34; 24:12). The lamentation is taken up because the Davidic line, through which the Messiah was to come, was feared to end. But the faithful Jews would have found renewed hope in this amazing prophecy, for it had been promised long ago by their father Jacob that the rod of strength, the scepter (vv. 11, 14), would not depart from Judah until the Messiah came (Gn 49:9–12).
This is the introduction to a chapter that describes Israel's history of lawlessness.
20:29 Bamah: There is a play on words here: abamah means “high place” in Hebrew; bema in Greek means the same. St. Jerome translates this as excelsum (“the exalted place”), reflecting this connection. But Israel used this high place for idolatry (v. 28) and abominations (v. 30).
A prophecy fulfilled ultimately in the Church. The scepter (v. 37) promises Christ, a new king for the people of God. Those who revolted (v. 38) will be culled out, while those who know . . . the Lord will find the way (v. 44).
To be sure that Israel understands, the Lord restates His warning to the unrighteous and lawless, saying I will draw my sword.
21:23-25 The king of Babylon is Nebuchadnezzar, who will use his sword against Rabbath, the main city of Ammon, and against Jerusalem.
The city of blood is Jerusalem, an especially tragic description since the literal meaning of Jerusalem is “possession of peace.”
22:7 From here to v. 12, seven times the phrase within you is used, underscoring not only the grievous sins, but the fact that these were committed in the Holy City.
These two sisters image all who turn from God to satisfy their own desires. Oholah (i.e., Samaria) is like those who do not have the Law (Rom 1:23), yet despise the natural law within them (Rom 1:32). Oholibah (i.e., Judah) is like those who have the Law, yet “dishonor God through breaking the law” (Rom 2:23). The righteous men (vv. 45–49) typify the apostles, who preached to both Jew and Gentile (Rom 3:30).
This parable speaks the coming judgment of Jerusalem, the house which provokes.
Ezekiel's loss of his wife (v. 18) speaks of the passing away of Israel, whose husband was the Lord (Is 54:5). See 33:21–33 and note.
These chapters describe God's judgment on five Gentile nations: Ammon, Moab, Edom (all in modern-day Jordan); Tyre (Lebanon), and the Cretans (Crete). The gospel of Christ was later brought to these places, and the Church is present in these countries to this day.
26:7  Nebuchadnezzar may be king of kings, but Jesus Christ is KING OF KINGS (Rev 19:16).
Some Church Fathers interpret this lamentation (through 28:26) as imaging the fall of Lucifer and his angels (also see Is 14:12) and the overthrow of pride by the preaching of the gospel. King Hiram of Tyre had been friendly with Israel (3Kg 5); yet by the time of the captivity Tyre was set against Jerusalem (26:2). Christ began to fulfill this judgment when He cast the demon out of the Syro-Phoenician's daughter (Mk 7:24–30). After Pentecost, the gospel spread rapidly to this region (Acts 21:3–5).
The judgment against Pharaoh and Egypt illustrates the destruction of demonic strongholds through baptism. As the rivers (v. 3) belonged to Pharaoh, so the dragon (v. 3), the devil, held sway on the earth until Christ destroyed him in the waters of the Jordan (see also Ex 14:27–30). The horn (v. 21) is a symbol for Christ.
In the days of the Captivity, Egypt and Ethiopia stood against God's purposes. But after Pentecost, these nations were blessed with the establishment of the Church among the Gentiles. Indeed, the Ethiopian eunuch confessed that “Jesus Christ is the Son of God” when Philip appeared to him (Acts 8:26–39).
These verses are a description of Pharaoh, set forth as a tall tree in Lebanon. Some scholars believe that Assyria is a copying error, and that this word should be “cedar,” as the two words are very similar in Hebrew.
Pharaoh's sin was pride (he was exalted), and the ruler of the nations is Nebuchadnezzar.
32:1-32  The lamentation primarily for Pharaoh comes first (vv. 1–16); the lament primarily for Egypt in her descent into the pit closes this chapter (vv. 17–32).
Ultimately the trumpet is the preaching of the gospel and the watchman is the preacher. Those who know the truth and do not warn others will be judged more harshly than those who die in their lawlessness because they have not heard.
For the goodness and the loving-kindness of God, and His boundless riches, hold righteous and sinless the man who, as Ezekiel tells, repents of sins; and reckons sinful, unrighteous, and impious the man who falls away from piety and righteousness to unrighteousness and ungodliness. Wherefore also our Lord Jesus Christ said, ‘In whatsoever things I shall take you, in these I shall judge you’” (Justin; compare Jn 12:47, 48).
Ezekiel's mouth was opened (v. 22) when Jerusalem was taken captive, while the kingly line of Judah went silent until the coming of Christ (see Gn 49:9–12). St. Zacharias, the priest who was made mute because of his unbelief, was given back his voice when his son John the Baptist was born (Lk 1:5–20, 57–79). Also see 3:22–27; 19:1–14 and notes.
34:1-31 It is appropriate that immediately after regaining his voice, the prophet condemns the false shepherds and prophesies the coming of the Good Shepherd, Christ, and the establishment of His sheep (v. 31), the Church. Compare Jn 10; Lk 15:4–7; 19:17.
Here is an image of Christ shepherding His sheep.
34:17-22 Compare Mt 23:32, 33, where Christ echoes His own words given here to the prophet.
My servant David clearly images Christ the Good Shepherd.
Mount Seir is Edom (v. 15), where Esau, brother of Jacob, settled (Gn 36:8). See Dt 2:1–6 and note.
The judgment continues against Edom, which today is southern Jordan.
This prophecy is ultimately fulfilled in the Church, which is the New Israel.
The earthly Israel is also representative of fallen humanity, which has desecrated God's holy name (v. 21). But the Lord will gather (v. 24) both Jew and Gentile from among the nations, and with them establish His Church.
This passage is the Great Doxology read at Matins on Great and Holy Saturday. The Fathers teach that it prophesies the Final Resurrection. “Great is the lovingkindness of the Lord, that the prophet is taken as a witness of the future resurrection, that we, too might see it with his eyes. . . . We notice here how the operations of the Spirit of life are again resumed; we know after what manner the dead are raised from the opening tombs. . . . And finally, he who has believed that the dead shall rise again ‘in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump (for the trumpet shall sound). . . . shall be caught up among the first in the clouds to meet Christ in the air’; he who has not believed shall be left, and subject himself to the sentence by his own unbelief” (AmbM).

“As we at once perceive that the Creator (Demiurgo) is in this passage represented as vivifying our dead bodies, and promising resurrection to them, and resuscitation from their sepulchers and tombs, conferring upon them immortality also (He says, ‘For as the tree of life, so shall their days be’), He is shown to be the only God who accomplishes these things, and as Himself the good Father, benevolently conferring life upon those who have not life from themselves” (Iren).
“Ezekiel put together the sticks, the two in one: in the two beams of the Cross, their staves have ceased. The two sticks, as it were wings, bore the people: lo! his two staves were broken, even as his wings. The bosom and wings of the Cross, He opened in mercy: its pinions bowed and bore the nations, to go to Eden. It is akin to the Tree of Life, and unto the son of its stock: it leads its beloved that on its boughs, they may feed on its fruits” (EphS).
The names of these nations are not meant to lead us to specific historical circumstances or places, whether past, present, or future; rather, they should be viewed as representing all the enemies of God, which have been persecuting His Church since the beginning. Indeed, St. Gregory the Great remarks that, where that which comes from the south is taken to be a symbol for the warmth of the Holy Spirit, that which comes from the north is taken to mean the devil, “because the former loosens with heat and the latter constrains with cold.” The Church takes the biblical term the last days (38:16) to mean the time since Pentecost, the Church age, though there will be a final battle at the end of the age, after which Satan will be cast into the abyss forever (Rev 20:10). Gog and Magog: See Rev 20:8–10 and note.
St. Gregory the Great sees Christ in both the high mountain and the man. The city is the heavenly Jerusalem, the Church (Heb 12:22). The builder's cord symbolizes the truth taught by the apostles. The measuring rod signifies Holy Scripture. Christ stood at the gate “because in His humanity He appeared visible, and in His divinity He remained unseen” (GrgGt). Compare Rev 21:9–27.
St. Gregory the Great sees in the wall a type of the Incarnation in the womb of the Virgin (see Is 26:1); indeed, Church hymns to the Theotokos call her “a wall unshaken.”

Six cubits represent the active life, “because God completed all His works on the sixth day.” A handbreadth, which is “from the seventh, but falls short,” signifies the contemplative life.
St. Gregory the Great interprets the meaning of the gates in four ways: as signifying Christ (Jn 10:1, 2), the preachers of truth (Rev 21:21), the Scriptures, and the faith. The seven stairs (v. 6) signify the “sevenfold grace of the Holy Spirit” (see Is 11:2, 3). The chambers are “the hearts of those whose soul is joined through love with the Unseen Bridegroom.” The length, he writes, signifies longing for God, and the breadth is love for neighbor. Five cubits (v. 7) signifies the five outer senses. Eight cubits (v. 9) signifies spiritual perfection and the final day of resurrection. Two cubits illustrates a life that is “led daily through charity to love of God and neighbor alike.”
Three ... chambers on each side signifies that the hearts of both Old and New Testament faithful are “kindled with the love of the Trinity” (GrgGt). The ten cubits (v. 11) points to the perfection of the Law as seen in the Ten Commandments, while the thirteen cubits (v. 11) illustrates the increased knowledge of the Trinity revealed in Christ.
Fifty (seven squared plus one) signifies eternal rest, “because our every perfection will be in the contemplation of the One in the vision of whom there will be for us no lack of salvation and joy. Hence the Jubilee, i.e., the fiftieth year, was also given for rest” (GrgGt; see Lv 25 and notes).
Hidden windows, like icons, provide glimpses of heavenly glory, which enlighten the soul through contemplation; while palm trees signify the rewards of victory (Jn 12:13; Rev 7:9).
St. Gregory sees the north gate as being for the Gentiles, beginners, and repentant sinners; while the south gate is for believing Jews who had the Law, as well as “the fervent in spirit who, kindled by the heat of the Holy Spirit, grow up in virtues as in the noonday light.”
St. Gregory sees the outer gates as imaging the Old Testament prophets, and the inner gates as imaging the Holy Apostles.
40:31-33  The east gate signifies Christ's entrance into the world through the womb of the Theotokos (see 44:1–4 and note). Eight steps “signify the mysteries of that life which the perfect understand in their secret hearts; those who already know how mentally to transcend all temporal things; who wholly despise the present life which turns through a cycle of seven days; who feed on inward contemplation” (GrgGt).
Here the vision concerns the heavenly altar (v. 46), imaged in the Divine Liturgy, where the saints offer their whole being to God in praise and worship. See Heb 13:10–19 and notes. The court is the foursquare fullness of the Church, which operates in faith, hope, charity, and good works.
41:1-6 The prophet is brought into the inner sanctuary, which is an image of the human soul. The temple is a type of the Theotokos, who held God the Word in her womb. For more on this imagery, see Heb 9. The untouched wall also images the Theotokos. See 40:5–7; 43:1–3 and notes.
The side chambers that became wider as they went up illustrate the heart that grows by grace into the likeness of God, as well as the growth and unity of the Church united in Christ.
41:11-12 North . . . south: See 40:20, 27 and notes. The light is the light of Christ present in every human being (Jn. 1:9). The open space within the house brings to mind a hymn we sing to the Theotokos: “Your womb is more spacious than the heavens.”
41:16 The shaded light illustrates that the light of Christ's glory is revealed to man as far as he is able to bear it; for while we are on this earth, we see as in a mirror dimly (1Co 13:12). Compare the term fishnet to 47:10; Jn 21:3–6. The wood panels point to Christ's humanity (see Ex 25:10, 11 and note).
The two faces of the cherubim signify Christ as man and as lion of Judah (see Gn 49:9–12 and note).
Five halls in the outer court, to the east, illustrate the five human senses directed toward Christ. The halls of ten (i.e., the Law) by one hundred (i.e., perfection) cubits, together with the upper walkways, illustrate a lifetime of obedience, good works, and repentance leading upward to heaven. Fifty: See 40:15 and note.
42:9, 10 Christ is the Door, the Orient (east), the light, the head, and the way for all who enter the heavenly places.
42:13-14 Under the Law, the holy place was accessible only to the priests, but in Christ, all who draw near in faith and love may partake of the most holy things.
He measured the house all around: Compare Rev 21:9–27.
The prophet was led ... out from the east gate, the glory of the Lord entered, and then the gate was shut (44:1). According to the Fathers, this passage, together with 44:1–5, foreshadows the Incarnation, when the Holy Spirit overshadowed the Virgin in the Temple and the Son of God was conceived in her womb (Lk 1:26–38). The sound of many voices (v. 2) is echoed by the “multitude of the heavenly host” announcing the Advent of Christ to the shepherds (Lk 2:13).
The altar here, as well as the altar in the Church, images the heavenly altar. The altar is “the soul of the righteous man, which lays upon itself before His eyes as many sacrifices as it has done good deeds. And what is the drain of the altar but the patience of good men, which, while it humbles the mind to endure adversities, shows it to be placed low down after the manner of a ditch? . . . Well, too, this same trench is directed to be of one cubit, because, if patience fails not, the measure of unity is preserved” (GrGt). The great mercy seat is clearly a type of Christ.
The Levites typify the clergy who serve at the altar in the Church (see Nm 8:5–25 and note). The burnt offerings point to Christ's sacrifice on the Cross for our salvation (v. 27).
The eastern outer gate is seen by the Fathers as the womb of the Virgin, which was shut because the Lord God had entered by it. The Church sees this passage as describing the ever-virginity of Mary. Though many modern denominations reject this doctrine, it was held to be true by Luther, Calvin, and John Wesley. St. Jerome writes that the east gate images the Virgin Mary, whose womb is “always shut and always shining, and either concealing or revealing the Holy of Holies; and through her ‘the Sun of Righteousness,’ our ‘high priest after the order of Melchizedek,’ goes in and out.” At the Entry of the Theotokos into the Temple we sing, “Today the house of God receives the Gate through which no one may pass; so it has brought an end to the worship commanded by the shadow of the Law.” See 43:1–12 and note.
The Law was broken by the Jews, but under the New Covenant, foreign sons—uncircumcised Gentiles (v. 7)—became baptized Christians.
These physically impractical divisions of the land and the instructions concerning liturgical worship make sense only in the light of their fulfillment in Christ and His Church. The one sheep (v. 15), the young bull (v. 18), and the prince (v. 16) are all types of Christ, our possession (v. 8), who made atonement (v. 18) for His Church. The Paschal Feast (v. 21), or Passover (see Nm 28:16 and note), is fulfilled whenever we celebrate Christ's Resurrection.
With the Resurrection of Christ, the Sabbath, which was the seventh day, has become the day of rest and preparation for the Eighth Day, or Sunday (see Acts 20:7). During the Divine Liturgy, the people gather to worship (v. 9) the Lord and to make a grain offering in the form of bread and wine. The oil (v. 14) signifies the presence of the Holy Spirit. In response, Christ the Prince (v. 8), the Lamb of God, enters and is in our midst (v. 10). Just as the Prince goes in and out (v. 8) by the east gate, so Christ came into the world by taking His flesh from His Mother, the Most Holy Theotokos (see 44:1–4 and note).
47:1-23 A vision applying to holy baptism, the coming of the Holy Spirit, the preaching of the apostles (compare v. 10 to Jn 21:6), and the growth of the Church from both Jew and Gentile believers (resident aliens, vv. 21–23). “In the vision of the prophet Ezekiel there is seen above the cherubim a crystal stretched forth, that is, the compressed and denser waters. The first living beings come out of the waters; and believers soar out of the laver with wings to heaven [1:22–25]. . . . In Eden a garden is planted, and a fountain in the midst of it parts into four heads [Gn 2:10]. This is the same fountain which Ezekiel later on describes as issuing out of the temple and flowing towards the rising of the sun, until it heals the bitter waters and quickens those that are dead” (Jerome).
This chapter has been and continues to be fulfilled since Pentecost, when the Church was established and began to “inherit the land,” growing with Christ in its center (v. 10) until it fills the earth on the final day. The Levites typify the clergy of the Church, and the workers (v. 19) are the faithful. These cultivate the land by good works, bringing the firstfruits of their labor into the Lord's house whenever we gather together to worship Him in Spirit and in truth.
The name of the city is the New Jerusalem (Rev 3:12), the Church, which has been and is now “continuing” (Heb 13:14) from the day on which Christ took His place in her midst. On the final day, when the Lord comes for His Bride, those who overcome will receive a “new name” (Rev 2:17)—the name of Christ revealed—on their foreheads (Rev 22:4).
Susanna, like so many other Old Testament heroines, can be seen to typify the Church, and Daniel (v. 44), her deliverer, typifies Christ. The two elders (v. 5) are like the powers of darkness, which seek to lead the godly astray.
Susanna in the garden echoes Eve in the Garden of Eden, but her righteousness surpasses Eve's because she resists temptation.
St. Hippolytus of Rome sees Susanna as a type of the Church, the Bride of Christ, persecuted by the two elders, representing the Jews and the pagans. In his commentary on Daniel he writes, “And [Susanna] said to her maids, ‘Bring me oil.’ Indeed, faith and love prepare oil and cleansing unguents for those who are washed. But what were these unguents if not the commands of the Holy Word? And what the oil, if not the power of the Holy Spirit? It is with these, after the washing [that is, baptism], that believers are anointed as with a sweet-smelling oil. All these things were prefigured through the blessed Susanna for our sakes, so that we of the present time who believe in God might not regard as strange the things which are now done in the Church, and that we might believe that all of them have been set forth in figures by the patriarchs.”
The elders played the role of witnesses and laid their hands on the head of the accused in accordance with the Torah (Lv 24:14).
St. Ignatius argues from this passage that the age of a bishop is immaterial; a young bishop must be reverenced like an older one, since Daniel was given a holy spirit at only twelve years of age, enabling him to convict the elders of false witness and of lusting after the beauty of another man's wife.
The third year in the rule of Jehoiakim puts this book at 606 BC.
The Gentiles in Daniel's time taught the Jews their Babylonian language and literature that they might serve Nebuchadnezzar.
The Church takes note that the Hebrew youths were blessed by God through holy fasting. During Great Lent we sing, “What quenched the fire [see 3:21–27]? What stopped the mouths of the wild beasts [see 6:16–23]? It was fasting that delivered the children from the furnace and Daniel the prophet from the jaws of the lions. Brethren, let us also fast like them.”
1:21 King Cyrus's first year of reigning over the Persians is 538 BC.
Second year: 604 BC. Nebuchadnezzar's dreams could not be told or interpreted by the Chaldean sorcerers, just as man's wisdom can neither tell nor interpret the mystery of his own existence.
Daniel, who both tells and interprets the dream, is a figure of Christ, who alone is able both to reveal and to solve man's predicament.
Both Hippolytus and Eusebius see parallels between Nebuchadnezzar's dream and Daniel's vision (see ch. 7). Eusebius comments that it is fitting for a proud, earthly-minded king to “compare the life and substance of all men to a great image.” The dream was given to teach him to “lay aside his pride in himself, that he might understand that there is nothing stable among men, but only that which is the appointed end of all things—the kingdom of God.”

According to the Fathers, the golden head (v. 32) was Nebuchadnezzar's Babylon. The silver chest and arms (v. 32) represent the 245-year supremacy of the Medo-Persians, beginning with Cyrus in 539 BC. The stomach and thighs of copper (v. 32) represent Alexander the Great and his Greek empire, established about 330 BC. Next came the brutal Roman Empire, represented by the legs of iron (v. 33). According to Hippolytus, the feet of iron and clay (v. 33) correspond with the “ten horns” in Daniel's vision, and represent ten nations after Rome (see 7:8, 24, 25 and note). Just as the stone struck the feet and overtook these governments, so the gospel spread to all the nations of the Gentiles (vv. 34, 35). Finally this stone, the Church, becomes a great mountain as the gospel fills the earth.
Blessed Augustine writes that the mountain which grew out of a small stone is the kingdom of God, present in the One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church. The Church's beginnings were indeed small, yet the Church has spread throughout the world.
St. Hippolytus sees in Daniel a type of Christ. “How great is the power of God, beloved, that one who a little before was doomed to death with the other wise men of Babylon, should now be worshiped by the king, not as a man but as God!”
Like Christ's, Daniel's humility (v. 30) brings him favor with God and men.
This passage contains a striking reverse parallel. Under the Old Covenant, the whole world (represented by Babylon), except for the Jewish faithful (represented by the three youths), was filled with idolatry, but under the New Covenant, the Gentile nations will come to worship the one true God of Israel.
A Nativity hymn in the Church reveals the profound typology in this passage: “The children of the Old Covenant who walked in the fire, yet were not burnt, prefigured the womb of the Maiden, which remained sealed when she gave birth in fashion past nature.” St. John Cassian likens the furnace (v. 19) to the passions of our flesh, which constantly threaten to destroy us; however, these flames can be extinguished through zeal for God, continual repentance, and fasting.
In the LXX, the Prayer of Azariah and the Hymn of the Three Young Men are placed after 3:24. Hananiah, Azariah, and Mishael are the original Hebrew names of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (1:6, 7).
This prayer is liturgical in nature and includes verses and phrases from throughout the Old Testament. It includes praise to God (v. 26), acknowledgment that God's judgment is true (vv. 27, 28), confession of sin (vv. 29, 30), request for deliverance in remembrance of the covenant (vv. 34–36), a plea for mercy (vv. 38–43), and for victory over enemies (vv. 44, 45).
3:46-50  This brief commentary between the Prayer and the Hymn is repeated and expanded in vv. 91–97. “See how even the fire appears intelligent, as if it recognized and punished the guilty. For it did not touch the servants of God, but it consumed the unbelieving and impious Chaldeans” (Hippol).
A fragment from the Fathers remarks that we may marvel at the Hymn of the Three Young Men, “how they enumerated all created things, so that not one of them might be reckoned free and independent in itself. But, summing up and naming them all together, both things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, they showed them to be all the servants of God, who created all things by the Word, that no one should boast that any of the creatures was without birth and beginning.”
The spirits and souls of the righteous dead continue to give praise to God forever, throughout the ages.
St. Hippolytus writes that the king's recognition of the fourth man in the furnace was a sign that the Gentiles would recognize the Incarnate Word when He came. “The three youths he thus called by name. But he found no name by which to call the fourth. For He was not yet that Jesus born of the Virgin.” St. Jerome comments that the presence of the Son of God in the furnace is a type of Christ's descent into Hades, where the souls of the dead were imprisoned, that He might deliver the righteous faithful by breaking the chains of death.
Both Nebuchadnezzar's dream and his experience that follows reveal how God humbles the proud and then raises him up again. Fear and terror can be seen as God's mercy, for the “fear of God is the beginning of wisdom” (Pr 1:7).
This passage brings great comfort to believers: The Most High God reigns over the affairs of rulers and nations, for the tree to be cut down is the king (see v. 25).
The mark of a true prophet is that he tells the unadulterated truth at the risk of his own discomfort and his very life.
The king's change of heart is encouragement to intercede “for kings and all who are in authority” (1Ti 2:2).
St. Jerome remarks that “vice always glories in defiling what is noble.” He sees in Belshazzar's blatant misuse of the holy vessels a type of the misuse and twisting of Scripture by heretics for the purpose of drawing others into false doctrine and worship.
6:2-3 Governors were provincial rulers, often despotic. Daniel was one of three administrators above these who reported directly to Darius.
The enemies of God historically have stopped at nothing to try to overthrow His kingdom and His servants. St. Paul calls such schemes “the wiles [strategies] of the devil” (Eph 6:11).
St. Ephraim of Syria writes that both the OT Daniel and the NT Lazarus (see Jn 11:1–45) illustrate Christ in His tomb. “A type of You therefore was Daniel, and also Lazarus; one in the den, which the Gentiles sealed up, and one in the sepulchre, that the people opened. Lo! their signs and their seals reproved them. Their mouth would have been open, if they had left Your sepulchre open. But they went away because they had shut Your sepulchre and sealed it, and closed up their own mouths. Yes, they closed it, and when they had senselessly covered Your sepulchre, all the slanderers covered their own heads. But in Your Resurrection You persuaded them concerning Your Birth; since the womb was sealed, and the sepulchre closed up; being alike pure in the womb, and living in the sepulchre. The womb and the sepulchre being sealed were witnesses unto You.”
Note how a pagan king kept vigil and fasted while his friend Daniel was in danger.
Signs are performed by God among unbelieving peoples so that the worship and word of the one true God may be proclaimed with power, as shown by Darius's new decree (vv. 26, 27).
St. Aphrahat comments that the great sea (the Mediterranean Sea) is symbolic of the world, and “these four great beasts (v. 3) are the four kingdoms signified above” (see text and notes at 2:25–49). The lioness with eagle's wings (v. 4) is the Babylonian Empire; the bear rose up on one side (v. 5) because when the kingdom of Media and Persia arose, it arose in the east. Hippolytus sees the three ribs as being the Medes, the Assyrians, and the Babylonians. They are also often identified with Lydia, Babylon, and Egypt, all of which were conquered and reduced to a single realm by the Persians under Cyrus and his son, Cambyses. The Fathers agree the leopard is Alexander the Great, and the four wings and four heads (v. 6) are his four generals (see 8:5–14 and note). The fourth beast (v. 7) is seen to be the Roman Empire, which subdued the world with its strength. Note that the four heavenly beasts of St. John's vision far surpass these temporary, earthly beasts (see Rev 4:6, 7 and note; see also Ezk 1:5, 21). Some of the Fathers say that the ten horns prophesy nations that will rise up in the last days.
Dan 7:8, 24, 25: The little horn is seen to be the antichrist, an eleventh king who shall appear suddenly in the midst of the ten horns, seizing power through magic and sorcery. He will exalt himself as God and make war on the Church (v. 11). But Christ will deliver the Church and establish God's everlasting kingdom. The Orthodox response to the prophetic teaching of the Scriptures is not to fear, or to try to second-guess God's timetable, but rather to practice repentance and watchfulness against sin and to engage in spreading the gospel.
Daniel's vision is similar to several aspects of St. John's Revelation, including the thrones (see Rev 4:2–6 and notes), the multitude of worshipping angels and other creatures (see Rev 5:11), and the books (v. 10; see also Rev 20:12 and note).
Daniel's vision of the Ancient of Days is that of the Second Coming of Christ, the Son of Man, in glory.
A time, times, and half a time refers to the “short time” (three and a half years) of tribulation that will befall the faithful just prior to the end of the age (see 12:7 and note; Rev 12:7–16 and notes).
Daniel's vision occurred about 551 BC. The ram (v. 3) represents Darius and the rule of the Medes and Persians (v. 20), which ended with the death of Belshazzar in 538. The male goat (v. 5) represents the conquests of the Greeks (v. 21) up until the time of the Romans, about 64 BC.
When Alexander's rule was broken (v. 8) when he was only 33, his four generals divided up his empire among themselves: Ptolemy I in Egypt; Seleucus I in Asia; Lysimachus in Asia Minor; and Cassander in Macedonia. The strong horn (v. 9) is seen to represent Antiochus IV Epiphanes, who took the Seleucid kingdom in 175 BC. He put an end to temple sacrifice and set up a statue of Jupiter in the holy temple in Jerusalem.
The temple was cleansed (v. 14) under Judas Maccabeus after he had led the Jews to victory over the Syrians. St. Jerome says that most church commentators see a partial fulfillment of these events in the persecution of Antiochus, but that the passage also points to the antichrist, the king who shall arise (v. 23). The antichrist is himself a type of all those who raise themselves up against Christ. Thus, his downfall at Christ's Second Coming symbolizes the final destruction of all evil and the realization of Christ's eternal kingdom (see 2Th 2:3–12 and note).
The things, therefore, which of old were sealed, are now by the grace of God the Lord all open to the saints, for He was Himself the perfect Seal, and the Church is the key. . . . But to Christ it was not said ‘seal,’ but ‘loose’ the things bound of old; in order that, by His grace, we might know the will of the Father, and believe upon Him whom He has sent for the salvation of men, Jesus our Lord” (Hippol).
We sinned: In the spirit of true intercessory prayer, Daniel takes on himself the sins of the people and repents before the Lord, begging His mercy for their sakes.
This is as clear in defining sin as any passage in the Scriptures. St. Paul offers a summary of Daniel's words: “All have sinned and fall short of the glory of God” (Rom 3:23).
The Epistle of Barnabas (ch. 16) observes that this passage was fulfilled when the temple (the sanctuary, v. 26) was destroyed by the Romans in AD 70. But Barnabas also points out that a true temple remains, the Body of Christ, a spiritual temple in which God truly dwells. Seventy weeks is interpreted to mean seventy weeks of years, or 490 years (seventy times seven years). This prophecy applies also to Jeremiah's “seventy years” (see 9:2; Jer 25:11, 12; 29:10).

According to Hippolytus, Daniel's vision concerned the time when the temple would be rebuilt, as well as the time of the coming of the Messiah. First, the Jews would return and resume sacrifice after seventy years of captivity. “Having mentioned therefore seventy weeks, and having divided them into two parts, in order that what was spoken by him to the prophet might be better understood, he proceeds thus, until Messiah the Prince there shall be seven weeks, which make forty-nine years. It was in the twenty-first year [of Nebuchadnezzar's reign] that Daniel saw these things in Babylon. Hence, the forty-nine years added to the twenty-one, make up the seventy years, of which the blessed Jeremiah spoke” (Jer 25:11). Second, Jesus the Messiah would be crucified in AD 30, about 490 years (seventy weeks) after Artaxerxes commissioned Ezra to rebuild Jerusalem in 458 BC (2Ez 7:7, 8).
Hippolytus comments that after “Christ is come, and the gospel is preached in every place, the times being then accomplished, there will remain only one week, the last, in which Elias will appear, and Enoch. And in the midst of it the abomination of desolations will be manifested, that is, Antichrist, announcing desolation to the world. And when he comes, the sacrifice and oblation will be removed, which now are offered to God in every place by the nations” (see Mt 24:15 and note).
10:1 The third year of Cyrus was 533 BC.
Daniel's season of fasting and mourning is echoed by the faithful during the time of Great Lent, a season of “bright sadness.”
St. Hippolytus writes that the Father “sent His own Word to show what should happen by Him. And that took place, indeed, by the great river. For it was meet that the Son should be manifested there, where also He was to remove sins.” Other commentators see this figure as the Archangel Gabriel (9:21).
“Behold how much the piety of a righteous man avails, that to him alone, as to one worthy, things not yet to be manifested in the world should be revealed” (Hippol).
10:16 As with Isaiah's vision (Is 6:7), the phrase touched my lips has eucharistic overtones.
Daniel's prophecies in this chapter were fulfilled with astonishing power and strength in the centuries after he lived.
Four kings indeed arose in Persia after Cyrus: Cambyses, Smerdis III, Darius IV, and Xerxes, who led the Persians against the Greeks in about 485–465 BC.
After his death in 320 BC, the kingdom of Alexander the Great was divided among his four generals.
Ptolemy I Soter was the king of the south, or Egypt. One of his rulers may refer to Ptolemy's son, Ptolemy II Philadelphus, or else Seleucus Nicator, another of Alexander's generals, who allied with Ptolemy I Soter and later gained power over him.
This verse prophesies Bernice, daughter of Ptolemy II Philadelphus. She could not retain her power when her father died, and was assassinated along with those who strengthened her. It was under Ptolemy II Philadelphus, king of Egypt from 287–247 BC, that the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament was begun.
11:7-9  Her root refers to Bernice's brother, Ptolemy III Evergetes. He avenged her by killing her assassin, Seleucus Callinicus, king of the north, after which he carried their Syrian gods back to Egypt.
The sons of Seleucus Callinicus of the north were Seleucus Ceraunus and Antiochus III. They did indeed assemble . . . great forces, but it was Antiochus who passed through and invaded the south.
Enraged, Ptolemy IV Philopator did fight with the king of the north in about 218 BC, but he did not gain supremacy. Antiochus III of Syria in the north, having mustered a greater army, did defeat the forces of his infant son, Ptolemy V Epiphanes, in 204 BC, with the help of troublemakers among the Jews.
Antiochus III took Judea in battle with Scopus of the south. This included a siege of Scopus' garrison at Jerusalem. Thus, Antiochus III did indeed stand in the Land of Beauty.
In an effort to ally himself with Egypt, Antiochus III married off his child daughter, Cleopatra, to seven-year-old Ptolemy V Epiphanes, but in the end, they did not remain with him.
Having assailed the coasts and islands of Asia Minor, and having later met with several defeats, Antiochus III could not be found. He disappeared and was not heard from again.
Antiochus's root most likely refers to one of his sons, Seleucus Philopator. He confiscated treasures from the temple in Jerusalem, but performed no great deeds and died without fighting a single battle.
These verses prophesy Antiochus IV Epiphanes (175–164 BC), another son of Antiochus III. The Fathers see in him a type of the antichrist who will arise at the end of the age. Antiochus overcame the Ptolemies by feigning clemency, that is, by intrigue. He reigned in Syria for eleven years after Seleucus, and he seized Judea as well. He defiled the temple in Jerusalem, thus provoking war with the Maccabees, who fought for Jewish self-rule. The ruler of the covenant (v. 22) prophesies Judas Maccabeus. Antiochus was able to take over Egypt as well as Syria with only a small force of men, enabling him to do what neither his fathers or forefathers have done (v. 24).
The Romans came against Antiochus and made him leave Egypt in 168 BC. Enraged, he began his persecution of the Jews and his desecration of the temple. Help (v. 34) came from the Maccabean revolt, led by Mattathias and Judas Maccabeus. Many early Christians also saw the destruction of the temple by the Roman general, Titus, in AD 70, as well as the persecutions of Christians by the Roman emperor Nero, as fulfillments of these verses. Indeed, Daniel's prophecies have been fulfilled many times over the course of history, as God's people have endured persecution and testing at the hands of those who blaspheme God in their pride.
This passage concerns the future time of the antichrist, the Great Tribulation, and the end of the world.
12:1-3 At Christ’s Second Coming, the antichrist will be crushed, the tribulation will end, and all the dead will awake (v. 2). Resurrection to everlasting life is the destiny of those who have endured to the end. Resurrection to everlasting shame is the destiny of those who, in the end, are found outside of Christ.
“But he who reads this passage, even half asleep, cannot fail to see that the kingdom of Antichrist shall fiercely, though for a short time, assail the Church before the last judgment of God shall introduce the eternal reign of the saints. For it is patent from the context that the time, times, and half a time, means a year, and two years, and half a year, that is to say, three years and a half” (Aug). See also 7:25 and note; Rev 12:7–16 and notes.
12:11 Hippolytus writes that this prophecy concerns the three and a half years—“the one thousand two hundred and three score days (the half of the week) during which the tyrant is to reign and persecute the Church.”
These verses comprise the final section of Daniel concerning Bel and the Serpent.

“He unquestionably made it clear, that He who spake to Moses out of the bush, and declared Himself to be the God of the fathers, He is the God of the living. For who is the God of the living unless He who is God, and above whom there is no other God?” (Iren).

Cyrus began his reign in Persia in 538 BC.
“He said that what we are able to speak and to answer is given to us in that hour from heaven, and supplied; and that it is not then we who speak, but the Spirit of God our Father, who, as He does not depart nor is separated from those who confess Him, Himself both speaks and is crowned in us. So Daniel, too, when he was required to worship the idol Bel, which the people and the king then worshiped, in asserting the honor of his God, broke forth with full faith and freedom, saying, ‘I worship nothing but the Lord my God, who created the heaven and the earth’” (Cyp).
Daniel smiled: It is indeed very humorous that a king or anyone could believe an idol of clay and bronze could eat (see also v. 19).
How could seventy priests and their families—and a king—indulge in such blatant deception? St. Peter gives the answer concerning the allure of the false teachers: “Many will follow their destructive ways” (2Pt 2:2).
In contrast to the clay and bronze statue of Bel, this idol lives, eats, and drinks!
Likely, the king gave permission because he saw the serpent as an immortal god.
The prophet Habakkuk, for whom the OT book is named, had lived a century earlier. So there would be three miracles here: (1) being carried by the hair, as Ezekiel was (Ezk 8:3); (2) being translated from one place to another, as Philip was (Acts 8:39, 40); and (3) being brought back from the dead, as Moses and Elijah were (Mt 17:3).
Once again, Daniel is vindicated.
Jesus means “O Lord, save,” referring to His role as Savior (v. 21). Christ means “Anointed One,” the Messiah, the One who is filled with the Holy Spirit (see Jn 1:33). Though the Son alone became Man, God the Father and the Holy Spirit work in Jesus Christ to save us.

Jesus became Man as a Jew, from the lineage of Abraham, the father of all Jews, and of David, Israel’s greatest king and the prototype of the royal Messiah. This genealogy reveals that the Son of God so identifies with the human condition that He takes it all on Himself and becomes part of it. Christ’s ancestry includes both righteous and wicked people, faithful kings and murderers, Jews and Gentiles, kings and peasants.
While Luke's genealogy runs from Jesus back to Adam (Lk 3:23-38), Matthew's list descends from Abraham, with whom God established the Old Covenant of circumcision, to Jesus, the author of the New Covenant. God promised to bless all the tribes of the earth in Abraham (Gn 12:3; 28:14); this promise is fulfilled in Abraham's greatest Son, Jesus Christ.
Jewish genealogical lists normally included only men. The mention of women (Tamar, Rahab, Ruth, and Bathsheba) is unusual. Each one was either a Gentile or a sinner. The inclusion of these women declares God's graciousness and prefigures the calling of Gentiles into the Church. It also underscores the role of women in God's plan of salvation and anticipates the special place of the Virgin Mary in that plan.
Through anointing by Samuel, David was made king. Through his psalms, David was revealed as a great prophet. Thus, David foreshadows both the royal and the prophetic nature of Jesus Christ (Ps 109). As an adulterer and a murderer, David also functions as a type for all repentant sinners.
Joseph can be named as Jesus’ immediate predecessor since OT marriage laws confer hereditary rights on adopted as well as biological sons. The church fathers teach, Mary also was descended from David; of whom is feminine in Greek, referring only to Mary. Thus, Jesus is shown to be born of Mary, and not begotten of Joseph. (See also note on Lk 3:23–38.)
Christ's ancestors are arranged in three groups of fourteen generations. Fourteen is the numerical equivalent of the consonants in the name David, underlining Jesus' descent from David. This also shows the division of the leadership of the Jews, being under judges until David, under kings until Babylon, and under priests until Christ.
1:19 The righteousness of Joseph consisted of a mercy that transcends the Law (Hos 6:6). Joseph showed this mercy by his unwillingness to expose Mary's supposed sin, even though he was obliged by the Law to do so. Her husband: The Bible calls engaged couples husband and wife before their marriage (Rachel was called the wife of Jacob before marriage by virtue of their engagement in Gn 29:21; see also Dt 22:23, 24). Thus, Joseph is called the husband of Mary, and Mary is called his wife (vv. 20, 24). In the Church, Joseph is remembered as the Betrothed, pointing out Mary's ever-virginity. (See also note on Est 2:7.)
An angel (or “messenger”) of the Lord dispels Joseph's false reasoning by announcing the utterly unreasonable: the pregnancy of the Virgin is by the Holy Spirit. Being born of a virgin proves Christ's divinity; only a revelation by God could serve as adequate evidence of this miracle.
Matthew repeatedly uses the formula "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken (see 2:15, 23; 4:14; 8:17; 12:17; 13:35; 21:4; 26:56; 27:35). This underscores the intervention of God throughout history, demonstrates the continuity between the Old and New Covenants, and indicates the beginning of the new creation."
The conception of Jesus fulfills Is 7:14, where we are told that a virgin would conceive and bear a Son. He who is conceived in Mary is not a new Person coming into existence but the eternal Son of God now using her womb as His throne. Both the virginal conception by means of the Holy Spirit and the name Immanuel, God with us declare Christ's divinity.
The star proclaims the extraordinary birth of Christ. To ancient pagans, a star signified a god, a deified king (Nm 24:17). Christ being born under this star fulfills the prophecy in Ps 109:3 and shows all of creation participating in the Incarnation. (See also Pss 18:2; 148:3.)
Herod had to summon the Jewish leaders because he knew little about the Jewish Messiah and he feared losing his throne to this newborn King. The chief priests were the political and religious leaders of the Jews, and the scribes were high cabinet officers. They knew where the Messiah was to be born, but in spite of all the signs being in place, they had no idea that He had come (see 16:3).
Into the house: Whereas the Jewish shepherds worshiped the Savior in the cave on the day He was born (Lk 2:8–20), the Gentile magi came to worship Him some time later. By then, Joseph and Mary had found a house in which to dwell. This indicates that Christ first came to the Jews and then afterward was worshiped by the Gentiles. The significance of the Magi's gifts is revealed in a hymn sung at Compline of the Nativity: “Gold is for the King of ages. Frankincense is for the God of all. Myrrh is offered to the Immortal One, who shall be three days dead.”
Egypt is where Israel once took refuge; as Joseph of the OT once saved God's people by bringing them to Egypt (Gn 39–47), now Christ's stepfather Joseph finds safety for the Savior in Egypt. It is probable that the gifts of the magi paid for this journey.
Out of Egypt I called my Son refers first to Israel being brought out of captivity (Hos 11:1). In the OT, “son” can refer to the whole nation of Israel. Here Jesus fulfills this calling as the true Son of God by coming out of Egypt.
The cruelty of Herod was prefigured by Pharaoh, who, in an attempt to destroy the power of Israel, commanded the death of all the newborn Jewish boys (Ex 1:16, 22).
Jeremiah recorded the people of Jerusalem being led away to exile (Jer 38:15). On their way to captivity, they passed Ramah, which was near Bethlehem, where Jacob's wife Rachel lay buried. In his prophecy, Jeremiah saw Rachel, even from the grave, moved with compassion for the fate that had befallen her descendants. Here Rachel is again weeping for her children, showing that the saints in heaven have awareness and compassion for those yet on earth. These slaughtered children are regarded as saints and martyrs in the Church and are known as the Holy Innocents. Just as Rachel was told that her children would return from exile in Babylon (Jer 38:16, 17), so Jesus will return from His exile in Egypt.
According to historical records, Herod the Great died in 4 BC. The date of Christ’s birth on which our current AD (Anno Domini, Latin for “year of the Lord”) calendar is based is off by four years.
Augustus Caesar banished Archelaus for his cruelty in AD 6. This cruelty was revealed as a warning to Joseph; hence the detour to Nazareth (v. 23). This town was in Galilee and was governed by another son of Herod the Great, whose name was Herod Antipas (see Lk 3:1).
The prophecy here cannot be exactly identified. It has been taken as a reference to the rod (Heb. neser) in Is 11:1, and to the Nazirite (Heb. Nazir) of Jdg 13:5. Matthew may also have been alluding to passages in which the Messiah was despised, since Nazareth did not have a good reputation (Jn 1:46).
The wilderness of Judea is the barren region descending from Jerusalem to the Dead Sea. The preparation for the Savior's ministry begins with John the Baptist's call to repent. Repentance, which accompanies faith, is a total about-face. The word in Greek literally means to change one's mind, or more generally, to turn around. Repentance is a radical change of one's spirit, mind, thought, and heart, a complete reorientation of the whole of one's life. It is the necessary first step in the way of the Lord. It is accompanied by the confession of sins and the act of baptism (v. 6), and is followed by a life filled with fruits worthy of this change (v. 8).
John's ascetic life conformed to that of the Jewish sects such as the Essenes, who lived in the wilderness and whose purpose was to prepare for the coming Kingdom of God. John's clothing was typical of a prophet (4Kg 1:8). The monastic movement in the early Church was patterned after John's manner of life.
The confession of sins is essential to baptism under both the Old Covenant and the New. John's baptism, however, was a sign of repentance and the forgiveness of sins only. It did not confer the power of total regeneration nor adoption as a child of God as does Christian baptism (v. 11).
Sadducees were members of the high-priestly and landowning class who controlled the temple and the internal political affairs of the Jews. They denied the resurrection of the dead and had no messianic hope beyond this life. The Pharisees formed a lay religious movement centered on the study of the Law and on strict observance of its regulations. They believed in the resurrection of the dead and cherished a messianic hope, but taught that righteousness is attained on the strength of one's works according to the Law, and that the Messiah would be merely a glorious man. John's title for them, brood of vipers, is later used by Jesus (12:34; 23:33). It indicates their deception and malice and their being under the influence of Satan.
Repentance, confession, and baptism lead to fruits worthy of repentance, a way of life consistent with the Kingdom of God (see Gal 5:22–25). If a fruitful life does not follow, sacramental acts and spiritual discipline are useless. Thus in many icons of the Baptism of Christ, an ax is pictured chopping a fruitless tree (v. 10).
The warning that from these stones (Heb. 'ebanim) God can raise up children (Heb. banim) is a play on words. God will not admit fruitless children into His house, but adopts other children from the Gentiles.
3:11 Christ baptizes in the fire of the Holy Spirit, the power and grace of God divinely poured out on all believers at baptism. (See also fire in v. 10; note at Lk 3:16, 17.)

In John's culture, a slave would carry the king's sandals; thus John declares himself to be even lower than a slave of Jesus. John's inability to carry Christ's sandal has a second meaning, for carrying another's sandal once meant taking someone else's responsibility (Ru 4:7). Here it shows that John could not have carried the responsibility that Christ carries, and that the Law could not redeem the world as Christ has come to do.
Winnowing the threshed grain from the chaff is a metaphor for the divine judgment, which will separate good from evil.
Jesus does not need purification. By making the purification of humanity His own, He would wash away humanity's sin, grant regeneration, and reveal the mystery of the Holy Trinity. Thus, His baptism was necessary for the fulfillment of God's righteous plan of salvation. “Jesus enters the filthy, sinful waters of the world and when He comes out, brings up and purifies the entire world with Him” (GrgNy; see also note on Lk 3:21).
3:16  The Spirit of God hovered over the water at the first creation (Gn 1:2). Now, the Holy Spirit comes in the form of a dove to anoint the Messiah, the Son of God, at the beginning of the new creation. Jesus does not become the Son of God this day; rather, He is revealed to all as the Son of God on this day. The Holy Spirit has always rested on Him. The feast day of Epiphany (a manifestation or revelation) or Theophany (a manifestation of God), celebrated on January 6, commemorates this day and points to the age to come.
This quotation is from Ps 2:7, “You are My Son, / Today I have begotten You.” Note how the Baptism of Jesus reveals the great mystery of the Trinity: the Father speaks; the Holy Spirit descends; the Incarnate Son is baptized.
4:1 To be tempted is to be tested in fundamental areas of faith. As in Mark, the Spirit leads, or “throws,” Jesus into the wilderness after His Baptism to be tested by a struggle with the devil. We who are baptized in Christ need not be defeated by temptations because we too are aided by the Holy Spirit. The wilderness is a battleground, an image of the world, both the dwelling place of demons and a source of divine tranquility and victory.
Jesus reverses Israel's falling to temptation in the wilderness. The Israelites were tested forty years in the wilderness and proved disobedient and disloyal. God humbled them by first letting them go hungry and then feeding them with manna to help them learn to be dependent on Him ( Dt 8:2–5). Here, Jesus is tested with hunger for forty days, but He does not sin. His answers to Satan are from Deuteronomy, and all call for loyalty to God.

Jesus fasted to overcome temptation, giving us an example of our own power and limitations in the face of temptation. The hunger of His flesh does not control Him; rather, He controls His flesh. Our Lord's fast of forty days is the foundation of the Church's forty-day Lenten fast before Holy Week and of the fast before Christmas.
The devil challenges Christ's relationship to the Father. If You are the Son of God calls into question the Father's declaration at Christ's Baptism (3:17). The devil wants Jesus to act independently and to detach Himself from the will of the Father. In His divine nature, Christ shares one will with the Father and the Holy Spirit; He can do nothing of Himself (Jn 5:30), apart from the Father. But in His humanity, He possesses free will and at all times must choose to remain obedient to the divine will of the Father.
By rejecting the first temptation, Jesus rejects an earthly kingdom and shows us not to pursue earthly comfort in the “food which perishes” (Jn 6:27). While Adam disregarded the divine word in order to pursue the passions of the body (Gn 3), the New Adam—Christ—conquers all temptation by the divine word, giving human nature the power to conquer Satan.
The holy city is Jerusalem.
Seeing that Christ had defeated him through the power of the Scriptures, Satan vainly tries to use the Scriptures to put God's power of protection to the test. (See also 2Pt 1:19–21.)
Trials and temptations come on their own; we should never intentionally expose ourselves to danger in order to test or prove God's protection. To do so is to tempt the Lord.
God's Kingdom is not one of earthly power and possessions. In the devil's test, Jesus was being asked to choose worldly power over the Kingdom of God. The devil is the "ruler of this world" (Jn 12:31), "the god of this age" (2Co 4:4), because the whole world is in his power (1Jn 5:19). Jesus refuses the road of earthly glory, which would lead Him away from His suffering and death for the redemption of the world.
The term Galilee of the Gentiles indicates that many non-Jews lived in the region. Having a mixed population, it was not considered a genuinely Jewish land, even though many Gentile residents had converted to Judaism during the Maccabean period. Because many of the Jews there had been influenced by the Greek culture and its customs, they were generally considered second-class citizens by the Jews of Judea.
4:16  Darkness means ungodliness. Here it represents the Gentiles' unawareness of God and the Jews being under the shadow of the Old Covenant. To sit in darkness means to be overcome by spiritual ignorance. The great light is the gospel of Jesus Christ.
These first disciples had already heard the preaching of John the Baptist and were prepared to accept Christ immediately. Though illiterate and unlearned in religion, these “people of the land” whom Jesus calls will be revealed at Pentecost to be the wisest of all.
Note that the crowds do not swarm Jesus when He commands repentance (v. 17), but only when He begins to heal and work miracles. This fact shows that the people misunderstand the true nature of His Kingdom. It also shows Christ's concession “to give credibility to what He teaches” among the fickle multitudes (Theoph).
In the OT, only a select few were chosen to hear God directly (see Ex 19:3–13). Here, God Incarnate speaks to the multitudes face to face. The mountain is a place where divine action enters human history, the place where God reveals Himself to man (17:1; Gn 22:2; Ex 3:1; 19:2; 3Kg 18:20). Seated is the traditional Jewish position for teaching with authority. Some early Christian preachers (for example, St. John Chrysostom) sat while the people stood. Matthew mentioning that Jesus opened his mouth emphasizes this teaching is “one-way,” that Jesus has come to speak with authority (7:29), and the disciples are there not to discuss or debate, but to listen.
Blessed in this context indicates heavenly, spiritual exaltation rather than earthly happiness or prosperity. In Hebrew, “poor” means both (1) the materially poor and (2) the faithful among God's people. The poor in spirit are those who have the heart of the poor, the same attitude as the poor, and are totally dependent on God.
Those who mourn sorrow over the sufferings of this life (9:23), the sufferings of others (Jn 11:35), the state of the world (Lk 19:41), and their own sins (Lk 7:36–38). All of these are comforted by the power of God both in this world and in the age to come. Holy sorrow is part of repentance, conversion, and virtuous action, and is the firstfruit of infinite joy. It is to be distinguished from ungodly sorrow, a sadness that leads to despair (see 2Co 7:10).
Meekness is an attitude of being content with both honor and dishonor. It is an imitation of Christ, who said, “Learn from Me, for I am gentle [meek] and lowly in heart” (11:29). The meek are God-controlled and have mastery over their passions, especially anger. Meekness is not passive weakness, but strength directed and under control. The earth that the meek will inherit is not power or possession in this world, but the new earth, which is everlasting (Rev 21:1).
Those who hunger and thirst for righteousness see the presence of God and His Kingdom as the most important thing in life. They have a desperate craving for what is right before God, comparable to a starving person's craving for food (see 6:33).
Mercy is love set in motion, expressed in action. God's mercy in taking our sufferings on Himself in order to grant us His Kingdom sets us free from captivity to the evil one. In view of God's mercy to all, we in turn are to be merciful to all.
“Pure” means unmixed with anything else. The pure in heart are completely devoted to the worship and service of God and accept no compromises. With the aid of the Holy Spirit, those who achieve purity practice all virtue, have no conscious evil in themselves, and live in temperance. This level of spirituality is attained by few, but all may strive for it. When the soul's only desire is God, and a person's will holds to this desire, then that person will indeed see God everywhere.
Being the source of peace, Christ found no price sufficient for peace other than shedding His own blood. In doing so, Christ reveals Himself to us as the Reconciler, the Prince of peace (Is 9:6; Eph 2:14–16). The Holy Spirit gives peace to those who imitate Christ. Thus, peacemakers share God's peace with those around them, imitating Christ's sacrificial love and participating in His work. By God's grace, peacemakers become sons of God themselves.
Children of God uphold truth, refuse to compromise with the ways of the world, and give themselves to no other (6:24, 33; see 1Co 6:19, 20). Like Jesus, these will be persecuted for righteousness' sake (see Jn 15:18–20). Christ's kingdom is the crown awaiting the righteous.
5:11-12 Those who suffer persecution for Christ walk the road of the prophets, saints, and martyrs. The Greek for be exceedingly glad means to “leap exceedingly with joy.” (See Acts 5:40, 41.)
Salt and light illustrate the role of disciples in society. Because of its preservative powers, its necessity for life, and its ability to give flavor, salt had religious and sacrificial significance (Lv 2:13; see also Nm 18:19; 2Ch 13:5). To eat salt with someone meant to be bound together in loyalty. As the salt of the earth, Christians are preservers of God's covenant and give true flavor to the world.

God is the true and uncreated Light. In the OT light is symbolic of God (Is 60:1–3), the divine Law (Ps 118:105), and Israel in contrast to all other nations. In the NT, the Son of God is called “light” (Jn 1:4–9; 8:12; 1Jn 1:5). Light is necessary both for clear vision and for life itself. Faith relies on this divine light, and believers become “sons of light” (Jn 12:36; 1Th 5:5) who shine in a perverse world (Php 2:15). In many parishes, the Pascha (Easter) Liturgy begins with a candle being presented and the invitation to “come receive the Light which is never overtaken by night.”
Christian virtues have both a personal and a public function, for our virtue can bring others to glorify the Father.
Jesus fulfills the Law in Himself, in His words, and in His actions by: (1) performing God's will in all its fullness (3:15); (2) transgressing none of the precepts of the Law (Jn 8:46; 14:30); (3) declaring the perfect fulfillment of the Law, which He was about to deliver to them; (4) granting righteousness—the goal of the Law—to us (Rom 3:31; 8:3; 4; 10:4). He fulfills the Prophets by both being and carrying out what they foretold.
5:18 Assuredly (Gr. amen) means “truly,” or “confirmed,” or “so be it.” Jesus uses it as a solemn affirmation, a form of oath. Christ's use of this word at the beginning of certain proclamations (rather than at the end) is unique and authoritative: He declares His words affirmed before they are even spoken.

Ajot (Gr. iota) is the smallest letter in the Greek alphabet; a tittle is the smallest stroke in certain Hebrew letters. Thus, the whole of the Law is affirmed as the foundation of Christ's new teaching. All is fulfilled refers to the Passion and Resurrection of Christ.
Righteousness according to the Law is a unified whole. The observance of all the least commandments is to observe the whole Law, while the violation of the least commandment is considered a violation of the whole Law.
The repeated formula but I say to you is a statement of total, divine authority (7:29). As the Creator of man and the Author of the Law, Christ can speak with this authority. While there is anger which is not sinful (Ps 4:5; Mk 3:5), here Jesus forbids sinful anger, identifying it with murder. The council is the supreme legal body among the Jews. Hell (Gr. Gehenna; see 10:28 and note) is the final condition of sinners who resist God's grace.
Peace with other believers is a requirement for worship (Mk 11:25). The liturgical “kiss of peace” at the beginning of the eucharistic prayer is a sign of reconciliation and forgiveness, preparing the faithful to offer the holy gifts at the altar (1Co 16:20; 1Pt 5:14).
Luke places this teaching in the context of the end of the age (Lk 12:57–59); here it is in the context of reconciliation surrounding the Liturgy. Delay in reconciliation allows for the spread of animosity and other evils (Eph 4:26, 27).
The issue here is not the God-given mutual attraction of men and women, but the selfish promptings of lust. Sin does not come out of nature, but out of the distortion of nature for self-indulgence. Thoughts that enter the mind involuntarily are not sins, but temptations. They become sins only when they are held and entertained.
In contrast to the easy access to divorce under the Mosaic Law, and because of the misuse of divorce in that day, Jesus repeatedly condemns divorce (19:8, 9) and emphasizes the eternal nature of marriage. The possibility of divorce on the grounds of sexual immorality shows that marriage can be destroyed by sin. While recognizing divorce as a serious sin, the Orthodox Church allows divorce and a second marriage as a concession to human weakness and as a corrective measure of compassion when a marriage has been broken. A third marriage is permitted only under specific, limited circumstances, and a fourth marriage is never permitted.
Trust cannot be secured by swearing an oath by things that are not in man's possession anyway, but only by simple integrity.
In contrast to the OT (Ex 21:24; Lv 24:20; Dt 19:21), Jesus warns us not to resist violence with more violence. Evil can only be overcome by good, which keeps us free from compromise with the devil and can bring our enemy under the yoke of God's love. A saint of the desert once found his hut being looted of its paltry possessions, and he knelt in the corner praying for the bandits. When they left, the monk realized they had not taken his walking stick. This monk pursued them for many days until he was able to give them the stick as well. Seeing his humility, the bandits returned everything to him and were converted to Jesus Christ.
Freed from hate, sadness, and anger, we are able to receive the greatest virtue: perfect love. The love of enemies is not merely an emotion, but includes decision and action. It is to treat and see our enemies as the closest members of our own family. (See 1Jn 4:7–21.)
The summary statement of all that has preceded. The Christian can indeed grow in the perfection of the Father (Eph 4:13; see also the article, “Deification,” at 2Pt 1), which is shown by imitating His love and mercy (compare Lk 6:36).
In this chapter, Jesus presents the three most basic aspects of spiritual living: (1) charitable giving (vv. 1–4), (2) prayer (vv. 5–15), and (3) fasting (vv. 16–18). These three disciplines relate directly to God's righteousness.
The original meaning of “hypocrite” was “actor.” Hypocrites are play-actors practicing piety for show, desiring to please men rather than God. Wearing masks of compassion, inwardly they are heartless. Their reward is the applause of men and nothing more.
6:3-4 God is not impressed with what others think of us, nor by what we think of ourselves. God will reward good deeds when they are based on pure motives of the heart.
The hypocrites miss the spirit of prayer, which is an intimate, personal communion with God that leads to the vision of His glory (1Co 2:9). Hypocrisy blocks out this communion and this vision. Vain repetitions cannot establish this communion, for God does not need our “babble.” To partake of this communion, both silence and words are necessary. Therefore, we pray always (Lk 18:1) and without ceasing (1Th 5:17).

Christ does not condemn the use of many words per se, but teaches that words must express the desire for communion with God. Jesus gives us specific words to repeat (vv. 9–13). It is not repetition itself that is condemned, but vain repetition. Many psalms, prayers, and hymns of the Church have been repeated for countless generations in the worship of God “in spirit and truth” (Jn 4:23).

True prayer is not telling God what He already knows and then telling Him what to do about it, nor is it appearing pious in front of others. True prayer is (1) humble (go into your room, v. 6), (2) personal (pray to your Father, v. 6), and (3) sincere (do not use vain repetitions, v. 7).
The Father-Son relationship within the Trinity reveals our potential relationship with God. Christ, the Son of God, grants us the privilege of calling God Our Father by the grace of adoption (Gal 4:4–7). As a “son of God,” the Christian is called to love, trust, and serve God as Christ does the Father. We must note that God is not our Father simply because He created us. He is only Father to those in a saving and personal relationship with Him, a communion that only comes by the grace of adoption (see Jn 1:13; Rom 8:14–16).
Daily is a misleading translation of the Greek epiousios, which is literally “above the essence,” or “supersubstantial.” The expression daily bread indicates not merely bread for this day, for earthly nourishment; it is the bread for the eternal day of the Kingdom of God, for the nourishment of our immortal soul. This living, supersubstantial bread is Christ Himself. In the Lord's Prayer, then, we are not asking merely for material bread for physical health, but for the spiritual bread of eternal life (Jn 6:27–58).
6:12  The request to be forgiven is plural, directing us to pray always for the forgiveness of others. The term debts refers to spiritual debts (see 18:21–35; also note on v. 14).
6:13  God tempts no one to sin (Jam 1:13); temptations are from the evil one, the devil. Temptations are aimed at the soul's giving in to the sinful passions of the flesh (Rom 7:5). No one lives without encountering temptations, but we pray that great temptations, tests beyond what we can bear (1Co 10:13), should not come to us.
Jesus insists on mutual forgiveness between people as a precondition of God's forgiveness. Those who do not forgive are not forgiven—period. This teaching is repeated in the parable of the unforgiving servant (18:21–35), which concludes with the same teaching. To not forgive others is to willfully flee from the forgiveness of God for ourselves.
Keeping a sad countenance to show off one's fasting is mere external display. Jesus rejects such hypocrisy. For the one who fasts, the compassion of God outshines the physical discomfort. During the fasting seasons of the Church, the hymns call the faithful to wash and anoint their faces (thus, there is no “Ash Wednesday” in the Orthodox Church). Fasting is for spiritual growth and the glory of God, not to be seen by those around us.

Fasting also is not merely abstinence from food, but consists of self-denial in all areas of life in order to escape the control of the passions. On the eve of Great Lent, we sing, “Let us abstain from passions as we abstain from food.” St. John Chrysostom writes, “What good is it if we abstain from eating birds and fish, but bite and devour our brothers?”
6:19-21 By attaching themselves to treasures on earth, people cut themselves off from heavenly treasures. They become slaves to earthly things rather than free in Christ. The heart of discipleship lies in (1) disentangling ourselves from the chains of earthly things, and (2) attaching ourselves to God, the true treasure (v. 21).
The mind (Gr. nous) is the spiritual eye of the soul; it illuminates the inner man and governs the will. Keeping the mind wholesome and pure is fundamental to the Christian life.
6:24 As slaves serving two masters, people attempt to maintain an attachment to both earthly and heavenly things. But this is impossible, since both demand full allegiance. Jesus calls mammon ("riches") a master not because wealth is evil by nature, but because of the control it has over people.
Jesus is warning against anxiety, not against thoughtful planning. Our physical well-being is directly dependent on God, and only indirectly on food, drink, and clothing. Anxiety over earthly things demonstrates a lack of faith in God's care.
Because the Gentiles served pagan idols, they remained consumed by dependence on earthly things. Those who follow God can be freed from this dependence.
The kingdom of God is the central theme of Jesus' teaching, and His righteousness is the subject of the Sermon on the Mount. Calling us to be free from anxiety about earthly things, Jesus directs us to look to heaven, secure in the faith that God will provide needed earthly blessings.
We will be judged with our own level of judgment because we are guilty of the very things we judge in others (Rom 2:1). We ourselves have failed in repentance and in fleeing from sin. To pass judgment is to assume God's authority. The second part of this verse is found in Mk 4:24 and in Lk 6:38, each in a different context, as Jesus no doubt repeated this particular message many times.
Dogs and swine refer to heathen peoples (Php 3:2; Rev 22:15), but would also include Jews who do not practice virtue. According to the Fathers, dogs are those so immersed in evil that they show no hope of change, while swine are those who habitually live immoral and impure lives. The pearls are the inner mysteries of the Christian faith, including Christ's teachings (13:46) and the great sacraments. These holy things are restricted from the immoral and unrepentant, not to protect the holy things themselves, for Christ needs no protection. Rather, we protect the faithless people from the condemnation that would result from holding God's mysteries in contempt (see note on Lk 23:8, 9).
The verbs ask, seek, and knock are present progressives: “be asking,” “be seeking,” “be knocking.” Note the synergy: our effort is commanded, but never apart from the immediate help of God. We ask in prayer; seek by learning God's truth; and knock by doing God's will.
Man is called evil not to condemn the whole race, but to contrast the imperfect goodness that is in people (that is, our goodness is mingled with sin) with the perfect goodness of God (see 19:16, 17). If imperfect and even wicked people can do some good, all the more will God work perfect good.
The “Golden Rule” fulfills the demands of the Law and the Prophets and is a practical application of the commandment to love one's neighbor as oneself (22:39, 40). It is a first step in spiritual growth. The negative form of the Golden Rule (“Don't do to others what you don't want them to do to you”) was well known in Judaism. Jesus' form is positive: this is the action that begins to draw us toward God (see note at Lk 6:31).
The description of the two ways was widespread in Judaism (Dt 30:15–20; Ps 1; Pr 4:17, 18; 12:28; 15:23; WSir 15:17) and in early Christian writings (Didache, Barnabas). Luke's version (Lk 13:24–30) is more eschatological, referring to the end of the age. Because we wrestle against sins and human weaknesses as well as spiritual forces of evil (Eph 6:12), entering the Kingdom is the more difficult way.
Because they can easily deceive others, those who put on a show of virtue or religion are more dangerous than those who are evil outright. Thus, we must be all the more cautious among those who are outwardly virtuous.
7:19 John the Baptist made the same statement in 3:10.
7:21-22 A threefold testimony of the deity of Christ: (1) He calls Himself Lord—which refers to the divine name “Yahweh” of the OT; (2) He speaks of the will of My Father, which He fully knows and shares; (3) as judge, Christ is revealed as God, for only God can execute true judgment. In that day refers to the final judgment.
The biblical law concerning leprosy is found in Lv 13; 14. Dt 24:8 describes the purification of lepers and leprous houses, which was a duty entrusted to the priests. Leprosy was considered a direct punishment for sins, and as lepers were unclean, they were not permitted to live in the community or to worship in synagogues or the temple. Touching the unclean was forbidden (Lv 7:21), yet Jesus touched the leper, showing His compassion, and showing that He is not subject to the Law but over it. To the clean, nothing is unclean. (See also note at Lk 5:14.)
8:5 A centurion (a Gentile) commanded 100 men in a Roman legion. Jesus is the Savior of all, and in Him ethnic distinctions are void.
8:7  I will come has been read as a question by many Greek scholars: “Shall I come?”
Regardless, Jesus is ready to deal graciously with this Gentile and even to enter his house, which would make Him unclean in the eyes of the Jews.
The centurion expresses unusual faith in calling Jesus, who is a Jew, Lord. The statement, "Lord, I am not worthy that You should come under my roof," is frequently quoted in liturgical texts as an ideal expression of humility.
8:10 Twice in the gospels it is said of Jesus that He marveled: (1) at the unbelief in His hometown of Nazareth (Mk 6:6), and (2) at the belief of this foreigner.
Here Jesus nullifies any ideas of ethnic superiority. The rejected sons of the kingdom are both the Jews who deny Christ and those raised in the Church who do not live their faith; outer darkness and weeping and gnashing are descriptions of the state of the unrighteous dead in Sheol (Hades) in the Jewish tradition (Enoch 103:8). They are common expressions in Matthew (13:42, 50; 22:13; 24:51; 25:30), and also occur in Luke (Lk 13:28).
This passage and 1Co 9:5 (where Peter is called Cephas) indicate Peter was married. Our Lord's healing miracles are diverse. In this case, He heals by touch; in v. 13, He healed by a word. This healing is immediate and complete; others are gradual (Mk 8:22–25) or require the cooperation of the person healed or of his loved ones (Lk 8:54, 55). As the quotation in v. 17 indicates, all of Christ's miracles manifest His redemption of ailing humanity.
Since the term Son of Man refers to the Messiah (Dan 7:13), it expresses both His humanity and His divinity. Here it refers to Christ's human condition; in 25:31–33 it describes His divine authority.
Jesus is not negating the command to honor parents, but is teaching us to put the things of the Kingdom as the highest priority. Those who ignore this priority are spiritually dead.
The Lord's mastery over creation is another sign that He is the Messiah and is divine. Commands to the sea and waves (v. 24) can only be issued by God (Job 38:8–11; Ps 65:5, 6; 106:29). Jesus was asleep because, as a man, he needed rest. In His Incarnation, He assumed all the natural actions of the flesh, of which sleep is one. The image of Christ and His disciples in a boat is traditionally used to illustrate the Church. God both permits storms and delivers us through them, so that we can see His protection more clearly. Christ's rebuke of the storm is also an illustration of His calming the tempests in the human soul.
The demons, recognizing Jesus as the Son of God, are surprised that their power is being terminated before the time of the last judgment. Though the malice of the demons is great, they can do nothing against the will of God, and thus can only enter the swine at Christ's command. The immediate destruction of the herd shows that the men had been protected by God's care; otherwise, they would have perished under the demonic influence. Further, it reinforces that swineherding was not lawful for the Jews, and shows the incomparable value of human beings, whose salvation is worth every sacrifice.
9:1 Jesus' own city is Capernaum (4:13).
As shown by the healing of the paralytic, faith is an indispensable condition for salvation. Faith is collective as well as personal, for the faith of the paralytic's friends helped in his healing (v. 2). Three signs of Jesus' divinity are shown: (1) He knows the secrets of hearts (see 1Kg 16:7; 2Ch 6:30); (2) He forgives sins, a power which belongs to God alone; and (3) He heals by the power of His word.
9:9-13 Matthew is also named Levi (Mk 2:14). Roman overlords assigned specific areas to Jewish tax collectors, who were free to collect extra revenues for their own profit. Their collaboration with the occupying Romans, their fraud, and their corruption caused other Jews to hate them and to consider them unclean (11:19). Jesus dining with them and accepting a tax collector as a disciple (“Follow Me”) offends the Pharisees, yet Christ's defense is simple: He goes where the need of the \textit{physician} is greatest. “\textit{I desire mercy and not sacrifice}” (v. 13; Hos 6:6) is not a rejection of sacrifice per se, but shows that mercy is a higher priority (see Ps 50).
The Jews typically fasted twice a week (Lk 18:12), on Monday and Thursday. In addition, public fasts were regularly observed or occasionally proclaimed (2Ch 20:3; Ez 8:49, 50; Est 4:16; Joel 2:15), especially on the Day of Atonement (Lv 16:31–34) and in times of mourning (Zec 7:5; 8:19). But the Jews saw the day of the Messiah as a wedding feast—a time of joy and gladness. Jesus here proclaims that day, declaring Himself to be the Messiah/Bridegroom. For Christians, fasting is not gloomy but desirable, a bright sadness, for by fasting, they gain self-control and prepare themselves for the Wedding Feast.

The old garment and old wineskins stand for the Old Covenant and the Law, viewed as imperfect and temporary; the new wineskins are the New Covenant and those in Christ. The new wine is the Holy Spirit dwelling within renewed people, who cannot be constrained by the old precepts of the Law.
Authority over life and death is in the hand of God alone (Dt 32:39; 1Kg 2:6). Being of one essence with the Father, Jesus has this authority (Jn 5:21). The healing of this woman demonstrates Christ's power to cleanse and heal (see 8:1–4). In the OT, hemorrhage caused ceremonial defilement, imposing religious and social restrictions, for contact with blood was strictly prohibited (Lv 15:25). This suffering woman, accounting herself unclean, nevertheless approaches Jesus secretly and with great faith. In v. 22, Jesus (1) brings her good cheer because of her faith; (2) corrects her thinking, for neither could she hide her touch from Him, nor is she excluded from Him because of her illness; and (3) exhibits her faith to all, so that they might imitate her.
According to Isaiah, the messianic age is signified when “the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall hear” (Is 35:5). These healings are a sign that Jesus is the awaited Messiah, as is the use of the title Son of David by the blind men, which expresses their faith in this truth.
To cast out demons by the ruler of demons is impossible, for the aim of the devil is to consolidate power, not destroy it. Further, Jesus cleansed lepers, raised the dead, and remitted sins—works demons could not perform.
Jesus does not condemn sinners, but sees them as lost sheep to be found and brought home. Compassion means “suffering with.” The illustration of sheep having no shepherd, drawn from the OT (Nm 27:17; 3Kg 22:17; Ezk 34:5), is an accusation against the Jewish leaders who, charged with the duty of shepherds, acted as wolves.
The harvest suggests the abundance of those who are ready to accept the Kingdom. Jesus is both the Sower and the Lord of the harvest. His disciples are sent not to sow, but to reap what He had sown by the prophets (see note at Jn 4:36–38). How many are sent to harvest is less important than with what power they go into the harvest (10:1).
Disciples (v. 1) and apostles (v. 2) are often used interchangeably for the twelve. Disciple means “learner,” and apostle means “one sent out.” Jesus gave them power to perform miracles, while He performed them by His own power. The names of the Twelve are not the same in all lists, as many people had more than one name. The names here are given in pairs, suggesting who may have traveled together on this “first missionary journey,” as Mark reports they were sent out two by two (Mk 6:7).
The disciples' mission is like Christ's: to preach (v. 7) and to heal (v. 8). Note that Jesus sends them only to the Jews. Christ's earthly ministry was focused on the Jews (15:24) so that, after the Resurrection, the Jews could not blame the disciples for going “to uncircumcised men” (Acts 11:3). Jesus prepares them to be single-minded in their mission to preach and heal: (1) He reminds them that His power is free—a gift from God (v. 8); and (2) He instructs them to carry no money (v. 9) so that they could not be accused of greed, and so they would learn dependence on God.
Christ commissions His servants to give a greeting of peace, the same peace that was proclaimed by the prophets (Is 52:7), that He would offer to the disciples (Jn 14:27; 20:19), and that would be revealed as a fruit of the Holy Spirit (Gal 5:22). To this day, Christ's peace is offered to the faithful in the Liturgy with the words, “Peace be to all.”
Jesus instructs the disciples to be wise as serpents so that they might not be unnecessarily wounded and that they might take all advantage in the spread of the gospel. He also tells them to be as harmless as doves so that they should not retaliate against those who do them wrong, and should be blameless in their witness of the gospel.
Persecution must not cause the disciple to quit, but simply to move forward in his mission. According to St. John Chrysostom, before the Son of Man comes is not a reference to the Second Coming, but merely means that before the disciples could visit all the cities in Palestine, Christ would rejoin them, thus more quickly ending the hostility they would encounter.
10:26  Them: persecutors of the disciples (see v. 17). Do not fear is repeated three times (vv. 26, 28, 31) to embolden the witness of the gospel in the face of adversity. Christian believers, then and today, must neither be intimidated by persecution nor fail in their mission to preach.
That there is no need to fear the killing of the soul shows the immortality of the human soul, which is ours by grace. Fear Him is a command to fear God (Pr 9:10; Lk 1:50; 23:40; Acts 10:2; Col 3:22; 1Pt 2:17), for only God has the power to judge the soul. Christians are instructed to resist the devil (Jam 4:7), but not to fear him.

Hell is literally “Gehenna.” In Jewish history, Gehenna (the Valley of Hinnom) became a place of forbidden religious practices (2Ch 28:3; Jer 39:35). King Josiah put an end to these practices (4Kg 23:10). By Christ's time, the valley had become a garbage dump that smoldered ceaselessly. Because of these associations, Gehenna acquired the connotation of eternal punishment in the afterlife.
Just before His most violent death on the Cross, Christ promised peace to His disciples. But the existence of evil necessitates spiritual warfare. The earth to which Christ came was under the authority of Satan (Jn 12:31; 2Co 4:4). It is therefore essential that Christ wage war against the leader of vice with weapons of virtue (Eph 6:11–18). See also note at Lk 12:51.
Apostles are ambassadors who represent the Lord. Therefore, all who extend help to them are showing mercy directly to Christ and will receive God's reward (see 25:40).
According to the Church Fathers, John the Baptist asks this question in order to guide his own disciples to Jesus. Undoubtedly, John's own faith was also strengthened through Christ's response (vv. 4–6).
Isaiah predicted that these signs would accompany the coming of the Messiah (Is 61:1). Jesus performed these miracles in the presence of John's disciples (Lk 7:21) so they could see with their own eyes works that only the Messiah could do.
In terms of the OT Law, John the Baptist is the greatest prophet. The New Covenant is of such incomparable value that those who share in the New Covenant are greater than John was without it (see note at Lk 7:28).
Several interpretations have been given to the idea that the kingdom of heaven suffers violence. Some say that it refers to the Jewish opposition to the gospel. Others have said that it refers to the Kingdom breaking into the world “violently,” that is, with great power and force. Still others have said that the Kingdom of heaven refers to Christ Himself, who has been incarnate since the days of John the Baptist, and who will suffer the violence of the Cross. According to St. John Chrysostom, the violent who take the Kingdom by force are those who have such earnest desire for Christ that they let nothing stand between themselves and faith in Him.
11:13-14  John does not ascribe to himself the role of Elijah (Jn 1:21), but Jesus does. John fulfilled the mission of Elijah (Lk 1:17, 76) and his destiny was similar. Yet John is honored over Elijah (v. 11) because John prepared the way for the advent of Christ Himself.
A reference to a game played among Jewish children who would divide into two groups: those pretending to play musical instruments or singing, and the others responding in a manner opposite of what would have been expected. Christ draws a parallel to the Jewish leaders who responded wickedly both to John the Baptist as being too ascetic (v. 18) and to Christ as being too liberal in mercy and joy (v. 19).
11:20-24 It is a far greater sin to have seen Christ's works and rejected Him than never to have known Him at all.
Blessed Theophylact notes that God has hidden the mysteries from the wise of the world, not out of malice toward His creatures, but because of their own unworthiness; it was they who chose to trust their own fallen wisdom and judgment rather than God. Furthermore, it is out of love that God withholds this revelation from those who would scorn it so that they do not receive an even greater condemnation (see notes for vv. 20–24; Lk 8:10).
Jesus' yoke is submission to the Kingdom of God. A yoke could be seen as a sign of hardship, burdens, and responsibilities (3Kg 12:1–11; Jer 34:1–11; WSir 40:1), but in Christ, the yoke is easy, for the power of God works in each person. Furthermore, the reward is infinitely greater than any effort man puts forth. Gentle (v. 29) is literally “meek” (see note on 5:5).
The Pharisees are rigid in their legalism. While the Law allowed plucking a few heads of grain in a neighbor's field (Dt 23:25), they consider it “reaping” and therefore unlawful on the Sabbath.
Providing OT examples of blameless “violations” of the Sabbath, Jesus demonstrates the law is not absolute over human need or service to God. The partaking of the showbread by David and his men (1Kg 21:5–7) prefigures the Eucharist, which in the OT was forbidden to anyone except the priests, but in Christ is given to all the faithful.
12:6-8 As the Author of the Law, Jesus is Lord over all of it. As Lord, He teaches that mercy takes precedence over regulations, ordinances, and ritualistic observances.
Our Lord's refusal to fully disclose His identity as Messiah is foreseen by Isaiah (Is 42:1–4). The reasons for secrecy include: (1) the growing hostility of the Jewish leaders; (2) the people's misunderstanding of the Messiah as an earthly, political leader; and (3) our Lord's desire to evoke genuine faith not based solely on marvelous signs. The Servant (v. 18) refers first to Christ, and by extension to all who follow Him.
The mission to the Gentiles after Pentecost was foreseen by Isaiah (Is 42:4).
Beelzebub, or Baal, was the prince of “the dung heap” or lord of “the flies”—a god worshipped by the Philistines (4Kg 1:2–16). Here, he is called ruler of the demons (v. 24). The impossibility of demons fighting against themselves illustrates the irrational pride and envy of the Pharisees in their opposition to Jesus.
Blasphemy against the Holy Spirit is blasphemy against the divine activity of the Spirit, blasphemy against pure goodness. A sin against the Son of Man is more easily forgiven because the Jews did not know much about Christ. But blasphemy against the Spirit, whose divine activity they knew from the OT, will not be forgiven because it comes from a willful hardness of heart and a refusal to accept God's mercy.

The Fathers are clear that blasphemy against the Holy Spirit is not an “unforgivable sin”; nor does Jesus ever call this sin “unforgivable.” St. John Chrysostom teaches that blasphemy against the Holy Spirit would be forgivable if a person were to repent of it. Jesus makes this declaration knowing that those who blaspheme the Spirit are calling pure, divine goodness “evil,” and are beyond repentance by their own choice.
The heart in Scripture refers to the center of consciousness, the seat of the intellect and the will, and the place from which spiritual life proceeds. When God's grace permeates the heart, it masters the body and guides all actions and thoughts. On the other hand, when malice and evil capture the heart, a person becomes full of darkness and spiritual confusion.
Adulterous generation echoes the illustration used for Israel by the prophets when Israel was unfaithful to God (Jer 2; Hos 2:2–13).
When the Israelites were delivered out of Egypt, they did not repent of their impure ways, and an unclean spirit took up residence in their hearts (Dt 31:20; Ps 105:34–39). Thus, we guard our hearts. Unless there is full repentance and the Holy Spirit dwells in a person, an expelled demon will return with others and reoccupy its abode.
Christ's relatives have not yet understood His identity and mission. He points to a spiritual family based on obedience to the will of My Father (v. 50).

In Jewish usage, brother can indicate any number of relations. Abram called his nephew Lot “brother” (Gn 14:14); Boaz spoke of his cousin Elimelech as his “brother” (Ru 4:3); and Joab called his cousin Amasa “brother” (2Kg 20:9). Christ Himself had no blood brothers, for Mary had but one Son: Jesus. The brothers mentioned here were either stepbrothers, sons of Joseph by a previous marriage, or cousins. Indeed, Jesus commits His mother to the care of John at the Cross (Jn 19:25–27), which would have been unthinkable if Mary had had other children to care for her.
In the OT, metaphors of sowing and harvesting are common (Ps 125:5; Jer 38:27–30; Hos 2:21–23; Joel 3:12–14), as this was a part of daily life. Here, Jesus reveals Himself as the promised Messiah, the sower in the earth, who had been foretold in Is 55:10–13.
The mysteries of the kingdom are not merely obscure concepts or some religious truths only for the elite, nor is the understanding of the parables simply an intellectual process. Even the disciples find the message hard to understand. While Jesus taught the same message to all, it is the simple and innocent who are open to its message.
This parable builds on the previous parable of the sower. Here Christ gives attention to the enemy who has sown his seed among the seed of Christ. As falsehood came after truth and false prophets came after the true prophets, so the Antichrist will come after Christ. Just as the weeds first appear similar to wheat, so the devil fashions his lies to resemble the truth. That the devil sows while men slept indicates that heresy and lies creep in when people are apathetic.

This parable also explains why the Church neither condemns nominal members, nor judges those outside the Church (1Co 5:12, 13). Just as wheat would be destroyed in weeding out the tares, so also, many people who might ultimately find salvation would otherwise be lost if condemned before Christ's judgment.
13:31-33 The mustard seed and the leaven represent the disciples who, according to Theophylact, began as just a few men, but “soon encompassed the whole earth.” These also stand for faith entering a person’s soul, which causes an inward growth of virtue. This soul will become godlike and can receive even angels.
The parable of the treasure hidden in a field illustrates those who unintentionally stumble onto Christ and His Church, yet receive Him with great eagerness. The parable of the pearl of great price illustrates those who have been searching in their hearts for Him and finally find Him and His Church. The other pearls represent all the various teachings and philosophies of the world. These treasures are hidden in that they are neither recognized nor valued by those immersed in worldliness. In both parables, receiving the treasure requires that everything else must be sold, that is, a person must surrender all things in order to receive Christ.
The image of the fishing net gathering the good and wicked together is similar to the parable of the wheat and the tares (vv. 36–43). This parable further emphasizes that even those gathered into the Church are subject to judgment.
St. John Chrysostom notes that Jesus does not exclude the OT, but rather praises it as a treasure. Those who truly write or speak of the kingdom of heaven will draw from the unity of the new and old Testaments, for both are holy, with the New being the fulfillment of the Old. This indeed is how Matthew composed his gospel (see note 1:22).
According to Theophylact, when Jesus heard it refers not to John's death, but to Herod's comment that Jesus was John raised from the dead (v. 2), since the account of John's death is given parenthetically.
This miracle, reported by all four evangelists, shows Jesus feeding a great multitude of His people as He fed the Israelites in the desert (see Ex 16). The Church Fathers see in this an image of the Eucharist, an idea made clear in Jn 6. In 15:32–39, another miracle is mentioned in which Jesus feeds four thousand people with seven loaves and a few small fish. While certain modern scholars have attempted to say that these are merely the same story, the witness of the gospel is clear that they are two distinct accounts, with Christ Himself referring to both of them separately (16:8–10).

Moved with compassion is used frequently concerning the Lord (20:34; Mk 1:41; 6:34; Lk 7:13), showing that His power and authority are extended to those who suffer.

A spiritual interpretation given by the Fathers teaches that the five loaves indicate the five books of the Law (Genesis through Deuteronomy), which are broken open in Christ and thus feed the universe. The two fish represent the Gospel Book and the Epistle Book, the teaching of the fishermen. The gathering of the leftovers by the apostles (v. 20) shows that the teachings the faithful are unable to grasp are nevertheless held in the consciousness of the Church.
Jesus shows us that we should never eat without first giving thanks to God. The terminology points to the Last Supper (26:26) and leads to a eucharistic interpretation of this miracle. Just as the disciples distribute the bread to the multitudes, so also Christ feeds the Eucharist to His flock through the hands of His bishops and presbyters.
14:22-33 Only God has dominion over nature; thus, this miracle confirms the divinity of Christ. See also the notes at 8:23–27 and Lk 8:22–25.
This is the second time Christ permits His disciples to be caught in a storm (see 8:23–27). The first time He was with them; here He had left them alone. In this way, Christ strengthens their faith that He will always be with them in the midst of the storms of life. \textit{It is I} is literally translated “I Am,” which is the divine Name of God (see Jn 8:58); Christ reminds the fearful disciples of His absolute and divine authority over their lives.
Peter's faith allows him to walk on the water. Note that Peter does not ask to walk on water per se, but to come to Jesus; his desire is not to perform miracles but to be with the Lord. Peter is able to participate in this divine miracle as long as he keeps his focus on Christ. As soon as he is distracted, he begins to sink.
The Greek term for doubt here means “wavering” or “hesitation.” The cause of Peter's sinking was not the storm, but the doubt; thus Christ does not rebuke the wind, but Peter.
This is the first time the disciples confess that Jesus is the Son of God. Knowing that only God can be worshiped, they confess Christ's divinity by worshiping Him. The boat is symbolic of the Church.
Christ permits miracles through touch to show that His very body is life, and that contact with His flesh is life-creating (see 9:20–22).
The tradition of the elders (v. 2) refers to the interpretations of the Law by Jewish teachers. Jesus refutes their views that ritual purity depends on outward actions. Rather it is the state of the heart (v. 8) that determines a person's purity.
Christ shows that the commandment of God cannot be superseded by man's religious traditions. Devotion to God includes both obedience to His commandments and service to others—these two cannot be separated (see also Jam 2:14–18; 1Jn 4:7–21).
The story of ministry to this Gentile woman illustrates the Jewish orientation of Matthew's gospel. This account is also mentioned in Mk 7:24–30, but with two major differences: (1) Matthew records Christ's words concerning the lost sheep of the house of Israel (v. 24), while Mark does not, and (2) Matthew records the woman using the title Son of David, a Jewish term for the Messiah, while Mark does not. Christ went to the Gentile cities not to preach, but to withdraw from the faithless Pharisees. This is confirmed in Mark's gospel, where we read that Christ “wanted no one to know” He was there, and here, where Christ says that He was only sent to the house of Israel.
This woman shows immeasurable love—she so identifies with the sufferings of her daughter that she cries "Have mercy on me," for she sees her daughter's well-being as her own and her daughter's sufferings as her own.
Christ refuses to answer, not only because she is a Gentile and His ministry before His Passion is first to the Jews, but also to reveal this woman's profound faith and love. Several of the Fathers see the disciples' request to send her away as an attempt to persuade Jesus to heal the daughter, as if to say, “Give her what she wants so that she will leave.” Christ's response indicates this interpretation is correct, for He again refuses to heal the daughter.
Having evoked this woman's love and persistent faith, Christ now reveals her humility. She accepts her place beneath the Jews, who were the chosen people of God, yet still desires a share in God's grace. Christ's hesitancy was not a lack of compassion, but a conscious means of revealing the virtues of this woman, both to the disciples and for her own sake.

Her ultimate acceptance by Christ also points to the gathering of the Gentiles into the Church after Pentecost, no longer as dogs, but as children who are invited to eat the bread of eternal life.
Christ's healing of the multitudes here shows that these Jews actually had less faith than the Canaanite woman (vv. 21–28). Christ healed the woman “with much delay, but these immediately, because she is more faithful than they. He delays with her to reveal her perseverance, while here He bestows the gift immediately to stop the mouths of the unbelieving Jews” (JohnChr).
This second feeding of a multitude should not be confused with the first (14:22–33), for they are two distinct miracles (see 16:8–10). The variance in the number of loaves is significant. In the first instance, there were five loaves, symbolizing the Law, while here, there are seven (v. 34). Seven symbolizes completeness and here indicates spiritual perfection. Thus, in the first instance, Christ reveals Himself as fulfilling the Law, while here He shows that it is He who grants spiritual perfection. Note also these crowds had been with Christ for three days (v. 32), the number of days He would rest in the tomb. Participation in His perfection can only come through being united to Christ's death (see Rom 6:3–5).
16:1-3  A sign from heaven means a spectacular display of power. The time of the Messiah among the Jews was expected to be accompanied by signs, but these hypocrites have not recognized the signs already being performed because their hearts were hardened, and they ignored the works happening all around them.
16:5-12 The leaven of the Pharisees (v. 6) is their doctrine (v. 12) and their hypocrisy (Lk 12:2). The reason the disciples are painfully slow to understand is that they have such little faith (v. 8); they would not fully grasp Christ's teachings until Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit was given.
WHO DO YOU SAY THAT I AM? (v. 15) is the greatest question a person can ever face, for it is the question that defines Christianity. Peter's correct answer to this question prevents the Christian faith from being seen as merely another philosophical system or path of spirituality, for it names Jesus as the one and only Son of the living God. This position excludes all compromise with other religious systems. Peter's understanding cannot be achieved by human reason, but only by divine revelation through faith (1Co 12:3). Christ means “Anointed One,” and is equivalent to the Hebrew title “Messiah.”

Note that Christ first draws out erroneous opinions about Himself (vv. 13, 14). He does this to identify these incorrect ideas, as a person is better prepared to avoid false teachings when they are clearly identified.
Peter/rock is a play on the word for “rock” in both Aramaic and Greek (petros/petra). This rock refers not to Peter per se, but to “the faith of his confession” (JohnChr). The true Rock is Christ Himself (1Co 10:4), and the Church is built on the faithful confession of Christ.

Gates of Hades: powers of death. In the OT, gates suggest a fortified city (Gn 22:17; 24:60; Is 14:31). By shattering its gates, Christ opens the stronghold of death to set free the souls of the righteous. So also, the Church shall not be stopped in her proclamation of salvation.

The term church is mentioned only twice in all the gospels, here and in 18:17. This Church is the true Israel and the Body of Christ; her citizenship is heavenly.
Keys of the kingdom refers to a special authority that will be given to both Peter and the other apostles after the Resurrection (see 18:18; Jn 20:23). Peter was not a leader over the others, but among them. This truth was confirmed at the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15) where the apostles and presbyters met as equals, and where Peter advised, but James presided. Papal claims in later centuries must not be confused with the NT witness regarding Peter, nor should the role of Peter be diminished in opposition to these claims.

Binding and loosing is a reference primarily to the authority “to absolve sins” (JohnChr; see Jn 20:23), but it also includes all the teaching, sacramental, and administrative authority of the apostles. This authority was in turn transmitted to the bishops of the Church and continues in effect to this day.
After Peter's confession, Jesus reveals the true nature of His messiahship: the mystery of His Passion. It was expected that the Messiah would reign forever, so the idea that Christ would die was perplexing to Peter and remained scandalous to the Jews even after the Resurrection (1Co 1:23). Peter unwittingly speaks for Satan, as the devil did not want Christ to fulfill His mission and save mankind through suffering and death.
The cross, a dreaded instrument of Roman punishment, is also a symbol of suffering by Christians in imitation of Christ. We practice self-denial for the sake of the love of God and the gospel. Accepting this suffering is not a punishment, nor is it an end in itself, but a means to overcome the fallen world for the sake of the Kingdom and to crucify the flesh with its passions and desires (Gal 5:24).
The central paradox of Christian living is that in grasping for temporal things, we lose the eternal; but in sacrificing everything in this world, we gain eternal riches that are unimaginable (1Co 2:9).
What will a man give in exchange for his soul? This question emphasizes the utter foolishness of accumulating worldly wealth or power, for none of this can redeem man's fallen soul, nor benefit a person in the life to come.
16:28 This is a reference to those who would witness the Transfiguration (17:1–9), as well as those in every generation who will experience the presence of God's Kingdom.
A high mountain is often a place of divine revelation in Scripture (5:1; Gn 22:2; Ex 19:3, 23; Is 2:3; 2Pt 1:18).
See the article, “The Transfiguration”; see also note at Lk 9:31.
Sickness in Scripture is often connected to demonic activity. By kneeling, this father shows humility, but he lacks faith. While the disciples also lacked faith (v. 20), Christ rebukes the man for placing the blame on the disciples when it was his greater lack of faith that prevented the boy's healing. In effect, Jesus defends His disciples in front of the multitudes but later rebukes them privately (vv. 19–21), teaching us that we ought first to correct people in private (see 18:15–17).
St. John Chrysostom notes this rebuke is directed at the nine disciples who could not cast out the demon, whereas “the pillars” of faith—Peter, James, and John (Gal 2:9)—were not included in the rebuke, as they had been on the mountain with Christ (v. 1).

This kind (v. 21) refers to all powers of darkness, not simply those that cause a particular illness. The banishment of demons requires faith (v. 20), prayer, and fasting (v. 21), for there is no healing and no victory in spiritual warfare without all three. Beginning with the Didache, the Fathers have taught that both the person in need of healing and the person performing the healing must believe, pray, and fast. On moving a mountain, see note at 21:21.
17:22-23 Jesus predicts His death and Resurrection a second time (see 16:21) to show that He is going to His Passion freely and not being taken against His will.
The temple tax was an annual head tax on all male Jews (except the priests) over twelve years of age for the maintenance of the temple (see Nm 3:43–51). Since Jesus is the Son of God, He is both High Priest and “proprietor” of the temple, and thus is exempt from the tax. Nevertheless, He pays it anyway, both to avoid unnecessary offense and to show that He has totally identified Himself with mankind.
This question indicates a selfish interest in worldly power. Pointing to a little child as the model of true discipleship, Jesus emphasizes the virtues required for entrance into the kingdom of heaven: humility, dependence, lowliness, simplicity, obedience, and a willingness to love and be loved. In Orthodox iconography, St. Ignatius of Antioch is depicted as this child. In certain legends of saints, he is the boy who gave the loaves and fishes (Jn 6:9).
Little ones include all who have childlike humility and simplicity, all who are poor in spirit.
18:8 See also 5:29. The reference to mutilation is an illustration of decisive action to avoid sin and does not advocate literal amputation. This also refers to harmful relationships that must be severed for the salvation of all parties (see Lk 14:26; 1Co 5:5).
Unlike earthly shepherds, Christ sees such value in one sheep that He will leave the others at risk to save it. The ninety-nine sheep represent the righteous who remain faithful to God (Lk 15:7). According to certain Fathers, this is also an image of the Incarnation in which the ninety-nine represent the angels in heaven; Christ descended from heaven to pursue the one sheep—man—who had fallen into corruption on earth.
Church discipline is based on mutual correction in three expanding stages. Sin and correction are to remain private unless the offender refuses to repent. All correction must be done with great care and humility, with the highest concern being the salvation of the offender (see 1 Co 5:5; Gal 6:1). Nevertheless, correction must take place so that the sin does not spread to others as well.
Church: See the glossary.
The authority to bind and loose sins is given to the apostles and transmitted to the bishops and presbyters they ordained. This authority is given for the sake of the salvation of the sinner. The sinner, “seeing that he is not only cast out of the Church, but that the bond of his sin will remain in Heaven, he may turn and become gentle” (JohnChr).
Seventy times seven: Symbolic of an unlimited amount. This parable illustrates the need for unlimited forgiveness. Ten thousand talents (v. 24) is an impossible sum, more than a laborer could earn in several lifetimes. A hundred denarii (v. 28) is a significant amount from an earthly perspective (about three months' wages), yet it is a pittance when compared to the debt owed the king. God not only stays the punishment we deserve, but forgives us the entire debt as well (v. 27). Because God forgives us, we in turn are required to grant the gift of forgiveness to others.
18:25 Certain Fathers give a spiritual interpretation to the punishment described here. The man represents the soul, the wife represents the body, and the children represent a person's deeds. Thus, the body and the deeds are given over to slavery, that is to Satan, so that the soul might possibly be saved (see 1Co 5:5).
Christ steers the disciples toward understanding the holiness of virginity, not as a rejection of marriage, but as a special calling for those to whom it has been given. Eunuchs were men who had been castrated, whether by birth defect, disease, or mutilation, and were often employed to guard women of nobility. Here, Jesus uses the term figuratively for those who freely choose lifelong celibacy for the sake of the kingdom of heaven. This consecrated virginity is not to be confused with self-mutilation, which the Church condemned at the First Ecumenical Council (AD 325). See also 1Co 7:7, 25–38.
This man does not come to test Jesus, but to seek advice from one he considers no more than a good Teacher. Christ's response (v. 17) does not deny that He is God, but is designed to lead the rich man to this knowledge.
19:20 Formal observance of commandments does not make one righteous before God. This man had an earnest desire for eternal life and sensed that he still lacked something; thus, he continues to press Jesus for the answer.
To be perfect, one must willingly sacrifice all and follow Christ. Nothing is gained unless this sacrifice is given freely. The specifics of how one follows Christ will be different for each person. Because wealth had such a grip on this rich man, his only hope was to sell and give away all his possessions. St. John Chrysostom tells us that giving away possessions is the least of Christ's instructions here; following Him in all things is a far greater and more difficult calling.
Various interpretations have been suggested for the impossible image of a camel going through the eye of a needle: e.g., that the word was not camel, but “rope”; or that the eye of a needle was a city gate through which a camel might barely squeeze if it were first unloaded of all its baggage, symbolizing wealth. Even the Talmud uses the expression “for an elephant to go through the eye of a needle.” Whatever the phrase refers to, it displays the impossibility of salvation for those who are attached to riches. This is clearly evidenced by the disciples' response, “Who then can be saved?” Yet by God's grace, even what is impossible to man can come to pass.
Christ is not commanding believers to divorce spouses and abandon children. According to St. John Chrysostom, this refers to keeping faith under persecution even if it means to lose one's family. It also means to accept that unbelieving family members may cut off ties because of the believer's faith (see 1Co 7:12–16). Believers are promised a hundredfold of houses and relatives not in an earthly sense, but in a spiritual sense—the fathers and mothers of the Church, our brothers and sisters in Christ, and houses of worship and fellowship.
In this parable, the vineyard is life in this world. The day refers both to the span of a single person's life and to the whole of human history. The laborers are all the people in every nation. Each hour can refer to times in a person's life, whether infancy, youth, adulthood, maturity, or old age. It also has a second meaning in the span of history, referring to those called during the covenants with Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and finally Christ.

God's generosity provides equal reward for both early and late comers. Jesus teaches that the former should not be proud of their long service nor resent those called at the eleventh hour. To the latecomers, He teaches that it is possible even in a short time or at the end of one's life to recover and inherit everything.

In the early Church, this message applied specifically to the Jews (the first-called) and the Gentiles (those called later). In our day, it can be applied to those raised in the Church and to those who find the Church later in life, both of whom receive an equal reward. St. John Chrysostom's renowned paschal sermon is based on this parable, applying it to the preparations of each person in approaching the paschal Eucharist.
Christ's repeated prediction of His Passion was meant to encourage and strengthen the disciples for the terrifying events they would face. It is as if Christ were saying, “Think on all these [words and miracles], so that when you see me hanging on the Cross, you will not imagine that I am suffering because I am powerless to do otherwise” (Theoph).
This quest for temporal power and glory is unfitting for a disciple and shows an earthly misunderstanding of the Kingdom of God. Matthew reports that the mother of Zebedee's sons requested this honor, but John's and James' own involvement is revealed by the plural you in v. 22, and in Mk 10:35.

Christ calls His Crucifixion a cup and His death a baptism. The Cross is a cup because He drank it willingly (Heb 12:2). His death is baptism, for He was completely immersed in it, yet it cleansed the world (Rom 6:3–6). Christ's prophecy of John and James participating in the same cup and baptism shows the life of persecution and martyrdom they would lead after Pentecost.

Christ declaring that the places of honor in the Kingdom are not His to give does not mean that He lacks authority. Rather, it means that they are not His to give arbitrarily. Instead, He will give them to those for whom God has prepared them. Note also that with regard to sitting as equals on the right and left hand of Christ in His Kingdom, St. John Chrysostom teaches that no one could possibly occupy such a position. With regard to the highest places of honor that can be given to man, the icons of the Church universally depict the Virgin Mary (the most blessed among women—Lk 1:28) and John the Baptist (the greatest born of women—11:11) holding these places.
The two blind men greet Jesus as Lord, the common title for God, and Son of David, a title deeply associated with the Messiah. Even though Jesus knows what we want before we ask, He calls us to ask freely so that we might learn of His mercy.

The Fathers also give a spiritual interpretation to this miracle, with the blind men symbolizing future generations who would come to faith only by hearing, without the benefit of seeing Christ in person (see Jn 20:29). Those who tried to silence the blind men are persecutors and tyrants who, in every generation, try to silence the Church. Nevertheless, under persecution, the Church all the more confesses Jesus Christ.
Christ's Triumphal Entry into Jerusalem is celebrated by the Church on Palm Sunday. By Christ's time, Jewish nationalism had led to the expectation of a political Messiah to deliver them from Roman control and to reestablish David's kingdom. In humility, Jesus shows that He has not come to establish an earthly kingdom. He does not ride on a horse nor in a chariot, but on a donkey—a sign of humility and peace (Zec 9:9). This entrance into the Holy City declares the establishment of the Kingdom of God. It is also a promise of Christ's final entrance into the heavenly Jerusalem with all believers and of His accepting the New Jerusalem as His pure Bride (Rev 21:2).
Matthew reports a colt as well as a donkey. The Fathers see the two animals as representing the faithful Jews and the Gentiles who are brought together in the Kingdom. At Vespers of Palm Sunday, we sing, “Your riding on a foal prefigured how the untamed and uninstructed Gentiles would pass from unbelief to faith.”
The people who spread their clothes before Jesus did so as paying reverence to a King. It is spiritually interpreted as our need to lay down our flesh, and indeed our very lives, for Christ.
This cry comes from Ps 117:25, 26, which was associated with messianic expectation. It was recited daily for six days during the Feast of Tabernacles, and seven times on the seventh day as branches were waved. Hosanna means, “Save, we pray!”
Those who bought and sold were trading in live animals to be used for sacrifices. The money changers traded Roman coins for Jewish coins since Roman coins, which bore the image of Caesar, were considered defiling in the temple. The cleansing of the temple also points to the necessity that the Church be kept free from earthly pursuits. As each person is considered a temple of God (1Co 3:16; 6:19), it is also a sign that our hearts and minds must be cleansed of earthly matters.
“Keep the feast with the children, and holding branches in your hands, sing ‘Hosanna’”—so we declare at Vespers of Palm Sunday. Many liturgical hymns of this day emphasize the perfect praise of the children, which unlike that of the adults, was innocent, fitting, unashamed, and from hearts of pure love. We are called to glorify Christ in the same spirit (see 18:1–4). In contrast, the adults' praise carried earthly expectations and agendas which, when left unfulfilled, led them to rebel against Jesus just five days later (27:20–23).
The fig tree, a symbol of prosperity and peace, withers because it is fruitless. This is a prophetic act directed toward the Jews, since after three years of Christ's preaching, teaching, and healing, both the leaders and the crowds were destitute of spiritual fruit. He curses the tree also to warn those in every generation of what will befall anyone who fails to listen to His message.
While it is not recorded that an apostle literally moved a mountain, the Fathers are clear that they had this authority if the need had arisen (certain saints did make crevices appear in mountains). Furthermore, not everything the apostles accomplished was written down. Beyond the literal meaning, this promise is also an illustration of the power of faith and prayer in all areas of life. “Whatever we ask, without hesitation and believing in God's power, we shall receive” when we ask for spiritually profitable things (Theoph).
Since Christ is not a Levitical priest, the chief priests and the elders challenge His authority to cleanse the temple. As Christ is careful not to reveal Himself to scoffers, He confounds them with a different question about John. Both the elders' question and Christ's question require the same answer, and thus would lead a person to confess that Jesus has come from heaven. By not answering them directly, Christ teaches us not to answer people who come asking about holy things with a malicious intent.
Using their own principles, the elders convict themselves in their answer to Christ's parable.
This stone is Christ. According to St. John Chrysostom, this saying illustrates the two ways of destruction. Those falling on the stone are people who suffer the consequences of their sins while yet in this life, whereas those on whom the stone falls are unrepentant people suffering utter destruction in the final judgment.
Like the preceding parables, this one also proclaims the transfer of the Kingdom from the faithless Jews to the Gentiles. It is set as a joyful wedding banquet (v. 2; see 25:1–13), for Christ is often called the “Bridegroom” (9:15; Jn 3:29), and St. Paul uses a marriage analogy for the Kingdom (Eph 5:21–33).

The repeated sending out of servants shows the Father's great desire to have His people with Him in the Kingdom. The first group (v. 3) is interpreted to be Moses and those with him, while the second group (v. 4) is composed of the prophets. These groups call those initially invited—the Jews. The third group (v. 9) represents the apostles sent to the Gentiles, those not initially invited, but now called.
22:4 The oxen represent the sacrifices of the Old Covenant, while the fatted cattle represent the eucharistic bread of the New Covenant. (Fatted is better translated “wheat-fed,” or even more literally “formed from wheat”; see note at Lk 15:23.) Thus, both the Old and New Covenants are fulfilled at the wedding of Christ and His Church.
Burned up their city: St. John Chrysostom teaches that Christ is prophesying the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in AD 70, and thus attributes this destruction to an act of God rather than simply to that of men. Nevertheless, God showed His patience by waiting some 40 years from the time of Christ, giving the entire generation a chance to repent.
22:11-13  The wedding garment would have been provided by the king, and therefore the man had no excuse for not wearing one; thus he is speechless. His refusal to wear the garment that was provided is an illustration of those who refuse God's hospitality, or who want His Kingdom on their own terms. Specifically, the garment refers to the baptismal garment, and by extension, a life of faith, repentance, virtue, and charity. Without these, a person will ultimately be cast into outer darkness.
You are mistaken (v. 29): Christ confirms that there will be a resurrection, but not of the sort the Sadducees are imagining. They consider the resurrection to be a continuation of earthly life (including earthly marriage), and thus mock such a doctrine with an absurd scenario. However, they are ignorant of the Scriptures, which reveal a complete transfiguration of life in the resurrection, making such earthly questions irrelevant. Furthermore, they fail to understand how Abraham and his sons can be alive in God even if they are physically dead. It is the clear teaching of Christ that the souls of the faithful who have departed this life are sustained before the face of God in anticipation of the final joy of the resurrection.
The Pharisees had found 613 commandments in the Scriptures and debated about which one was central. Jesus sets forth the first and the second, which constitute the grand summary of the Law. Though the lawyer has come with malice to test the Lord, we know from St. Mark’s account that this man is converted by Christ's answer (Mk 12:28–34).
This second commandment must be understood as written: You shall love your neighbor as yourself, or more clearly, “as being yourself.” It is often misinterpreted, “You shall love your neighbor as you love yourself,” which destroys the force of the statement. How much we love ourselves is not the standard by which Christ is calling us to love others. Rather, we are called to love our neighbor as being of the same nature as we ourselves are, as being created in God's image and likeness just as we are. As the Fathers teach, we find our true self in loving our neighbor.
Christ asks this question to lead the Pharisees to the only logical conclusion: that He is God incarnate. They supposed the Messiah to be a mere man, and therefore reply that the Messiah would be a Son of David. David, as king of Israel, could not and would not address anyone as “Lord” except God. Yet in Ps 109:1, David refers to the Messiah as “Lord.” Therefore, the Messiah must be God. The only possible conclusion is that the Messiah is a descendant of David only according to the flesh, yet is also truly divine, sharing His Lordship with God the Father and the Holy Spirit. The Pharisees do not answer because they realize the implications and are afraid to confess Jesus to be the Son of God. See also note at Lk 20:41–44.
Jesus spoke His final public sermon, a grand critique of the ways of the scribes and Pharisees. Several themes include: (1) The Jewish leaders have God-given authority and teach God's Law, but are personally ungodly and cold-hearted. Their teaching is to be honored, but they are not to be imitated (vv. 2–7). (2) God is our true Father and Teacher. A teacher or father on earth is one who leads people to God. The scribes and Pharisees do the opposite, placing themselves in God's position (vv. 8–12). (3) In His eightfold indictment of the scribes and Pharisees (vv. 13–36), Jesus charges them with inverting God's values and with being mean-spirited, judgmental, greedy, ambitious, absorbed in externals, and blindly self-righteous. While these charges were directed against the Jewish leaders of the day, every word applies equally to those in the Church who behave in this way.
To sit in Moses' seat means to hold the succession of office down from Moses himself. In the synagogue, the teacher spoke while seated as a sign of this authority. St. John Chrysostom notes that the scribes were depraved in thought and in heart, yet Jesus still upholds the dignity of their office, for they speak not their own words but God's. Likewise within the Church, the clergy are to be shown respect because they hold the apostolic office, even though they too are sinners. Furthermore, the sins of the clergy do not relieve the people from their responsibilities before God.
Phylacteries are small leather pouches containing passages of Scripture worn on the arm or forehead. The idea was to keep God's Law always in mind (see Ex 13:9), but the Pharisees had used them as a show of false piety, making them increasingly larger and more noticeable.
Christ’s warning against calling hypocrites father and teacher is not an absolute prohibition against using these terms, as some teach. These terms are applied to men many times in the NT, all of which usages are inspired by God. Teacher is used in Jn 3:10; Acts 13:1; 1Co 12:28; Eph 4:11; and 2Ti 1:11. Father is used in Lk 16:24; 1Co 4:15; and Col 3:21. Since the very early days of the Church, bishops and presbyters have been called “father” not because they take the place of God, but because in their fatherly care for their flocks, they lead people to God, and they exercise fatherly authority within the community.
23:13 Because the example of a leader can be so influential, leaders who do not love God can hinder others from finding Him as well. Thus, leaders are held to a higher standard (Jam 3:1).
These warnings are especially important to Orthodox Christians. The Church has maintained the ancient practices of tithing (These you ought to have done, v. 23; see also St. John Chrysostom's homily on Eph 2 and ch. 9 of the Didascalia Apostolorum); sacred vessels (v. 25); holy rites (v. 27); and following the tradition handed down from our fathers. These practices can be expressions of deep faith, lead a person to deeper commitment to God, and safeguard our life in Christ, or they can be observed without ever taking them to heart and lead to condemnation.
23:24 The Pharisees would attach strainers to the mouths of decanters in order to avoid accidentally consuming a ritually unclean substance.
God's deepest desire is the reconciliation of His people, yet most do not want Him. The desolate house (v. 38) refers both to the temple and to the nation itself, for house can be used to mean “family” or “tribe” (see Ps 113:20; 134:19). Both the temple and the nation will be without God's presence once Christ departs.
Christ's prophecy of the destruction of the temple was fulfilled in AD 70, when the temple was destroyed by the Romans (see note at 22:7).
The Scriptures describe the end times in a variety of ways, so that no precise chronology can be determined (see Dan 7–12; Mk 13; Lk 21; 1Co 15:51–55; 1Th 4:13–17; 2Th 2:1–10; and the Book of Revelation). The Lord's emphasis is on watchfulness and the practice of virtue rather than on constructing timetables of things that have not yet happened. In Matthew's account here, the end is described as encompassing (1) the initial sorrows (vv. 4–14), (2) the great tribulation (vv. 15–28), and (3) the coming of the Son of Man (vv. 29–31). The period of the great tribulation includes the entire Christian era and is not limited to the final years before Christ's return.
The warnings against deception are given the most emphasis. Of particular importance is the warning against following a false Christ, which Jesus stresses again in vv. 11, 23–27.
The wars here refer first and foremost to the Roman destruction of Jerusalem, but certainly include subsequent wars. Wars are not a sign of the imminent end, but of the opposite—that the end is not yet (see 1Th 5:1–3).
All these calamities and all this opposition cannot stop the spread of the gospel, and indeed, persecutions against the Church often increase the number of souls being converted. St. John Chrysostom marvels that while the Romans subdued countless Jews in a political uprising, they could not prevail over twelve Jews unarmed with anything except the gospel of Jesus Christ.
Daniel's prophecy of the abomination of desolation (Dan 9:23) was fulfilled in AD 70, when the Roman general Titus entered the Most Holy Place and had a statue of himself erected in the temple before having the temple destroyed. The Lord's phrase when you see indicates that many of the disciples would still be alive at that time. The words whoever reads, let him understand are commonly understood to be inserted by Matthew into Christ's address as an encouragement to his early Christian flock, who may have witnessed this event.
The severity of winter weather or respect for the Sabbath would prevent many faithful from fleeing quickly in a time of desperation. A spiritual interpretation given by the Fathers sees the Sabbath as symbolizing idleness with regard to virtue, and winter as indicating fruitlessness with regard to charity. Thus, the person who departs this life in such a spiritual state will suffer judgment.
In what manner will Christ come back? The event will be unmistakable to the whole world. If there is any question or doubt, that alone is evidence that He has not returned. As Christ's return will shine from the east, so Orthodox Christians whenever possible worship facing eastward in symbolic hope and anticipation of His second and glorious coming.
According to the Fathers, the sun will not be destroyed, but darkened in relation to the glory of Christ. In other words, the sun will appear to be dark by comparison when Christ returns in the fullness of His splendor.
The sign of the Son of Man is the Cross, which will be revealed as the standard for Christ's impending judgment. While at His first coming, Christ came in humility and mortality, at His second coming, He will be revealed in power and great glory (see note at Est 6:6–9).
They will gather: See 1Th 4:13–18.
24:34  This generation refers to all believers at all times, the generation of the Church, and not merely to those alive at the time of Christ.
According to St. John Chrysostom, Christ tells of the angels being unaware of the exact day of His return “so that men should not seek to learn what angels do not know,” and to forbid them not only from learning the day, but from even inquiring about it.

According to Mk 13:32, and in Chrysostom's Matthew text, Jesus declares that the Son also does not know the day of His own return. Chrysostom teaches this is not to be understood literally, but is a figure of speech meaning that Christ, though He revealed all the signs that will accompany His return, will not reveal the exact day to anyone, and that believers should not be so brazen as to inquire of Him.
24:37-41 The second coming of Christ will entail a sudden revelation of judgment. One will be taken to heaven and the other left for eternal condemnation. This separation of the saints from the wicked will occur at the coming of the Son of Man (v. 39), and not, as some teach today, at a certain time before His second coming.
The Lord's purpose in this discourse is not to make people experts on end-time prophecy. Rather, it is so they may watch (v. 42) and be ready (v. 44), continuing in virtue and obeying Christ's commandments. This warning is illustrated in the parable of the returning master (vv. 45–51).
This parable illustrates the need for being spiritually prepared while the bridegroom—Christ—is delayed in His return (v. 5). The Kingdom is often portrayed as a marriage (see 22:1–14 and note) between Christ and His Church. The marriage will be consummated at the end of the age when the Bridegroom returns to escort His Bride—the Church—into the eternal wedding banquet.

This parable is primarily about the virtue of charity and almsgiving, as oil and “mercy” have the same root in Greek. The wise virgins are those who practice charity and mercy in this life, while the foolish are those who squander God's gifts on themselves.

The fact that all the virgins slumbered and slept indicates death: in this world the virtuous will die alongside the wicked. The cry at midnight indicates the Second Coming, when the wicked will arise with the righteous for judgment. The inability of the righteous to share their oil is not to be interpreted as a lack of generosity. Rather, it is an illustration of (1) the impossibility of entering heaven without one's own faith and virtue, and (2) the impossibility of changing one's state of virtue after death (see Lk 16:26).

The themes of this parable and the one before it (24:45–51) are woven together in the liturgical hymns of Holy Week, particularly in the troparion hymn for Holy Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, which begins, “Behold, the Bridegroom comes at midnight, and blessed is the servant whom He shall find watching.”
This parable illustrates the use of gifts given by God. Even one talent was a great sum of money; here it represents the goodness God has bestowed on each person. The amount each receives is based on that person's abilities (Rom 12:4–7). God does not show partiality in the ultimate reward, for all are invited to share the same joy (vv. 21, 23).

The wicked and lazy servant (v. 26) could not evade responsibility for ignoring his talent, for idleness is as much a rejection of God as outright wickedness. Burying the talent in the ground (v. 18) is an illustration of using one's God-given gifts for earthly pursuits. The bankers (v. 27) represent other faithful people to whom the man could have turned to help him use his talents wisely. Since help was available to him in the Church, the man has no excuse.
Here is the majestic climax of the discourse, which is not simply a parable, but a prophecy of the universal judgment that will indeed come. Since the Cross is now near to Him, Jesus raises the hearer to the sight of the glory of the Son of Man on His judgment seat and the whole world before Him.

The standard of judgment is uncalculated mercy toward others. The works produced by faith are emphasized, for saving faith always produces righteous works. What we do reflects our true inner state. The least (v. 40) refers to all the poor and the needy. The needs described in this parable include both physical and spiritual needs. Thus, the hungry or thirsty (v. 44) are not only those who need food and drink, but also those who hunger and thirst for the hope of the gospel.
Christ uses sheep to illustrate the righteous, for they follow His voice and are gentle and productive. Goats indicate the unrighteous, for they do not follow the shepherd and they walk along cliffs, which represent sin.
Inherit is a term used with regard to sons and daughters rather than strangers or servants, for the righteous become children of God by adoption (Gal 4:4–7).
25:40 To see Christ in everyone is the fulfillment of the great commandment to love your neighbor as yourself (22:39).
25:41 That the fire was prepared for the devil shows that God did not create hell for man; rather, people choose this torment by their coldness of heart.
Jesus is delivered up to His Passion by His accusers, yet He goes willingly. Unless Christ had willed to go, His accusers could never have taken Him. After His Resurrection, many saints imitated Christ by willingly going to martyrdom.
Jesus accepts this honor from the woman in her newly found faith. In particular, He accepts it as a sign of His coming burial (v. 12). Nevertheless, according to St. John Chrysostom, the disciples were not wrong in principle: mercy shown to the poor is more fitting than outward signs shown even to God (25:40; Jam 1:27). However, they did not understand that once the gift had been given, it was a greater mercy to accept it with love. “If anyone had asked Christ before the woman did this, He would not have approved it. But after she had done it, He looks only to the gift itself. For after the fragrant oil had been poured, what good was a rebuke? Likewise, if you should see anyone providing a sacred vessel or ornament for the walls of the church, do not spoil his zeal. But if beforehand he asks about it, command him to give instead to the poor” (JohnChr).
Simon the leper must have been healed by Jesus earlier, for lepers were forbidden to live in towns.
Because of her fervent faith, Jesus promises perpetual public memory of this woman. There is no consensus among the Fathers as to her identity in relation to accounts of similar events in Mk 14:3–9; Lk 7:36–38; and Jn 12:1–8. Some Fathers say that there were three different women in these four accounts, others that there were only two.
26:14-16  Judas on his own initiative seeks to betray Jesus. His motives have been debated, but the Fathers and the liturgical hymns declare that greed was his primary motive. This is revealed in Jn 12:4–6, where Judas was particularly upset about the “waste” of myrrh in the preceding story because he was a thief (see also 1Ti 6:10). The phrase one of the twelve is not used so much to identify Judas, who was already known by Matthew's hearers, but to emphasize the depth of the betrayal—that it was one of Christ's closest followers.
The Passover commemorates God's deliverance of Israel from slavery in Egypt to the Land of Promise. It prefigures the Passion of Christ, the new Passover (Gr. Pascha), God's redemption of all humanity from sin and death, and entrance into the promised Kingdom. Whether the first day of the Feast was Passover or the day before Passover is debated among the Fathers (see also note at Jn 19:14). What is certain is that Jesus regarded the meal with the disciples to be the Passover meal.
26:24-25 That it is written of Him does not cancel Judas' responsibility. God foresees but does not cause the evil actions of humans, who always have free will (see also note at Lk 22:3). Jesus lets Judas accuse himself, yet even hearing that Christ knew of his deception, Judas does not repent.
The Fathers teach that Jesus also drinks the cup of His own Blood. This He does to lead all believers into participation in His heavenly mysteries. In My Father's kingdom relates to the time after His Resurrection, when Christ will eat and drink to show the reality of His victory over death (Lk 24:41–43). Furthermore, it points to the eternal banquet of the Kingdom in the age to come.
This cup refers to Christ's impending death. According to His divine nature, Jesus willingly goes to His death. As a man, He wishes He could avoid it, for it is the mark of humanity to abhor death. He prays if it is possible that it be taken from Him, thus giving abundant proof of His human nature. Nevertheless, Jesus is without sin and completely subjects and unites His human will to the Father's divine will.
Watch and pray: The key to Christian spirituality and our struggle against temptation. By this, the Lord's human soul is strengthened, and He faces death with divine courage. In contrast to our Lord's vigilance, the disciples sleep. Since body and soul are united, the spirit is paralyzed by a lethargic body. A willing spirit, recognizing the weakness of the flesh, struggles against its weakness, relying on God's presence and power.
Jesus rebukes Peter (identified in Jn 18:10) for using the sword, for he still does not understand that Christ is going to His death willingly, that salvation for mankind might be fulfilled. A legion is 6,000 soldiers, so twelve legions equal 72,000 angels. That this death was foretold in the Scriptures served to strengthen the disciples at their hour of greatest test.
The people misunderstand the Lord's words reported in Jn 2:19–21. Some Jews believed the temple would be destroyed and a new one built by the Messiah.
Quoting from Ps 109 and Dan 7:13, Jesus confesses that He is the Messiah, both fully Man and fully God, for only a divine One could sit at the right hand of the Power, sharing authority with the Father. This statement was clearly understood by the high priest to be a claim of equality with God the Father (v. 65). For a mere man to claim this was punishable by death (Lv 24:16), but Christ is no mere man, and thus this declaration of equality is not blasphemy.
While the religious Law dictated the death penalty for blasphemers (Lv 24:16), under Roman occupation, the Jews were prohibited from carrying out an execution. Thus, they had to get permission from the governor.
In contrast to Peter, who repented in his sorrow (26:75), Judas is remorseful but does not repent. Suicide is not a sign of repentance but of being self-absorbed. Two accounts of Judas' suicide are given in the NT, here and in Acts 1:16–19.
27:11-14 The chief priests hide their real charge against Jesus—the claim of equality with God—because this would not persuade the governor to sentence Him to death. Instead, they present a charge of treason—that Jesus called Himself the King of the Jews. This crime would carry the death penalty, for it was a challenge to Roman rule.
Jesus is the true Son of the Father, yet the name Barabbas means “son of the father.” Ironically, the crowds must choose between one Son of the Father and the other. By influencing the crowds to choose Barabbas (v. 20), the chief priests indicate to which father they belong—the devil (Jn 8:44).
This verse has been used by certain groups to try to justify persecuting Jews, which is a grave and terrible sin. What was seen by many as a curse is in fact a blessing invoked unwittingly, for the Lord's blood is the source of their redemption. Furthermore, these words are implicitly spoken by anyone who sins. St. John Chrysostom teaches that even though these Jews “acted with such madness, so far from confirming a sentence on them or their children, Christ instead received those who repented and counted them worthy of good things beyond number.” He then notes the thousands who were converted in Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost (Acts 2:41) as evidence of Christ's mercy.
Every king is proclaimed by his soldiers. Even though the intention was mockery, it is prophetic that Jesus should be crowned and hailed as King by soldiers of the governor (see also Jn 11:49–51), where Caiaphas unwittingly prophesies of Christ's redemptive work). This mockery shows Jesus as the One despised and rejected by men who bears the iniquity of us all (see Is 53:3–9). Jesus is clothed in scarlet, representing both His royalty and the sins of humanity which He has taken upon Himself.
Jesus accepts mockery and endures the weakness of our body in His own to take upon Himself our sufferings. This He accomplishes by uniting His divine nature to our human nature. His humanity is indeed our humanity. Although He has no sin, He was made to be sin for us, that through His flesh He might condemn sin itself (Rom 8:3; 2Co 5:21; Heb 2:9). Two robbers (v. 38): Although one would later repent (Lk 23:39–43), at first both criminals mock Jesus (v. 44).
27:45  Darkness: See Zec 14:6, 7; Am 8:9.
Jesus prays Ps 21, which foretold the very details of the Crucifixion. Taken without the rest of the psalm, His cry of “Why have You forsaken me?” could be misinterpreted as a cry of despair. Since He took on our nature, Jesus experiences our alienation from God in His humanity, knowing our suffering and distress, yet He does not despair. He speaks these words in the name of humanity, completely identifying with us in our condition, for in His divinity, He is never forsaken by the Father.
Yielded up His spirit: Christ's death was voluntary to the very end, for even on the Cross, His life could not be taken from Him against His will. Christ accepts death on the Cross neither to receive the Father's punishment on our behalf, nor to satisfy the Father's need for blood-justice (as if God would demand such things), but so that by entering death as the divine Son of God, He can destroy this last enemy, which is death itself (1Co 15:20–28; see note at Lk 23:46).
The veil that separated the Most Holy Place from the rest of the temple was a symbol of the separation between God and man. Christ's death opens the way into the presence of God for all people, giving people access to that which is the most holy of all: God Himself. In many Orthodox churches, there is a curtain between the altar and the nave which is drawn open during liturgical services to emphasize that communion with God, which was at one time sealed off from humanity, is now available to all who approach in faith.
The completeness of the salvation won by Christ is signified in the resurrection of the saints from the OT. This guarantees the promise given to Ezekiel that God can and will one day open the graves of all mankind (Ezk 37:1–14). The saints entering the holy city is an icon of resurrected humanity entering the heavenly Jerusalem (Heb 11:10; 12:22, 23; Rev 21:2–22:5).
The centurion, a Gentile, realizes Jesus has dominion over nature, and therefore acknowledges Him as the Son of God. Tradition knows this soldier as St. Longinos.
Mary the mother of James and Joses: Most Fathers teach this was the Virgin Mary, being in fact the stepmother of James and Joses (see 13:55; compare Mk 15:40, 47). Theophylact summarizes the teaching of the Fathers in this way: “James and Joses were sons of Joseph by his first wife. And since the Theotokos was called the ‘wife’ of Joseph, she is rightly called the ‘mother’ of his children, meaning ‘stepmother’.”
To ask for the body of Jesus is a bold public act for this wealthy man, showing that his faith has overcome any fear.
He is buried in a new tomb so that no suspicion might later arise that another had risen instead of Christ.
The earthquake is a sign of our Lord's great victory over death, foreshadowing the general resurrection of all humanity. Note that the angel does not roll back the stone to let the Lord out, for in His glory, Christ could pass through solid rock (see Jn 20:19). Rather, this allows the witnesses in to see that He has already risen.
These women are the first witnesses of the supreme event in all history: the Resurrection of Christ and the destruction of death. The angel refers to Christ as the One who was crucified, teaching us not to shy away from His death, but to glory in the Cross (1Co 2:2; Gal 6:14), which is the weapon Christ used to destroy death and the trophy of His victory. At the liturgical services of Pascha (Easter), Orthodox Christians sing the following hymn hundreds of times: “Christ is risen from the dead, trampling down death by death, and upon those in the tombs bestowing life.” As St. Paul says, “If Christ is not risen, your faith is futile” (1Co 15:17).
This lie is absurd, in that His disciples were afraid and had gone into hiding. Furthermore, most of them went on to suffer terrible persecution and martyrdom. It is unthinkable that they would willingly endure such sufferings over a known fallacy.
28:18 All authority has been given to Me: Christ declares that the authority that was His by nature in His divinity is now also possessed by His glorified human nature. This human nature has now trampled the final enemy—death (1Co 15:20–28).
This Great Commission—our Lord's final commandment given on earth—is to be lived out in the Church until He returns again. Making disciples cannot be done in the strength of man, but only in the power of God. The power of the Resurrection is not only for Jesus Himself, but is given to all believers for Christian life and mission.
Christ Himself is present in each believer and in the Church always, both personally and in the Holy Spirit, for neither can be separated from the other. To the end of the age does not by any means imply that we will be separated from Him at the end of the world. He is with us now, and forever, and unto the ages of ages. Amen.
John is clothed in a manner similar to that of Elijah (4Kg 1:8), which helps to show that he fulfills the prophecy of Elijah's return (see article “John the Baptist”).
Mark's written emphasis on John being put in prison before Jesus begins preaching reveals that a key purpose of the old covenant—to prepare the people for Christ—had been completed (Gal 4:1–5). Once Christ came, the time of preparation was fulfilled. To repent is to do a total “about-face.” The word in Greek literally means to “change one's mind.” Repentance is a radical change of one's spirit, mind, thought, and heart—a complete reorientation to a life centered in Christ.
On the calling of the first disciples, see notes at Mt 4:18–22.
The word immediately occurs almost forty times in Mark's Gospel, nearly all of them before our Lord's entrance into Jerusalem. The sense of urgency and purpose as Christ journeys toward Jerusalem to fulfill His mission of redeeming the world helps make Mark's account not only the shortest but also the most direct of the four Gospels.
Jesus sets forth for us an example of spiritual life. Though God incarnate,
He prayed continually, often finding a solitary place to be free from distraction, despite the multitude's need of Him. Our Lord's ministry comes forth from His communion with the Father and the Holy Spirit and flows to people in their needs. His praying in the morning teaches us that we must put as first priority our commitment to God, and only then will we be equipped to serve others.
On the cleansing of the leper, see notes at Mt 8:1-4 and Lk 5:12-16.
Righteous anger is a natural human emotion experienced in the face of sin. While there is anger that is certainly sinful (Mt 5:22), there is also anger that is God-given and proper to humanity (Ps 4:4). Christ's anger here is in response to people professing God, yet having such hardness in their hearts that they could not rejoice in the healing of one of their brothers.
Jesus withdrew both because the Pharisees were planning to destroy Him (though it was not time for Him to die) and in order to preach in other places.
On the twelve disciples, see note at Mt 10:1–4.
3:28-30  On the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, see note at Mt 12:32.
Parables: See the article “Parables” at Mt 13.
In this parable, our Lord reveals Himself as the promised Messiah, the sower, who had been foretold in Is 55:10–13. See also note at Lk 8:5–15.
4:24 This is a call to attentive listening and discriminating response. We must not only hear, but hear properly. More will be given to those who respond to Christ with open hearts; they will grow in understanding. “Do the good you know, and what you do not know will be revealed to you” (MkAsc). See also note at Mt 7:2.
This parable occurs only in Mark. The kingdom refers to the whole span of God's dispensation or plan of salvation. The man is Christ, and the seed is the gospel (see vv. 13–20). His sleep indicates Christ's death, from which He will rise. That the man does not know how the seed grows shows Christ does not manipulate man's response to the gospel, but each person is free to receive it and to let it grow in his own heart. The harvest indicates the Second Coming, when all will be judged on their reception of the gospel.
To unbelievers, the parables remain bewildering. To those with simple faith, these stories using common images reveal truth in ways they can grasp, as they were able.
5:1-20 The country of the Gadarenes was in Galilee, an area with many Gentiles living among the Jews (see also note at Mt 4:15). Gentile influence on the Jews caused many of them to take on Gentile practices, such as raising swine (v. 11), forbidden by the Law (Dt 14:8). For more on this miracle, see notes at Mt 8:28–34 and Lk 8:33.
A spiritual interpretation of this encounter given by the Fathers is that this woman symbolizes human nature in general. Humanity is in constant suffering and subject to death, symbolized by the flow of blood. The physicians who could not cure her stand for the various religions of the world, as well as the OT Law, which were unable to grant life to humanity. Only through Christ are we freed from suffering and bondage to sin.
On Christ raising the dead, see note at Lk 7:11–17.
Jesus could do no mighty work there, not because He lacked power, but because of the unbelief of all but a few in Nazareth. While grace is always offered to all, only those who receive it in faith obtain its benefits.
Anointing the sick with oil has not only medicinal value but sacramental value as well. As God's healing power is bestowed through creation (5:27; Nm 21:8, 9; 4Kg 13:21; Jn 9:6, 7; Acts 5:15; 19:11, 12), so oil is a vehicle of God's mercy and healing in the Church (Jam 5:14).
This King Herod was the son of the one who slew the infants in Bethlehem (Mt 2:16). Though he was technically a governor, he was popularly called king. Knowing that John the Baptist had worked no miracles while living, Herod now believes John was raised from the dead (v. 16), thinking powers are at work in him. Thus, he fears John more dead than alive.
Elijah was expected to return and work signs before the second coming of the Lord (Mal 4:5). The Prophet is interpreted by some to be a reference to the Messiah, the One whom Moses foretold (Dt 18:15), while others interpret it as simply meaning a new prophet had arisen.
This account is given parenthetically, explaining John's earlier death so hearers would understand why Herod would think that John had risen from the dead. After this flashback, v. 30 picks up where v. 13 left off. The beheading of St. John is remembered in the Church on August 29 with a day of fasting. As part of God's plan of salvation, John's martyrdom allowed the coming of the Messiah to be announced to the souls in Hades, for John was the forerunner of Christ there as well as on earth. At Matins on this day we sing, “Your tongue, which constantly speaks of God, has preceded Christ into death and is sent to preach Him to those in Hades.”
6:20 That Herod, with his wealth and soldiers, feared John, a man who lived in poverty and was clothed in camel's hair (1:6), is a testament both to the power of personal holiness and integrity, and also to the people's perception of John, for they held him in the highest esteem (11:32).
This verse picks up where v. 13 left off, as the story of the beheading of St. John is given parenthetically (see note at 6:20).
6:31 Christ gives rest to His disciples to show those engaged in preaching and teaching that they must not labor continuously, but must also take rest.
Knowing Christ is a matter of the heart, not merely the intellect. When our hearts are illumined by faith in God, they are open to receive His presence and grace. In the ascetic writings of the Church, the heart is known as “the seat of knowledge.”
6:56 Christ permits miracles through touch to show that His very body is life-giving (see also 5:25–29).
The issue here is not the observation of Jewish customs or traditions, which Jesus certainly does not prohibit (Mt 5:17–19; 23:23). At issue is setting human tradition contrary to the tradition of God (v. 8). The tradition of the elders (v. 3) is a body of interpretations of the Law, which for the Pharisees and the scribes (v. 1) was as authoritative as the Law and often superseded it. According to this tradition, offerings (called Corban, v. 11) could be promised to God in such a way that property or earnings could still be used for oneself, but not for anybody else, including one's parents. Secondary traditions such as this obscure the primary tradition of the Law, which is contained in God's commandments.
Food cannot defile a person because it is created by God and is therefore pure. Evil things (v. 21) are not from God, and these are what defile a person.
He sighed: a sign of divine compassion for the sufferings of our fallen human nature.
Here, our Lord shows us we must not seek acclaim or praise when we do good to others. Interestingly, Theophylact upholds those who disobey Christ in this situation, seeing them as a good example, that we should proclaim those who have done good to us even if they do not want us to.
The leaven of the Pharisees is their doctrine (Mt 16:12) and their hypocrisy (Lk 12:1). In Scripture, leaven is used both positively (as in Mt 13:33) and negatively, as it is here. In either case, leaven symbolizes a force powerful enough (and often subtle enough) to permeate and affect everything around it (see 1Co 5:6–8).
8:22-26  The people of Bethsaida were unbelieving (Mt 11:21); thus, Jesus leads the blind man out of the town to heal him, so that the people would not scoff at the miracle and bring upon themselves greater condemnation. That the blind man was healed in stages (vv. 23–25) shows that he had only a small amount of faith, for healing occurs according to one's faith (6:5, 6); yet this little faith was enough, and it increased with the touch of Christ. Christ's command not to return to the town (v. 26) symbolizes that we must not return to our sins once we have been forgiven.
This is a reference to those who would witness the Transfiguration (vv. 2–13), as well as to those in every generation who will experience the presence of God's kingdom.
On the Transfiguration, see note at Lk 9:31, and the article “The Transfiguration” at Mt 17.
Elijah: See Mt 17:13.
Jesus predicts His death and Resurrection a second time (see 8:31) to show He is going to His Passion freely, and not being taken against His will.
Little ones include all who have childlike humility and simplicity, all who are poor in spirit.
Christ's repeated predictions of His Passion were intended to encourage and strengthen the disciples for the terrifying events they would face. They also confirms that Christ was going to His death of His own will and choosing.
The phrase for many is an Aramaic expression meaning “for all.”
The restoration of sight to the blind (vv. 51, 52) was a sign expected to be performed by the Messiah (Is 29:18; 35:4, 5), a power God had reserved for Himself (compare Jn 9:32). Son of David (vv. 47, 48) was a messianic title, showing that Bartimaeus (v. 46) had faith that Jesus was the Christ.

The Fathers give a spiritual interpretation to this miracle as well. Jericho was a low-lying city associated with sin (Lk 10:30; 19:1); here it symbolizes fallen humanity. Christ passing through Jericho is an image of His Incarnation. The Lord restoring sight to Bartimaeus parallels His restoring humanity to glory. Having been made whole by Christ, human nature can now follow Christ on the road to the Kingdom (v. 52), symbolized by our Lord's subsequent entrance into Jerusalem (11:1–11).
It was not the season for figs means that this fig tree had sprouted an early full foliage, indicating a first crop, but without bearing any fruit. Jesus, finding not even one fig, condemns it. In Scripture a fig tree is often a symbol of Israel (Hos 9:10). Her fruitfulness has ceased, so the Kingdom will be taken from her and given to another people, who are called to bear spiritual fruit (see Mt 21:43; Gal 5:22, 23; see note at Mt 21:19).
The cursing and withering of the fig tree is a prophetic act signifying the judgment of Israel. The disciples need to learn that the old covenant with Israel is becoming “obsolete” and will “vanish away” (Heb 8:13). They will establish His Church, ultimately to be filled with Gentiles and Jews, and need assurance that they are following His will. The fig tree will be an indelible image in their minds.
According to the Fathers, the Lord accounts the value of a gift not by how much is given, but by how much is kept back. Thus the poor widow is counted to have given a great gift, having kept nothing for herself. Those who give out of their abundance (v. 44) but keep plenty for themselves are counted by God to have given very little. In the conversion of Cornelius, we learn that God takes note of our giving (Acts 10:4).
Christ's prophecy of the destruction of the temple was fulfilled in AD 70, when the temple was destroyed by the Romans.
This generation refers to all believers at all times (i.e., the generation of the Church), and not merely those alive at the time of Christ. Christ's prophecy is that the Church will continue to thrive until His return, regardless of how desperate things may sometimes appear.
Though Jesus declares that the Son does not know the day of His own return, St. John Chrysostom teaches that this is not to be understood literally, but as a figure of speech. The meaning is simply that Christ will not reveal the exact day to anyone, and that believers should not be so brazen as to inquire of Him.
The Feast of Unleavened Bread begins with the Passover meal on the evening of 15 Nisan (on the Jewish calendar) and lasts seven days (Ex 12:12–20). Together, these feasts commemorate Israel's liberation from slavery in Egypt. The word Passover refers to the angel of death “passing over” Hebrew homes when killing the firstborn of the Egyptians, for the Jews had put lamb's blood on their doorposts (Ex 12:13). Unleavened bread is a reminder of the haste with which the Hebrews left Egypt (Ex 12:39). This Passover was fulfilled in Christ, whose blood was shed to free humanity from bondage to sin and death.
Judas on his own initiative seeks to betray Jesus. His motives have been debated, but the Fathers and the liturgical hymns declare that greed was his underlying motive. This is revealed in Jn 12:4–6, where Judas was particularly upset about the “waste” of myrrh in the preceding story because he was a thief (see also 1Ti 6:10). The betrayal by Judas is remembered specifically on Holy Wednesday, as many of the liturgical hymns contrast his greed with the woman's generous anointing of Christ (v. 3). It is a tradition dating back to the first century (see the Didache) that Orthodox Christians fast on most Wednesdays of the year in remembrance of the ways in which we, like Judas, betray our Savior through our sinfulness.
14:13 The two disciples are Peter and John (Lk 22:8).
Christ emphasizes both that His betrayer is one of the twelve and that he is one who dips with Me in the dish not so much to identify the person as to emphasize the level of betrayal, that this was one of His closest friends (see Ps 54:13–15).
14:21 Divine foreknowledge of the betrayal takes away neither Judas' moral freedom nor his accountability. For God, all things are a present reality; He foresees all human actions, but does not cause them.
14:26 This hymn is a psalm from a group of psalms traditionally sung after the Passover meal (Ps 114–117).
Abba in Aramaic is the familiar form for Father, equivalent to “Papa,” indicating Christ's intimacy with God the Father. See also note at Mt 26:39.
To flee naked is a great shame and humiliation (Ezk 16:39; Am 2:16). Some teach this young man was James, the brother of the Lord (Gal 1:19), while others say that it was the apostle John, the youngest of the twelve. Most others believe this was Mark, the author of this Gospel, as it was a common literary device for a writer not to give his own name (see Lk 24:13; Jn 21:24). The other evangelists do not report this incident. They would not have been inclined to humiliate Mark, whereas Mark would have been more likely to relate such an event concerning himself.
I am (Gr. ego eimi) is the divine Name of God; its use indicates a theophany, or revelation of God Himself. The use of this Name by a mere man was considered blasphemy and was punishable by death (Lv 24:16; see Jn 8:58). However, because Jesus is fully God, His use of this Name cannot be blasphemy, but reveals His unity with the Father and the Holy Spirit. Only in Mark's account is Christ's answer so direct. To sit at the right hand of the Power means to share authority with the Father. This statement was clearly understood by the high priest to be a claim of equality with God (v. 64).
While the Jewish religious law dictated the death penalty for blasphemers (Lv 24:16), under Roman occupation the Jews were prohibited from carrying out an execution. Thus, they had to get a sentence issued by Pilate, the Roman governor.
Pilate's question, “Are You the King of the Jews?” comes from the political charges made against Jesus. Since Pilate would not execute a man over religious matters, the chief priests had to come up with a political crime that would guarantee the death penalty. Thus, they accused Jesus of making Himself an earthly king, which would be treason (see note at Jn 19:7–12).
That the Savior answered nothing fulfills the prophecy of Is. 53:7, which portrays the Messiah being silent as He is led “as a sheep to the slaughter.”
Pilate's sin was less than that of the Jewish leaders who delivered Christ to him (Jn 19:11), for the Jews had the Law and the prophets to instruct them, and Pilate did not. Pilate was not without sin, however, for in his desire to gratify the crowd, he knowingly sent an innocent Man to death.
Mark mentions Simon was the father of Alexander and Rufus because they were likely still living, and possibly even known to Mark's hearers. The spiritual message is that we, like Simon (whose name means “obedience”), are not only called to carry the cross Christ sets on us, but seeing Christ in others, we are called to bear each other's burdens as well (Gal 6:2).
Christ being crucified between two robbers not only fulfills the Scripture (v. 28; Is. 53:12), but shows He is completely identifying with sinful humanity.
15:33  Darkness: See Zec 14:6, 7; Am 8:9.
The centurion, a Gentile, realizes Jesus has dominion over nature, and therefore acknowledges Him as the Son of God. Tradition knows this soldier as St. Longinos.
The faithfulness of the women shows that in Christ, divine order is being restored to the fallen world. Whereas Eve was created to complete Adam (Gn 2:18), but instead led him to sin (Gn 3:6), now the women disciples remain faithful while the men flee and hide. It is the women who bring the message of the Resurrection to the men (16:9–11; Lk 24:9–11), thus restoring that which had been broken through sin.
16:4 The stone had been rolled away not to accommodate the Lord's exit from the tomb, for in His resurrected body, He needs no such accommodation (Jn 20:19). Rather, this was to allow the witnesses—and us—to look in and see that the tomb was empty.
The specific mention of Peter reveals a special care for the one who had denied Christ. In the words of Theophylact, Peter would have said of himself, “I denied the Lord, and therefore am no longer His disciple.” The angel's command is a promise that Peter is forgiven.
They said nothing to anyone does not mean the women never said anything, but that they kept silent until Jesus appeared to them (vv. 9–11).
Two early manuscripts do not contain these verses as part of Mark's Gospel, while nearly all other manuscripts ever discovered have them. They are canonized Scripture and are considered by the Church to be inspired, authoritative, and genuine.
Another form: Our Lord's resurrected body transcends not only physical space and time, but appearance as well. He was sometimes recognizable to His disciples, while at other times He was not.
New tongues refers to the ability to speak in languages that one has not learned in order to edify others in worship (1Co 14) and to preach the gospel (Acts 2:1–11).
To take up serpents refers primarily to spiritual battle against demons (Lk 10:19). Thus, Christ is promising to deliver believers from the powers of sin. Furthermore, this would include certain physical protection as well. St. Paul was bitten by a serpent and suffered no harm (Acts 28:3–6), and according to tradition, Barsabas Justus (Acts 1:23) was forced by unbelievers to drink poison and survived. Nevertheless, while God's grace can protect believers from both physical and spiritual harm, to test God by deliberately committing harmful acts against oneself is a grave sin (Dt 6:16; Mt 4:7).
Luke was not a disciple from the beginning, yet he has perfect understanding of the gospel because his sources were the apostles themselves, the eye-witnesses of Christ. Luke wrote his Gospel to Theophilus, a prominent Gentile who had received Christian instruction (see also Acts 1:1). St. Ambrose notes that Theophilus can simply mean any “lover of God,” and therefore he writes, “If you love God, it was written to you.”
1:5 Herod ruled Judea from 37–4 BC. He was a great builder but a cruel leader. Luke mentions Herod to pinpoint the historical date of the birth of Jesus Christ. An ancient prophecy of Jacob indicated the Messiah would come when a king ruled who was not from the tribe of Judah (Gn 49:10). As Herod was a non-Jew calling himself the king of Judea, the coming of Christ was surely at hand. See also the note on v. 20.
Zacharias and Elizabeth are righteous before God, not merely in outward appearance, but to the core of their being. The holiness of John the Baptist came in part through the faith and piety of his parents.
To be barren was a public reproach (v. 25), but like Sarah (Gn 16:1), Rebekah (Gn 25:21), Rachel (Gn 29:31), Hannah (1Kg 1:2), and Anna, the mother of the Virgin Mary, Elizabeth's temporary barrenness was in fulfillment of God's plan for the salvation of His people.
Each priest was assigned to a division (see 1Ch 23:3–11; 28:13). There were twenty-four divisions in all, each serving a week at a time in rotation. The responsibilities in the division were decided by lot; Zacharias is here assigned the duties of the high priest. This event takes place at the time of the Atonement, when the high priest would enter the temple and make offerings for the sins of the people.
1:11 Angels minister continually at the altar of the Lord, though usually unseen. Those priests of pure heart, such as Zacharias, are occasionally chosen by God to witness this angelic liturgy (see also Is 6; Rev 7:9–17).
As high priest, Zacharias prayed not for a son, but for the atonement of the sins of Israel (Heb 9:7). Gabriel's (v. 19) announcement reveals both that Zacharias' prayer for atonement will be answered and that Elizabeth will conceive a son. This atonement will be announced by John, who will identify Christ as “the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world” (Jn 1:29).
1:15 He will also be filled with the Holy Spirit, even from his mother's womb:
   See v. 41.
Elijah is expected to reappear from heaven as the forerunner of the second coming of the Lord (Mal 4:5). John the Baptist fulfills the spirit of Elijah as he is the forerunner of the Lord's first coming (see Mt 11:14).
You will be mute: Zacharias is disciplined for his lack of faith, yet this also serves as proof that Gabriel's announcement (v. 19) is true. The silencing of the high priest also reveals a deeper mystery. The Messiah was expected to fulfill three crucial roles held by various people in the OT: prophet, priest, and king. Only Jesus Christ can be said to have fulfilled all three offices perfectly. He is the true Prophet (Dt 18:15–18), the true King (23:3; Is 9:6; Mic 5:1), and the true High Priest (Ps 109:4; Heb 4:14). In preparation for Christ's coming, God had silenced the prophets for many years (see note for v. 24), and also permitted an illegitimate usurper to occupy the position of king of Judea (see note for v. 5). Here, in the last days before Christ's coming, the high priest is also silenced. With these three roles vacant, illegitimate, and silent, all is ready for the Son of God to be revealed as Prophet, King, and Priest.
Elizabeth conceived: The conception of St. John the Baptist is celebrated liturgically on September 23, confirming the sanctity of marital relations for those past childbearing years. Hid herself: Since the time of Malachi, God had not sent a great prophet to Israel (see 1Mc 9:27). This silencing of the prophets served to heighten the anticipation of the Messiah and to make it all the more evident when He came. As John the Baptist was the prophet preparing the way for Christ, he was kept hidden until Christ was conceived. Once Christ was conceived, John was revealed through the prophetic act of leaping in Elizabeth's womb (v. 41). See also the note for v. 20.
In the sixth month means the sixth month of Elizabeth's pregnancy with John (v. 36).
The name Mary means “exalted one.” When Joseph is referred to as of the house of David, it reveals Mary also was descended from David's royal lineage, for a righteous man would usually marry within his own tribe (see note at 3:23–38). Twice in this verse, and again by implication (1:34), Luke calls Mary a virgin.
While Eve brought forth children in sorrow (Gn 3:17), Mary, being the new Eve, will rejoice in bringing forth her Son; as Eve had been cursed, so now Mary is blessed. Highly favored (Gr. charitou) can also be translated “full of grace.” Mary is the most blessed woman who has ever lived because of her complete willingness to receive God's grace, or in the words of her Son, to “hear the word of God and keep it” (11:28).
Gabriel's announcement emphasizes two truths: (1) you will conceive in your womb: the Lord Jesus took His flesh—His human nature—from Mary herself; and (2) this is the divine Son of the Highest in Mary's womb. Thus the one Person, Jesus, the eternal Son and Word of God, is both fully human and fully divine. This truth was crucial in the defeat of the heretic Nestorius, who taught that Mary conceived a mere man who was later joined by the divine Son of God. The Church's true teaching is proclaimed in the festal hymn of Annunciation, which declares, “The Son of God becomes the Son of the Virgin as Gabriel announces the coming of grace.”
Mary's question, “How can this be?” does not indicate a lack of faith, as Zacharias' question did (v. 18). Rather, she is merely inquiring into the manner in which something so extraordinary would happen.
Holy One is a messianic title (see Ps 15:10). Note the revelation of the Holy Trinity: The Father (the Highest), the Son, and the Holy Spirit.
Mary's faithful response is that of highest obedience to God. The Incarnation is not only the work of God, but it involves the free response of mankind in the person of Mary. Whereas Eve once disobeyed, Mary now obeys; whereas Eve closed herself to God, Mary opens to His will. Mary's response says, “I am a tablet; let the Writer write whatever He desires on it” (Theoph).
Because Christ is now incarnate, prophecy resumes in Israel (see note on v. 20). The blessed John prophesies of the presence of Christ by leaping in the womb of Elizabeth. As he is God's prophet, John's recognition of Christ fulfills what was spoken of Jeremiah: “Before I formed you in the womb, I knew you” (Jer 1:5).
Mary receives veneration from both angels and humans. As Gabriel had done (v. 28), so now Elizabeth declares Mary to be blessed among women.
Mary is confessed as the mother of My Lord. This confession, and others like it within the Church (“Theotokos,” “Mother of God,” etc.), confirm that the One in the womb of Mary is both human and divine—the very Son of God Himself. At Vespers of Annunciation we declare, “It is the Word of God who dwells within her.” Note that even though His physical body was not yet fully formed, Jesus is nevertheless fully and truly the Son of God incarnate, and Mary is already recognized as being His mother. This truth deals a fatal blow to the idea that abortion is justifiable because the fetus is not yet a person.
This passage, called the “Magnificat” from the first word of the song in Latin, comes from the heart of Mary, inspired by the song of Hannah (1Kg 2:1–10). It is normally sung at Matins in the liturgical cycle. From this inspired hymn, we are taught: (1) Christian believers for all time will honor and venerate the Virgin Mary, for she prophesied that all generations will call me blessed (v. 48); (2) it is impossible to believe in the inspiration of Scripture and not bless the Mother of God; (3) Mary ascribes the miracle of the Incarnation to God, and not to herself, showing both deep humility and the knowledge that God is the source of all grace (v. 49); (4) through the Incarnation, God reigns over all (vv. 50–55).
Circumcision was a sign of Israel's covenant with God and the means by which a male became a member of God's community (Gn 17:10–14; Lv 12:3). In Christ, circumcision is fulfilled in baptism (see Col 2:11 and the article, “Holy Baptism,” at Rom 6).
John means “grace of God.” By insisting on the name God chose for her son, Elizabeth affirms God has called John to a specific mission (see also 1:31; Gn 17:5, 15; 32:28).
1:64-79 When Zacharias assented to God's will, his mouth was opened. Just as prophecy is restored at the Incarnation of Christ (see note on v. 24), so Zacharias, as high priest, can speak again now that the Savior and His forerunner have come (see note v. 20). Note Zacharias immediately declares Christ (vv. 68, 69), and secondly declares the role of his own son as prophet of the Highest (v. 76).
Dwelling in the desert, away from the stains and wickedness of the masses, John is able to fight temptation and grow strong in spirit. According to the tradition of the Church, John was brought to the deserts by Elizabeth when Zacharias was martyred, and there was ministered to by angels.
2:1-3  God uses earthly rulers to accomplish His will. This census enabled Christ to be born in Bethlehem, fulfilling the prophecy of Micah (Mic 5:1). In the hymn by St. Cassiane sung at Vespers of the Lord's Nativity, Augustus ruling as the only emperor over many scattered cities is an icon of our one Lord gathering the scattered pagans of the world. Christ being registered in the fallen world enables the faithful to be registered in the name of God.
The term firstborn does not imply Mary had additional children, but only that no child was born before Jesus. The firstborn son is traditionally the primary heir and recipient of blessings. Christ is the firstborn over all creation, and thus the firstborn from the dead (Col 1:15, 18). In Orthodox icons of the Nativity, Christ's swaddling cloths are depicted as burial wrappings, affirming that one purpose of His coming was to endure death. The manger, or feed trough, would have been in a cave where animals were kept, thus fulfilling the prophecy of Isaiah: “The ox knows its owner and the donkey its master's crib” (Is 1:3).
2:8 Shepherds are chosen to hear the first announcement of the Nativity, as they are symbols of Christ the Good Shepherd (Jn 10:11). Unlike the Pharisees, the shepherds were without guile and had simple faith.
The message of the first angel is confirmed by the multitude, fulfilling the Law in which every word is established with two or three witnesses (Dt 19:15). Christ Himself is our peace who has come to earth; in Him, man is no longer estranged from God (see Eph 2:14–16).
The shepherds are also images of the bishops and presbyters of the Church, who proclaim Christ to the world. St. Ambrose writes that Mary's own faith was strengthened by the news from the shepherds, and he asks, “If Mary herself learns from the shepherds, why do so many refuse to learn from the presbyters of the Church?”
Because Christ has come to perfectly fulfill the Law, He receives circumcision under the Law (see note on 1:59). In the Orthodox Church, it is ancient tradition to name a child eight days after birth, with a special blessing.
The Presentation of Christ (also called the Meeting of the Lord) is celebrated in the Church on February 2. Mary fulfills the law (Lv 12) by bringing Jesus to the temple on the fortieth day. (In the Orthodox Church, mothers and newborn children also receive a special blessing on the fortieth day.) The law required that an offering of an unblemished lamb be brought, or if the mother is not able to bring a lamb, then she brings a pair of turtledoves or two young pigeons (Lv 12:6–8). Not only do Mary and Joseph offer turtledoves, but as Christ is the unblemished Lamb of God, they perfectly fulfill the precepts of the Law by offering Him as well. This also fulfills the prophecy spoken when Abraham was to sacrifice Isaac and said, “God will provide for Himself the sheep for a whole burnt offering” (Gn 22:8).
Simeon represents humanity in waiting for the Consolation of Israel. He fulfills Ps 90:16, in which God makes a promise to the one who loves Him: “With length of days I will satisfy him, / And show him My salvation.”
The hymns of the Church compare Simeon's reception of Christ to Isaiah's reception of the burning coal from the angel (Isa 6:6, 7). In both cases, a prophet receives the life-giving fire of the offering—Isaiah received the type, and Simeon receives the fulfillment.
The Canticle of Simeon is sung daily at Vespers. Since salvation (v. 30) has been born into the world, all peoples can embrace death (see Php 1:23). For the Christian, death is no longer frightful, but a gateway to everlasting peace (v. 29).
The second coming of the Lord will be the reckoning of the world. For the believer, it will be a resurrection to life; for the unbeliever, it will be a falling into judgment (Jn 5:29).
2:35  The sword refers to the anguish that Mary will experience in witnessing her Son's death on the Cross. Her soul will be pierced in grief.
Both men and women are called to proclaim Christ's redemption, and women are the first to proclaim His Resurrection (24:9).
That Jesus grew and became strong in spirit does not imply that He was lacking divine perfection at any time. Rather, it indicates that in emptying Himself and assuming human nature (Php 2:7), He freely subjected Himself to human development and expression (see also v. 52).
Pilgrimages to Jerusalem on holy days like Passover were customary for Jews; often entire clans or villages would travel together.
In appearing to be lost for three days, Christ prefigures His rest in the tomb.
Joseph is honored with the title father for his care and upbringing of his adopted Son. This title further prefigures our adoption by God, whom by grace we call “Father” (Gal 4:4–7).
Christ's eternal generation from the Father is divine, while his maternal ancestry is human. Accordingly, Jesus was first obedient to the will of His Father, and then is willingly subject to His mother and father.
High priests: Caiaphas was now the sole high priest, but people also recognized the continuing power of his father-in-law Annas, a previous high priest deposed by the Romans.
The call to repentance was traditional for prophets. John's baptism did not grant remission of sins once and for all, but prefigured and prepared people for the baptism of Christ which was to come (see Rom 6:3–11). John is a figure of the Law in that, like the Law, he denounced sin but could not remit (lit. “put away”) sin. Both John and the Law point to the One who can remit sin.
The voice: John ascribes to himself this role in Jn 1:23.
While parents and ancestors help impart piety and holiness (see note on 1:6), ancestry itself does not make one worthy of God. Each person in every generation must bear fruits worthy of repentance. Stones symbolize the Gentiles who would become children to Abraham through faith in Christ (Rom 4:16–18).
Fire in this context has the primary meaning of the gift of the Holy Spirit, which is given to the world at Pentecost (Acts 2:1–4). It further declares the judgment of Christ, in which the faithless will burn (see 2Th 1:6–10; 2:8). Note that this fire is one. It is the same Power and the same Spirit which both enlivens the faithful and destroys the faithless.
His brother Philip's wife: Herod had divorced his own wife and married Philip's wife Herodias while Philip was still living.
Jesus Himself does not need baptism. In being baptized, our Lord accomplished several things: (1) He affirmed John's ministry; (2) He was revealed by the Father and the Holy Spirit to be the Christ, God's beloved Son; (3) He identified with His people by descending into the waters with them; (4) He prefigured His own death, giving baptism its ultimate meaning; (5) He entered the waters, sanctifying the water itself; (6) He fulfilled the many types given in the OT, as when Moses led the people from bondage through the Red Sea (Ex 14) and when the ark of the covenant was carried into the Jordan so the people could enter the Promised Land (Jos 3; 4); and (7) He opened heaven to a world separated from God through sin.
The Baptism of Christ is celebrated on January 6 and is known commonly as Epiphany, or more properly, Theophany, which means “God revealed.” The Son is revealed by the descent of the Holy Spirit and by the voice of the Father. This is the greatest and clearest public manifestation of God as Trinity in human history, as we sing, “The Trinity was made manifest.”

The words spoken by the Father also apply to everyone who is baptized and lives faithfully, as sonship is bestowed by adoption (Gal 4:4–7). The Holy Spirit appearing as a dove is not an incarnation, but rather a visible sign for the people. This appearance further fulfills the type prefigured at the Flood: “Just as a dove announced to Noah that God's wrath had ceased, so too the Holy Spirit announces here that Christ has reconciled us to God by sweeping sin away in the flood waters of baptism” (Theoph).
The genealogy follows Joseph's ancestry, even though Jesus was only supposed to be the son of Joseph but was in fact humanly descended from Mary only. This is explained in two complementary ways: (1) Joseph was a righteous man and would have married within his tribe—thus Mary and Joseph would have largely shared a common lineage; (2) Jesus was born to bring all mankind into adoption by the Father, and thus He affirms that a lineage of adoption is as binding and receives the same inheritance as a lineage of blood (Gal 4:4–7).
Adam means “man”; thus Christ is declared to be both the “Son of Man” and the “Son of God.”
This exodus of Jesus into the wilderness following His baptism has a dual symbolism: (1) it fulfills the OT type, in which Israel journeyed in the wilderness for forty years after its “baptism” in the Red Sea; and (2) it prefigures our own journey through the fallen world after baptism as we struggle towards the Kingdom.
On the temptation of Christ, see notes at Mt 4:1–11.
Note each time Christ rebukes the devil, it is with the truth and power of Scripture. This teaches the faithful to become immersed in Scripture in order to resist and drive away every temptation (see Ps 118:11).
4:10-11  Satan vainly tries to use the Scriptures (as do the Pharisees in Jn 7:52), but understands neither their truth nor their power. Knowing and quoting Scripture without true understanding is worthless at best and ultimately condemnable. Without true understanding through the Holy Tradition of the Church, the Scriptures are robbed of their authority (see also 2Pt 1:19–21).
Being the eternal Son of God, Christ did not become the world's anointed Savior, but has always been our Savior from before the foundation of the world. It was Christ speaking through Isaiah who said, “The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me” (Is 61:1). Note He does not say, “The Spirit has come upon Me.” When the Spirit of the Lord descended on Jesus at His baptism (see 3:22), this was a sign revealing an eternal, not temporal, truth to the people.
Acceptable year: The time of the Incarnation, when the Kingdom of heaven has come to earth (see 2Co 6:2).
This double response of marveling (v. 22) and rejection (v. 29) occurs frequently in those who encounter Christ (see 11:14–16; Jn 9:16). His being rejected in His own country fulfills the rejection of the OT prophets such as Elijah (v. 26) and Elisha (v. 27), and foreshadows His rejection by the whole Jewish nation at His trial before Pilate (Jn 19:14, 15). Christ accepts death according to the Father's will, not at the will of the Jews. Here, the hour of His Passion has not yet come (see Jn 8:20).
Christ begins preaching and healing on the Sabbaths to show that “the new creation began where the old creation ceased” (AmbM).
4:32 With authority: Unlike the prophets of old and the teachers of His day who taught in the third person (“The Lord says”), Christ taught in the first person (“I say to you”). See also Mt 5.
Rebuked the fever: “That which was rebuked was some living thing unable to withstand the influence of Him who rebuked it, for it is not reasonable to rebuke a thing without life and unconscious of the rebuke. Nor is it astonishing for there to exist certain powers that inflict harm on the human body” (CyrAl).
Christ's primary mission was to preach the kingdom. Miracles and healings testify both to the truth of the message and the identity of the Teacher (see 5:24). This same pattern holds true in the Church (Acts 4:29, 30).
The Lake of Gennesaret is also known as the Sea of Galilee. It is about 13 miles long and 7 miles wide.
5:3 Sitting was the traditional position for a teacher (see note at Mt 5:1).
Launch out into the deep: St. Ambrose sees the spiritual meaning of this command as an invitation to give one's life over to the deep mystery of the knowledge of the Son of God.
The Lord draws people to Himself by things that are familiar to them. As He drew the Magi with a star (Mt 2:2), as He would draw tax collectors by a tax collector (5:29), here He draws the fishermen with fish (see 1Co 9:19–23).
Peter's cry in the face of divine power is not a rejection of Jesus (contrast 8:37). Rather, being suddenly cast in the light of Christ, holy people such as Peter become keenly aware of their own unworthiness (compare Is 6:5; Rev 1:17).
The great catch of fish (v. 9) is an image of the apostles bringing mankind to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, and it fulfills the prophecy of Jer 16:16. In the festal hymn of Pentecost we sing to Christ, “Through the fishermen, You drew the world into Your net.”
Leprosy was one of the most dreaded diseases of the time. It brought great physical suffering as well as total banishment and isolation from society. It is also a symbol of our sin.
Show yourself to the priest: Christ gives this command in order to convince the priests by a tangible miracle that He is superior to Moses (CyrAl). The priests hold Moses to be greater than Christ, yet Christ heals a leper immediately and with His own divine authority. However, when Miriam was struck with leprosy, Moses had to seek mercy from above, and still she was only healed after seven days (Nm 12:10–15).
Levi (Matthew) answers Christ's call, “Follow Me,” and leaves his occupation to become a disciple. From the beginning of His ministry Christ has been a friend of tax collectors and sinners, which is one of the Pharisees' complaints against Him (v. 30). Levi may also have been one of the tax collectors prepared for Christ by John the Baptist (3:12).
This feast expresses Matthew's joy and gratitude. The guest register is a stirring demonstration of the fruit of Jesus' love and forgiveness.
Jesus' earthly life is a time of joyous blessings. But there will come a time when His followers will practice the fast (see notes on Mt 9:14–17; Mk 2:20).
This saying occurs only in Luke's account, and illustrates (1) the difficulty with which the Jews would accept the new covenant, (2) the inner resistance a person faces in turning from a sinful way of life, and (3) the general stubbornness of the human heart.
6:1-5  Second Sabbath After the First: This term was used when a Jewish feast immediately followed the normal Sabbath, for a feast was also known as a Sabbath. According to St. Ambrose, the term “second Sabbath” serves as an image of the new covenant and the eternal resurrection: the first Sabbath indicates the Law, while the second Sabbath indicates the gospel that follows it. Under the new covenant, the food which was at one time not lawful for anyone but the priests to eat is now freely given to all by the Lord of the Sabbath (v. 5). David prefigured this when he gave the showbread . . . to those with him (vv. 3, 4).
According to certain traditions that the scribes and Pharisees had built up around the Law, healing was considered work, and thus was not permissible on the Sabbath. They believed they served God by zealously keeping these peripheral traditions, but this legalism made them insensitive to God's mercy.
Jesus, being the Son of God, does not pray as if to obtain grace or revelation from the Father. Rather, as the Son of Man, He prays as the Advocate for humanity (AmbM; see 1Jn 2:1). Jesus spent all night in prayer before selecting the twelve apostles to teach us that before choosing a candidate for any spiritual ministry, we should pray that God will reveal to us the one suited for the task (Theoph).
Luke reports four “woes” not found in Matthew's account. Woe is an indication not merely of sorrow, but of unspeakable destruction (Is 5:18–24; Am 5:18, 19; Rev 12:12). Those who prize the vices listed here are liable to the “utmost misery”; however, they find hope when they sacrifice their earthly blessings in showing mercy to others (CyrAl).
This “Golden Rule” is a minimum of Christian virtue, as it places man's desire for goodness (“the natural law of self-love,” CyrAl) as a basic standard of how to treat others. It is but the first step on the path to the perfection of virtue; this perfection is found in v. 36, where God's mercy, rather than man's desire, is the standard.
Mercy precludes human judgment. Good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over are descriptions of how an honest and generous merchant would measure bulk goods. Flour pressed down, for example, would yield a more generous amount than flour fluffed up. The blessings God intends to put into our hearts are more generous than we can possibly contain, yet this also depends on the spirit in which we ourselves give and forgive.
Christ does not judge anyone (Jn 8:15; 12:47). Therefore, “if the Teacher does not judge, neither must the disciple, for the disciple is guilty of worse sins than those for which he judges others” (CyrAl).
Hearing the gospel alone is not enough, for salvation is based not on hearing alone, nor on faith alone, but also on doing the things spoken by Christ (see Jam 2:24).
This centurion, a Roman Gentile, is unusual in his devotion to the Jews. His characteristics are notable: compassion (v. 2); love for God and His people (v. 5); humility (v. 6); and great faith (vv. 7–9).
This is one of three resurrections performed by our Lord as recorded in the Gospels (see also 8:41–56; Jn 11:1–44). They confirm the promise given to the prophet Ezekiel that God will one day open the graves and raise all the dead (Ezk 37:1–14). Many people have exercised authority over the living; only the Son of God “has power over both the living and the dead” (funeral service). While Christ has power through His word alone (Jn 11:43), here He also touched the coffin to show that His very body is life-giving. This event also prefigures Christ's own Resurrection. As Mary would weep for Jesus at the Cross, yet her tears would be turned to joy by the Resurrection, here a widow's only son is raised from the dead, putting an end to her weeping (AmbM).
John the Baptist was imprisoned soon after Jesus was baptized (Mk 1:14). Though John directed his disciples to follow Christ (Jn 1:29–31, 35–37), some remained with him. While John's own faith was undoubtedly strengthened by the signs Christ performed, the Fathers universally see this encounter as a means John used to convince his remaining disciples that Jesus was indeed the Coming One.
Though he was the greatest prophet, John's earthly life and ministry remained in the period of the old covenant. The new covenant so far surpasses the old that the least in the kingdom is greater than the greatest outside it. This does not imply John will not be resurrected to the Kingdom, but merely that his life on earth came before something far superior.
7:30  See Mk 11:27–33.
Children would play this game in two groups. One group would mimic musicians, while the other group refused to respond appropriately to the type of music being played. The Pharisees were so rigid in their religion that they were unable to respond to and engage the world around them. Thus, they rejected John as being too mournful and ascetic, and Christ as being too merciful and joyous.
In spite of being rejected by the Pharisees, both John and Christ are justified, not by the opinions of men, but by their children, those who would come to believe and be faithful.
This Pharisee was intrigued by Christ, as evidenced by his invitation, but he clearly does not believe in Him, as shown by his reaction to Christ's mercy (v. 39) and by his lack even of common hospitality (vv. 44–46). The encounter with the sinful woman is an icon of the grace found only in the Church. Through her, “the Church is justified as being greater than the Law, for the Law does not know the forgiveness of sins, nor the mystery in which secret sins are cleansed; therefore, what is lacking in the Law is perfected in the Gospel” (AmbM).
That a man could forgive sins was beyond the bounds of the Law as the Pharisees understood it (see 5:21). Yet Christ was not a mere man, but the very Lawgiver Himself. “Who could declare things that were above the Law, except the One who ordained the Law?” (CyrAl).
These women were faithful to Christ to the end (23:49, 55), and were the first to receive and proclaim the news of His Resurrection (24:1–10). In the Scriptures, the number seven often symbolizes totality and completeness, indicating that Mary called Magdalene had been thoroughly given over to darkness before her healing.
As the sower in this parable, Christ fulfills the prophecy in Is 55:10–13. Note that while some might teach a person is permanently saved at the moment he professes faith—a view never held by the historic Church—the teaching of Jesus is clear that it is possible to believe for a while and then fall away (v. 13).
Mysteries are not obscure intellectual concepts, but the presence of the Kingdom of God which cannot be defined. A person's unwillingness to understand Christ's parables is due to a rejection of His Kingdom. “If the blindness were natural, it would have been proper for God to open their eyes; but because it was a voluntary and self-chosen blindness, He does not overthrow their free will.” Doing so would have been not only to “no advantage for them, but an even greater condemnation” (JohnChr).
Christ deliberately permits the windstorm to arise while He is sleeping in order to perfect the disciples' faith and rebuke their weaknesses, so they would eventually be unshaken by life's temptations. Here their faith is still mixed with unbelief. They showed faith when they came to Him, but unbelief when they said, “We are perishing.”
Some teach that the presence of swine indicates a Gentile population. However, since our Lord forbade His disciples to go to the Gentiles (Mt 10:5) and was Himself reluctant to seek out the Gentiles (Mt 15:24), likely these were Jews engaged in a sinful occupation (see also the note at Mt 4:15).

The destruction of the entire herd reveals: (1) while animals are a venerable part of creation, man is of far greater value; (2) Christ removes a source of sin, for swine herding was an abomination to the Jews (Dt 14:8); (3) demons have no power over creation, but are subject to the will of God—they could only enter the swine at Christ's command; (4) people are protected under God's providence—otherwise, the demon-possessed man would have come to the same end as the swine; (5) the magnitude of the economic loss would remain as a sign for the hardhearted people who fled that region (v. 34).
For the Jews, contact with blood caused defilement and led to religious and social isolation (Lv 25). The woman displays bold faith by approaching both Christ and a ruler of the synagogue (v. 41) in a crowd, potentially defiling all of them and subjecting herself to ridicule.
“Who touched Me?” does not simply mean a physical touch, but rather, “Who touched me in faith?” Just as “the temple sanctifies the gold” (Mt 23:17), so also matter is sanctified by Christ's Incarnation, and the power of Christ works through even His garment. To touch Christ's garment in faith is to touch Him. In the Church, we touch Christ through icons, oil, water, bread, wine, etc. When this is done in faith, the power of Christ is received.
Jesus calls the woman forward both to take away her fear and trembling and to strengthen Jairus for the forthcoming news of his daughter's death (v. 49).
This is the same Herod to whom Pilate would send Jesus during His trial (23:7). He is the son of the Herod who slew the innocent infants in Bethlehem (Mt 2:16). The incident of the beheading of St. John is found in Mk 6:14–28.
Theophylact sees a liturgical parallel with the feeding of the five thousand. Here Christ first healed and spoke of the gospel, and then fed the multitude with the miraculous bread by the hands of His disciples. In the Church, a person is first healed through baptism; then at the Liturgy, the gospel is preached and the bread of life and the cup are received from the hands of the ordained clergy.
9:13 You give them something to eat: This commission is a type and preparation for the apostolic ministry the disciples will perform after Christ's Resurrection. They will feed the world with the word of God and with the Eucharist. Five loaves and two fish: Christ is the same Creator “of both the earth and the sea, who in the beginning brought fruit from the earth and life out of the water” (JohnChr).
Christ looked up to heaven “not as receiving power from elsewhere, but as honoring the Father who begot Him.” That Christ blessed and broke the bread teaches us “not to touch any meal until we have given thanks to Him who gives us food” (John Chr). This blessing also presents a clear eucharistic image and directs us to pursue spiritual food greater than that which is earthly (see Jn 6:26, 27).
As in every generation, what the crowds have to say about Jesus is usually unpredictable and misguided.
Who do you say that I am? is the ultimate question in Scripture and in all theology. How this question is answered defines the universe. Christ (Heb. Messiah) means “Anointed One.” The declaration of Peter that Jesus is the Christ of God reveals Jesus is not merely another anointed king or prophet, but the long-awaited Savior.
Jesus desires to keep His identity as the Christ hidden to avoid popular political and theological misunderstandings. Only after His Passion and Resurrection can His identity as Messiah be understood (see note on Mt 12:16–21).
Note two things: (1) Each person must take up his own cross. The burden in this world is different for each person, and each has been chosen by God to bear certain struggles for his own salvation and the salvation of those around him. (2) The cross is to be taken up daily. Commitment to following Christ is not just a one-time event. Rather, it is the continual practice of faith and obedience, even to the point of being shamed and persecuted by the world.
9:27 This is a reference to those who will witness the Transfiguration (vv. 28–36), as well as to those in every generation who experience the presence of God's Kingdom.
9:28-36 See the article “The Transfiguration” at Mt 17.
Christ's decease (Gr. exodus, lit. “departure”) refers to His death. Christ's death is intimately connected to the glory of the Transfiguration, for Christ is glorified through His death (Jn 12:23). In the liturgical cycle, the Feast of the Transfiguration (Aug. 6) comes forty days before the feast of the Holy Cross (Sept. 14), showing the connection between Christ's glory and His Cross. The term exodus reveals that Christ's Passion is a fulfillment of the OT Passover and is the true exodus from enslavement into salvation.

This revelation of divine power also confirms Christ's upcoming death was not imposed on Him by outside forces, but was a voluntary offering of love, for no arresting soldier could withstand such glory if Christ had not consented (Mt 26:53). In a festal hymn (called the kontakion) of Transfiguration, we sing, “Your disciples beheld Your glory as far as they could bear it, so that when they saw You crucified, they would understand that Your suffering was voluntary.”
9:40-41 While the disciples' faith was incomplete (Mt 17:19, 20), Christ's rebuke is also to the crowds, whose faith was weaker still (see Mk 9:22–24).
Christ's repeated prediction of His Passion was meant to encourage and strengthen His disciples for the terrifying events they would face, and to assure them that Christ was not powerless but went to the Cross willingly.
I will follow You: There is a cost to discipleship. Jesus reveals three: (1) The disciple relinquishes personal or earthly security—if the Lord has nowhere to lay His head, neither will the disciple. (2) Nothing, not even the honor due to parents, can be an obstacle to serving the Lord. (3) A disciple cannot delay in accomplishing the good that Christ demands.
We are to pray not only for the harvest of converts to Christ, but also for the laborers who will reach them.
Lambs speak of the sacrificial life of the apostles and of all followers of Christ. The wolves are those who seek to frighten and devour those who follow the Lord (Jn 15:18).
Twice here Christ commands the apostles to eat whatever is offered to them. This has a twofold significance: (1) the apostles must be content with whatever is offered, even if the food is little and simple; and (2) the gracious reception of others' hospitality takes precedence over personal fasting or dietary disciplines.

St. Cassian the Desert Father notes that when he visited a monastery, the fast was always relaxed to honor him as a guest. When he asked why, the elder responded, “Fasting is always with me, but you I cannot always have with me. Fasting is useful and necessary, but it depends on our choice, while the law of God demands charity. Thus receiving Christ in you, I serve you with all diligence, and when I have taken leave of you, I resume the rule of fasting again.” In this way the ascetics would obey Christ's command here and His command that we not “appear to men to be fasting” (Mt 6:18; see also Rom 14:2–6; 1Co 10:27; Heb 13:2).
The gospel message is not simply that there is a Kingdom in the future, but that this kingdom of God has come near.
Judgment is severe for those who reject Christ after experiencing His grace. In contrast, those who have never known Christ due to genuine ignorance are without sin in that regard (Jn 15:22–24), and are instead judged by their God-given conscience (Rom 2:12–16).
I saw Satan fall describes an event that took place before the creation of the world. Five times Satan set his will against God (Is 14:12–15; see also Rev 12:7–12).
10:21 Babes: People of simple faith and open hearts (see 18:15–17).
Jerusalem is the place of peace, symbolic of communion with God. Jericho, on the other hand, was renowned as a place of sin (see 19:1). Falling among thieves speaks to the natural consequence of journeying away from God toward a life of sin (see Jn 10:10).
Titles and positions are meaningless in God's sight when good deeds do not accompany them: “The dignity of the priesthood means nothing unless he also excels in deeds” (CyrAl). That the priest and the Levite do not help the man also indicates the failure of the OT Law to heal the consequences of sin.
The Samaritan, while a despised foreigner, is an image of Christ (Jn 8:48), for He “came down from heaven” (Creed) to save even those in rebellion against Him.
The bandages, oil, and wine are sacramental images for (1) the garment of baptism, which delivers us from the wounds of sin; (2) the oil of chrismation, which gives us new life in the Holy Spirit; and (3) the communion of the divine Blood, which leads to eternal life. His own animal indicates Christ bearing our sins in His own body, and the inn reveals the Church in which Christ's care is received. He pays the price for that care (1Co 6:20; 7:23).
Mary and Martha are the sisters of Lazarus, whom Jesus raised from the dead (Jn 11:1). Martha is not rebuked for serving, but for complain[ing and for being distracted, worried, and troubled. In following Christ, we serve in order to facilitate the spread of the gospel (see Acts 6:1–4).
Teach us to pray expresses a universal longing to be in communion with God. For notes on the Lord's Prayer, see Mt 6:9–13.
This parable demonstrates God's faithfulness to those who are in need and who pray with persistence (v. 8). The Fathers interpret midnight as both the time of our death and a time of great temptation. The friend is Christ, who, as our only source of grace, provides everything we need.
In Greek, the verbs rendered ask, seek, and knock imply a continuing action and are better translated, “keep asking,” “keep seeking,” and “keep knocking.” God responds when we persistently ask for things that are good. Bread, fish, and an egg are all images of life and symbolize the gift of the Holy Spirit (see Jn 14:13, 14; Jam 4:3).
11:15  Beelzebub: A pagan god, derided by the Jews as “the Lord of the Flies.” Here it is a direct reference to Satan (v. 18).
A sign is never given to those whose motive is merely to test God (see 4:9–12).
11:20  Finger of God: the Holy Spirit (Mt 12:28).
The strong man is Satan, who holds sway over the fallen human race, while the stronger is Christ (see 1Jn 4:4).
It is the work of Christ to gather the children of God, while those who scatter are in direct opposition to Him. Those who work in opposition to Christ are different from those who work in good faith toward His purpose but are not yet united to the Church (see 9:46–50 and note). Only “good deeds done for Christ's sake bring fruit,” and thus deeds done for any other purpose, “even if they are good, are deeds that scatter abroad” (SerSar).
11:24-26 The unclean spirit refers to the rebelliousness cast out of the Jews by the OT prophets to prepare them to receive Christ. Those who refuse to receive Him are left open to the wickedness of seven other spirits or demons (JohnChr).
These verses are read on most feasts of the Virgin Mary. Jesus corrects the woman from the crowd, not by denouncing his mother, but by emphasizing her faith. People are blessed in God's eyes if, like Mary, they hear the word of God and keep it. The Greek word menounge, here rendered more than that, is translated “Yes indeed” in Rom 10:18. This word corrects by amplifying, not by negating.
The sign of Jonah is (1) the fact that the rebellious Ninevites were willing to repent at Jonah's preaching, and (2) that Jonah coming out of the great fish prefigures Christ rising from the tomb (Mt 12:40). In contrast to the Ninevites' repentance, the Jews' failure to repent at something far greater—Christ's preaching and Resurrection—will result in their judgment. Queen of the South: See 3Kg 10:1–10.
Zechariah: Some of the Fathers teach this was the prophet at the time of Joash the king (2Ch 24:20–22), while others say it refers to the father of St. John the Baptist, who, according to tradition, was also murdered in the temple.
Whom you should fear refers to God (Pr 9:10). The body will die eventually, one way or another. St. Ambrose even states that the death of the body is not itself a punishment, but rather it marks the end of earthly punishments. The soul continues for all eternity; since God is the judge of the soul, our efforts in this world are to please Him alone.
To say a word against the Son of Man is to reject Jesus as the Messiah. Jesus seemed to be a mere man to many people before their conversion. The scandal caused by the Incarnation and Crucifixion of the Son of God (1Co 1:23) makes this sin more easily forgiven. The Holy Spirit, on the other hand, is without bodily form and invisibly works divine goodness. According to St. John Chrysostom and many other Fathers, the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit would be forgivable if a person were to repent of it. Jesus never calls the sin itself “unforgivable.” Jesus makes this declaration knowing that those who blaspheme the Spirit are calling pure, divine goodness “evil,” and are beyond repentance by their own choice.
It was a custom for respected rabbis to arbitrate personal disputes. However, a dispute over an inheritance is detrimental to salvation. This greed is pure idolatry (Col 3:5) and unfitting for anyone who knows God. Notice how incompatible this question is with what the Lord had just finished saying.
Whose will those things be which you have provided? is the key to understanding the saving up of material goods. St. John Chrysostom writes that the only barns we need we already have: “the stomachs of the poor.” St. Basil the Great taught that the bread in our cupboard belongs to the hungry man; the coat hanging unused belongs to the one who needs it; the shoes rotting in our closet belong to the one who has no shoes; and the money we hoard belongs to the poor. St. Ambrose teaches, “The things which we cannot take with us are not ours. Only virtue will be our companion when we die.” Even when Joseph stored up grain in Egypt (Gn 41), it was for the benefit of the whole nation. These teachings apply to parishes as well as to each person.
Do not fear is a recurring theme in this discourse. Little flock refers to all believers. They are little in two ways: (1) they are insignificant in the eyes of the world, and (2) they are small in number when compared to the earthly and heavenly creation.
12:35-36 A call to be vigilant, echoing the imagery of the parable of the wise and foolish virgins (Mt 25:1–13). Your waist be girded: Be ready for virtuous action. Lamps burning: Have spiritual discernment.
See also Mt 24:45–51. The mark of a true disciple is vigilance in performing the work and exemplifying the virtue of the master.
Second and third watch is between 9:00 p.m. and 3:00 a.m., interpreted as hours of heightened temptation. Thus, the servants are most blessed who remain faithful during the night.
It is not the place of anyone to try to predict the time of the return of the Son of Man, but rather to remain faithful and to be ready at every hour.
The previous parable (vv. 35–40) is to all people, while the following parable (vv. 42–48) is to the apostles and their successors, the rulers (v. 42) and teachers of the Church. The exhortations to principles of virtue and the warnings against corruption apply specifically to those entrusted with spiritual leadership.
The judgment of the teachers of the Church will be strict (Jam 3:1). The many stripes given to those who are willfully and knowingly disobedient symbolize condemnation. The few stripes are for those disobedient out of ignorance and indicate chastisement or correction.
Fire references the proclamation of the gospel and the gift of the Holy Spirit. This fire both enlivens the faithful and judges the faithless; it purifies virtue and destroys sin (see 3:16; 1Co 3:12–15).
There are two kinds of peace. False peace, to which Christ refers here, is a shallow harmony that results from ignoring issues of truth. Genuine peace is reconciliation to God through faith in Christ and surrender to truth. Genuine peace has division as a byproduct because not everyone wants truth. In the fallen world, divisions are necessary for truth to be manifest (see 1Co 11:18, 19).
This fulfills the prophecy of Mic 7:6. In addition to its literal meaning, which has been experienced in the Church since the time of Christ, the older generation being divided from the younger generation also symbolizes (1) the rejection of the new covenant by followers of the old covenant, and (2) the spiritual struggle between our old, sinful state and our renewal in Christ (see Eph 4:20–24).
12:56  This time: The revelation of the Kingdom of God in the first coming of Jesus Christ.
Just as a guilty person would attempt to reconcile with his opponent before facing an earthly judge, even more so should one be reconciled to God in Christ before facing His dread judgment.
13:1-5 These two historical incidents (vv. 1, 4) are only reported in Luke. The slain Galileans were probably Zealots, Jewish nationalists, who triggered some disturbance against the Romans. The collapse of the tower in Siloam, whether by accident or sabotage, was believed to be divine justice on sinners. Christ denies this suffering was God's judgment; instead, He uses these events as illustrations for those who perish because they will not repent.
The fruitless fig tree is universally interpreted in the Church to be fallen humanity. The three years represent God's covenants with His people through Abraham, Moses, and Christ, all of which are rejected, as well as the three-year earthly ministry of Christ. The keeper of the vineyard is Christ Himself, who intercedes on our behalf that He should suffer His Passion and send the Holy Spirit to us before the final judgment takes place.
13:16 Think of it: The Fathers see this command as directing us to a spiritual meaning for the eighteen years. As the Greek expression is literally translated “ten and eight years,” both St. Ambrose and Theophylact see ten as representing the Ten Commandments and eight as representing grace, for the day of Resurrection is often called the “eighth day.” Thus humanity is lifted up by faith in Christ, who fulfills both law and grace.
The mustard plant grows to a height of about 10 feet in Palestine (see note at Mt 13:31–33).
Neither verbal confessions (Lord, Lord; v. 25) nor sacramental experiences (v. 26) avail anything unless we also do the works of faith (see 6:46–49).
Theophylact sees the first who becomes last as not only faithless Jews, but those in the Church who “from infancy have put on Christ and have been taught the Word, but who become last by transgressing against it.”
This passage shows (1) Christ voluntarily going to His Passion, (2) His great love for Jerusalem in spite of its continual state of rebellion, and (3) His foreknowledge of how He will be received on the first Palm Sunday.
These parables are directed toward guests (vv. 7–11) and hosts (vv. 12–14). In imitation of Christ, perfect humility is expected of guests, and boundless charity is demanded of hosts (see Jam 4:6).
14:12-14 This instruction is based on the manner in which God treats us, even though not one of us could possibly repay Him (see 6:30–36). You shall be repaid: See 10:34, 35.
This man unwittingly declares the ultimate beatitude. The truth behind his words can come only through understanding the bread to be eternal communion with God.
14:16-17 This parable operates on two levels, illustrating both the first and second coming of Christ, who is the servant sent to gather many. Supper indicates evening, the end of the age. The people invited are first the Jews, then all mankind.
The Fathers see the three excuses as having both a literal meaning, that many are too attached to worldly cares to accept the Kingdom of God (v. 26; 18:29), and spiritual meanings. St. Ambrose sees the three excuses of I cannot come representing the Gentile, the Jew, and the heretic. The Gentile's devotion to earthly wealth is represented by the piece of ground, the Jew's enslavement to the five books of the Law by the five yoke of oxen, and the heretic's espousal of error by the man refusing on account of his wife. Theophylact more generally associates the excuses with people devoted to earthly matters, to things pertaining to the five senses, and to all pleasures of the flesh.
Those in the streets and lanes indicate (1) the Gentiles who accepted Christ after the faithless Jews rejected Him, and (2) those outside the Church replacing those within who have rejected their own baptism.
The command to hate one's kindred and his own life also is not to be taken literally. Rather we are to hate the way our relationships with others can hinder our total dedication to the Kingdom of God, which takes precedence even over family ties.
Build a tower: See 1Co 3:10–15.
Fellowship with sinners defiled pious Jews. The three parables in this chapter are Christ's answer to the Pharisees and scribes. The man (v. 4), the woman (v. 8), and the father (v. 12) are seen as representing Christ, the Church, and God the Father. “Christ carries the sinner, the Church seeks and intercedes, and the Father receives” (AmbM).
In the Fathers' spiritual interpretation, the hundred sheep represent all rational creation. The one sheep who goes astray symbolizes mankind, while the ninety-nine represent the angelic realm (see also note on Mt 18:12).
Ten silver coins comprise a single necklace worn by a married woman, a bride, which is an image of the Church (Eph 5:32). The lost coin (Gr. drachma), which carried the image of the king, symbolizes mankind who, though bearing the image of God, fell from grace. Through the Church, Christ enlightens the world, sweeps away sin, and finds His lost creation.
The son's request for his portion of goods (Gr. ousia, lit. “essence”) indicates man receiving his free will and his rational mind from God. As Adam did in Eden, the younger son uses these possessions to rebel against his father. The far country represents life in exile from God.
Feeding swine could rightly be called “Jewish Skid Row.” He could not sink much lower.
Came to himself: A person immersed in sin is living outside his true self (Rom 7:17–20). The prodigal realizes his hopeless condition. The bread symbolizes Christ, who is known through the Scriptures and the Eucharist.
Though it was considered unseemly in Jewish culture for an old man to run, the father did not passively stand by waiting for his son to return. He ran to him. This self-humiliation for the sake of the lost indicates the way in which our Father, through Christ's sacrifice, actively seeks those who stray.
The significance of the robe is righteousness granted by baptism (Is 61:10), the signet ring is family identity (Hag 2:23), and the sandals refer to walking according to the gospel (Eph 6:15).
Fatted calf is more closely translated “wheat-fed bull-calf,” or even more literally “a bull-calf formed from wheat.” This animal is a male calf raised on wheat in preparation for use as a religious offering. As the reconciliation of the prodigal son was not complete without the sacrifice of the calf, so man's reconciliation to God is not by his repentance alone, but by Christ offering Himself on the Cross. The festive dining on an animal offering “formed from wheat” is a clear reference to our partaking of the eucharistic bread (see also note at Mt 22:4).
The resentful older son illustrates the hardheartedness of the Pharisees to whom Christ was telling this parable (vv. 2, 3). God requires His followers to rejoice when even the most blamable man is called to repentance (CyrAl).
I never transgressed your commandment at any time: The failure of the older son to recognize his own sins leads to his self-righteous and merciless attitude. Contrast this with the contrition of the younger son (vv. 18, 19). “The one who seems to himself to be righteous, who does not see the beam in his own eye, becomes angry when forgiveness is granted to one who confesses his sin and begs for mercy” (AmbM). The older son's ingratitude is also apparent in his charge you never gave me a young goat to his father, who has given him all he has (v. 31).
A steward is responsible for managing his master's property and looking after the welfare of his servants. The point of this parable is that the unrighteous are better at using money to make friends in the world than believers are at using money to make friends for the Kingdom of God—which is accomplished by spending it on the needy. At death (when you fail) the needy will welcome their benefactors into the everlasting home (v. 9).
The test as to whether God will bestow heavenly blessings (true riches) on a person is directly related to how that person spends his money. The money we consider our own is actually another man's, that is, belonging to God, or at least to the poor. The Fathers universally see a person's failure to give money to God's work as stealing: “nothing less than embezzlement of money belonging to someone else” (Theoph).
16:15 The things which are highly esteemed among men include money, power, position, and praise.
Abraham's bosom means heaven. Abraham is mentioned among all the righteous because, in stark contrast to the rich man, Abraham showed hospitality to strangers (Gn 18:1–8). The rich man . . . was buried: The Fathers see this as illustrating the state of his merciless soul, buried by the pleasures of the flesh. He was already buried in life by “couches, rugs, furnishings, sweet oils, perfumes, large quantities of wine, varieties of food, and flatterers” (JohnChr). That the rich man remains unnamed indicates that he is ultimately forgotten (see Ps 9:6).
The rich man's appeal to Abraham as a spiritual father is not rejected. Rather, Abraham accepts this role, calling the rich man son and showing himself to be compassionate even towards the most wretched of men. The great gulf is not a geographical divide, but the complete separation between virtue and wickedness, a separation that cannot be overcome after death. Note that torments have not changed the rich man's heart, as he still sees Lazarus as a servant existing for the sake of his own comfort. Finally, this account by Christ reveals the communion of the saints: a man, not even a believer, calls out from Hades and converses with Saint Abraham!
Some Fathers see this parable being set after the final judgment, citing the punishment and reward being received by the two men respectively. Others see this parable set at a time after death but before the second coming of Christ, as evidenced by the man interceding on behalf of his brothers who are still living. The torment he is experiencing would be but a foretaste of his final state. From this perspective, we learn that souls of the departed have awareness of and concern for the state of those still alive on earth (see 9:30, 31; 2Mc 15:12–16; Mt 2:18), but also that the intercessions of a wicked man are heard, but avail nothing (contrast Jam 5:16).
“The ignorance of Scripture is a great cliff and a deep abyss. It is impossible for anyone to be without benefit if he reads continually and with attention” (JohnChr). Furthermore, the rebellious were not persuaded even when people did rise from the dead (Mt 28:11–15; Jn 12:9–11).
Little ones refers primarily to children, and by extension to anyone whose heart is humble and dependent on God (see notes at Mt 18:1–4, 6).
Here, the mulberry tree is symbolic of the devil's works. It is on the leaf of this tree that silkworms feed, worms being an image of hell (Mk 9:42–48). This patristic interpretation is confirmed by numerous scriptural images of evil being destroyed in the sea (8:33; Ex 14:27; Mt 21:21; Rev 20:10).
The servant plowing is mentioned first and the one tending sheep second, showing that one must first work out his own salvation (Php 2:12) before he can become a shepherd of others.
17:10  Unprofitable (lit. “without merit”) does not mean without intrinsic value. Rather, it means everything we have comes from God and is owed back to Him. There is nothing we can offer God that is not already His.
Where are the nine? Christ came to heal all of fallen humanity, yet only a small portion receive Him in faith and thanksgiving to give glory to God (v. 18). Thus, “many are called, but few chosen” (Mt 20:16). The lesson for Orthodox Christians is that worship is the number one priority.
The kingdom of God is a spiritual reality present within the Christian believer and within the community of the Church. Within you can also be translated “among you” or “in your midst.”
The warning not to be preoccupied with worldly matters applies both to believers and to parishes.
17:34-36 Christ's second coming will entail a sudden revelation of judgment. One will be taken to heaven and the other left for eternal condemnation. The separation of the saints from the wicked will occur on “the day when the Son of Man is revealed” (v. 30) and not, as some speculate today, at an event that occurs before His return.
The body refers to Christ, while the eagles refer to the angels and the saints.
Persistent (v. 7) and faithful (v. 8) prayer is the remedy for the tribulation just described (17:22–37; see also 1Th 5:16–18 and note).
Will He really find faith on the earth? The Lord often uses this form of question when speaking of characteristics that are rarely found (see 11:11; 12:42).
The Pharisee is highly respected and a careful observer of the details of the Law, whereas the tax collector is despised as a sinner who collaborates with the occupying Roman forces, betraying and cheating his own people.
The practices of this Pharisee are worthy examples to follow. His good deeds (fasting and giving tithes) are the primary weapons against the passions of lust and greed (adultery and extortion). However, without a humble and repentant heart, these outward practices are worthless and lead only to pride and judgment of others. Note that he prays with himself, for God is absent where there is boasting.
The tax collector shows by his posture an awareness of the state of his soul, standing far from the altar of sacrifice with eyes cast downward. His prayer, God, be merciful to me a sinner, is the foundation of the Jesus Prayer (see note on 1Th 5:16–18), as is the refrain “Lord have mercy” that permeates Orthodox worship and personal prayer.
18:14  Justified means forgiven and set right with God, for inward humility is blessed while pride in outward deeds is condemned.
The saying was hidden not by God, but because the disciples could not comprehend its meaning until the events of the Passion had taken place.
19:1 Jericho was notorious as a place of iniquity and is commonly associated with sinful living (see 10:30).
He was rich: See 18:24–27. This encounter between Christ and Zacchaeus demonstrates that grace can accomplish that which is impossible to man.
Many spiritual interpretations express the universal significance of this encounter. Theophylact sees the crowd symbolizing sins: “Crowded in by a multitude of passions and worldly affairs, he is not able to see Jesus.” St. Ambrose sees several parallels: (1) Zacchaeus being short is indicative of his being short on faith and virtue; (2) that Zacchaeus must ascend a tree shows no one attached to earthly matters can see Jesus; and (3) the Lord intending to pass that way reveals that Christ will approach anyone willing to repent and believe.
Zacchaeus uses the term give for his free and generous offering to the poor, and restore for what he owes those he had cheated, as this was not a gift but required by the Law (Ex 22:1). By doing both, Zacchaeus not only fulfills the Law, but shows his love of the gospel.
The title son of Abraham indicates Zacchaeus had become like this patriarch of Israel: he was counted righteous by his faith, he became generous toward the poor, and he was united to the people of God. Early records tell us he went on to be a bishop of the Church.
19:42 Jerusalem means “foundation of peace.” Only faith in Christ brings true peace—a truth hidden from a city that will soon rebel against its Savior (see note on 12:51).
The destruction of Jerusalem that Jesus foretells would occur in AD 70. This also describes the spiritual end of every person who lacks faith.
These things refers to Christ's Triumphal Entry into Jerusalem as Messiah (19:35–38), the cleansing of the temple (19:45), and His preaching (20:1). The elders confront Jesus since it was the duty of the priestly descendants of Levi to manage the temple. While Christ was descended from Judah (3:33), yet He is the High Priest “according to the order of Melchizedek” (Ps 109:4), a priestly line far greater than that of Levi, for His authority is from the Father.
In this parable, the man represents God the Father, and the vineyard refers to God's people. The vinedressers are the leaders of the Jews entrusted to care for the people. Each servant (vv. 10–12) sent by the owner stands for an OT prophet who comes to call people back to God, while the beloved son (v. 13) refers to Christ Himself. When the Son is cast out of the vineyard (v. 15) to be killed, this is understood on two levels: (1) that Jesus was killed outside Jerusalem; and (2) that Jesus was crucified by foreign soldiers, not by those of His own vineyard. The others (v. 16) who later receive the vineyard are the Gentiles brought into the Church.
That stone is Christ. This saying illustrates the two ways of destruction. Those falling on the stone are people who suffer the effects of their own sins while yet in this life, whereas those on whom the stone falls are unrepentant people who become powder in the final judgment (JohnChr).
This question on taxation is designed to trap Jesus: a “yes” would turn the Jewish people against Him, while a “no” would bring a charge of treason by the Romans. His answer defeats their cunning and shows that a believer can render the state its due while serving God (Rom 13:1–7). As the coin bears the image of the emperor and is properly paid to him, so each person bears the image of God and therefore belongs to Him. Conflict arises only when the state demands that which is contrary to God.
The first reference to the Lord applies to God the Father, while the term my Lord refers to Christ. This question is answered in that Christ is the Son of David in His humanity and David's Lord in His divinity (see note at Mt 22:41–46).
According to the Fathers, the Lord accounts the value of a gift not by how much is given, but by how much is kept back. Thus, the poor widow is counted to have given a great gift, having kept nothing for herself. Those who give out of their abundance but keep plenty back for themselves are counted by God to have given very little.
The Passover (Gr. Pascha) is the celebration of the destruction of the firstborn of Egypt and the deliverance of God's people from bondage (Ex 12–14). In remembrance of this, the Jews would slaughter an unblemished lamb and partake of it with unleavened bread. This prefigures Christ's Passion, in which the only-begotten Son of God is slain in order to deliver His people from their bondage to sin and death, and then is raised to lead them into the eternal Kingdom. Thus, Pascha is the primary term by which we refer to the death and Resurrection of Christ, known in the West as Easter.
Satan does not enter a man except by the man's consent. The reason Satan chose Judas and none of the others is that Judas had a place for Satan in his heart, while the others did not. Luke's mention of Judas being numbered among the twelve emphasizes the depth of the betrayal and shows that religious position is worthless if not accompanied by faith and virtue.
Christ has a fervent desire for this Passover because this meal will impart the mysteries of the new covenant to His followers, and because this event will inaugurate the great deliverance of humanity from sin through the power of the Cross.
22:17-18 This first cup concludes the OT Passover meal Christ eats with His disciples to fulfill the Law. Until the kingdom of God comes means until Christ's Resurrection; at that time He will again eat and drink with His disciples (24:43; Acts 10:41).
Gave thanks has at its root the Greek word eucharist, which immediately came to refer to both the Liturgy and the sacrament of Holy Communion. Before the end of the first century, a manuscript called the Didache refers to the celebration of the Liturgy as “the Eucharist,” and in the year AD 150, St. Justin says of Holy Communion, “This food we call ‘Eucharist,’ of which no one is allowed to partake except one who believes that the things we teach are true, and has received the washing [holiness baptism] for forgiveness of sins and for rebirth, and who lives as Christ commanded us.” This is My body: The Orthodox Church has always accepted Christ's words as true, “that the food consecrated by the word of prayer which comes from Him is the flesh and blood of that incarnate Jesus” (Justin). See Jn 6:51–66 and notes, and the article “The Eucharist” at 1Co 11.
Judas too is invited to the table for the mystical supper, Jesus seeking by all means to save him. His unworthy participation leads to his utter destruction (see 1Co 11:27–30; compare Est 7).
This small-minded dispute is out of place in the context of the mysteries Christ has just revealed. He corrects the disciples by first comparing them to the power-hungry Gentiles, whom they themselves considered an abomination, and contrasting them to Himself, who serves us even though He is Lord of all.
“Christ judges by discerning the heart, and not by examining deeds. So also the apostles are being shaped to exercise spiritual judgment concerning faith, and in rebuking error with virtue” (AmbM). The apostles will judge not with earthly judgment, but by the witness of their own lives. Since God's kingdom begins with the Resurrection of Christ, the authority of judgment has already been given to the apostles and their successors in the journey of the Church on earth (Mt 16:19; Jn 20:23).
The form of you in v. 31 is plural, indicating Satan asked for all the disciples, while the you in v. 32 is singular, indicating Jesus prayed especially for Simon Peter. Because Peter's faith was the strongest, he would be tested the most. When you have returned to Me: See Jn 21:15–17. Strengthen your brethren refers not only to the other disciples, but to all the faithful until Christ returns.
The sword (v. 36) is not to be understood literally (compare vv. 49–51), but refers to the living word of God in the battle against sin (Eph 6:17; Heb 4:12). St. Ambrose adds an additional meaning: that giving up one's garment and buying a sword refers to surrendering the body to the sword of martyrdom. Because the disciples were thinking of swords literally, Jesus abruptly ends the discussion with the words, “It is enough,” or better translated, “Enough of this!” (see Dt 3:26; Mk 14:41).
Christ's agony (v. 44) was the product of His human nature. In asking that the cup be taken away, He reveals His human will. By submitting His human will to the Father, Christ reveals His divine will to be one with the Father's, and further shows that each person must submit his own will to God's will (11:2). Christ willingly takes in Himself the voice of weak humanity, thereby conquering weakness: “The words of weakness are sometimes adopted by the strong in order that the hearts of the weak may be strengthened” (GrgGt).
This healing is recorded only by St. Luke the physician. It indicates the manner in which we are to treat our enemies. The Fathers see a spiritual meaning in that it is Christ who gives people the ability to hear the truth and thereby come to salvation (see 8:8; 14:35).
A girl being the first to test Peter is an icon of the temptation of Adam by Eve (Gn 3:6). Our fallen state is overcome in Christ when women are the first to hear, believe, and proclaim the Resurrection (24:1–10).
Peter is so overcome with fear that neither Christ's prediction (v. 34) nor the crowing of the rooster calls him to repentance, but only the Lord's gaze causes him to weep bitterly. Nevertheless, “through tears, what cannot be defended can be purged, for tears wash away the offense which is shameful to confess out loud” (AmbM).
Jesus asked many questions of the Jewish leaders which they refused to answer because doing so would have meant confessing Him as the Christ (20:4–7; Mt 22:41–46; Mk 3:4).
By this claim, Jesus declares Himself to be equal with God.
The religious accusations against Jesus (22:66–71) would not be enough to justify a death sentence under Roman occupation. Therefore, the chief priests invent false (20:20–26), politically charged accusations in order to persuade Pilate to put Jesus to death. Pilate's question (v. 3) is more a mockery of the accusation itself than of Jesus, as he clearly does not take the political charges seriously (v. 4). Christ's answer, “It is as you say,” can also be translated with a more ambiguous, “You say so.”
Herod sees Jesus as a novelty. Christ's silence is an act of compassion, for revealing divine mysteries in the face of such blasphemy would have brought Herod even greater condemnation. St. Ambrose sees Herod as a figure representing all unrighteous people who, if they do not recognize Jesus as the Christ, will never understand His words nor recognize His miracles.
Three times Pilate attempts to release Jesus (vv. 16, 20, 22), and three times the chief priest and the rulers incite the people to demand He be put to death. In the end, they demand the release of a rebel like themselves. Barabbas means “son of the father” and indicates to which father these rulers belong—the devil (Jn 8:44).
Simon means “obedience”; this faithful man stands for all who desire to follow Christ and carry the cross He places on them (9:23; 14:27).
23:28 Weeping is not appropriate for the One who redeems the world through the Cross, but is suited for one's own sins and for the sufferings of others.
The blessing on the barren women is an acknowledgment of the overwhelming pain a mother endures seeing her children suffer (illustrated by the “woe” in Mt 24:19).

“Mothers are held by the tie of feeling for their children, but cannot save them. How can one escape the bonds of nature? How can she who nurses ever overlook the one she has borne?” (JohnChr).
23:31 The green wood is Christ, full of virtue and truth. The dry stands for the Jews, barren of all life and of all righteousness. If the Romans eagerly destroy the righteous, what horrifying things await the unrighteous?
Calvary: lit., “the skull.” Being crucified between the two criminals shows Christ’s complete identity with fallen humanity and fulfills the prophecy of Is 53:9–12.
This intercession is not only for those who sentenced and crucified Jesus, but for all of humanity—a people who have no insight into the profound mystery of God's salvation. Jesus speaks these words not as a request, but with divine authority. Their great sin would still have been forgiven them had they repented. Indeed, one of the soldiers did repent (v. 47) and is considered a saint of the Church.
Save Yourself: The continuing temptation of Satan to deter Jesus from completing His mission (see 4:9–13).
An inscription: What was intended as an accusation and a mockery became instead a triumphant symbol that all nations would come under the reign of Jesus the King.
The first of the criminals wanted to use Jesus to avoid responsibility for his actions, while the other accepts his sentence and asks simply to be remembered. This latter way is the path to Paradise. Today: To be reconciled to Christ is to be in paradise immediately. Furthermore, the souls of the departed are in the presence of God and experience a foretaste of His glory before the final resurrection.
Jesus does not have His life taken from Him, but will voluntarily commit it to the Father. His was the first human soul not to be taken to Hades; instead it was freely given into the hands of God. Thus, Christ frees all of humanity from death's grip. His death reconciles mankind to God, not by satisfying the Father's need for blood-justice as some might teach, but by causing every aspect of our corrupt human nature to be transformed, for whatever divinity touches is healed. Christ accepts human nature in order to sanctify human nature; He accepts our weakness in order to make us strong; He takes on our sin in order to free us from sin; He suffers in order to transfigure suffering; and He enters death in order to destroy it (1Co 15:20–28; see note at Mt 27:50).
Reflecting on the conversion of the centurion, St. Cyril of Alexandria notes, “Observe that no sooner had Christ endured the Passion on the Cross for our sakes than He began to win many unto knowledge of the truth.”
If the apostles had buried Christ, doubters could claim His body was simply hidden away. Joseph being both a council member and a good and just man refutes any possibility that the Lord's body was deceptively hidden by the apostles. The spiritual significance of a tomb where no one had ever lain before is that Christ died a death unlike any person had ever died: a death without corruption, a death leading to victory over the grave itself.
His rest in the tomb fulfills the image of His birth in a cave (see 2:7) and reveals the ultimate purpose of His coming. The faith of the women, while stronger than that of the hiding disciples, was still imperfect in that they prepared for the corruption of Christ's body. Sabbath: As God rested from His work of creation on the original Sabbath (Gn 2:1–3), so now Christ rests from the work of the new creation on the Sabbath. Thus He gives the Sabbath its ultimate meaning and fulfills the Law even in death. At Matins of Holy Saturday we sing, “This is the most blessed Sabbath on which Christ sleeps in order to rise on the third day.”
See Mt 28:2. The stone is rolled away not to let the all-powerful Lord out, but to let us witness His Resurrection.
These men . . . in shining garments were angels.
In order to dispel any doubt, the angel confirms his message by recalling Christ's own words. In calculating the third day, the first day is Friday, the day on which Christ died before sundown. The second is Saturday, the Sabbath on which Christ rested in the tomb. The third day, which begins after sundown on Saturday, is the day of Resurrection, Sunday.
Certain Fathers teach that Mary the mother of James was the wife of Alphaeus, and this James was one of the Twelve (6:15). Most, however, hold that this is the Virgin Mary, being in fact the stepmother of a different James, “the Lord's brother” (see Mt 13:55; compare Mk 15:40, 47). The Virgin Mary appears in certain icons of the Myrrhbearing Women, and in a hymn by St. John of Damascus, we sing, “The angel cried to the lady full of grace, ‘Rejoice, O pure Virgin: your Son is risen from His three days in the tomb.’”
The two of them are Cleopas (v. 18) and, according to tradition, Luke himself. It was a common literary device for a writer not to give his own name (see Mk 14:51; Jn 21:24).
The nature of the resurrected body is so different from its previous state that it is not immediately recognizable (Jn 20:14; 21:4, 12; see 1Co 15:35–44). It is also able to take different forms, which is what occurs here (see Mk 16:12 and note). Their eyes were restrained: Christ intentionally prevents them from recognizing Him in order to expose their doubting thoughts and then cure them by means of the OT Scriptures (v. 27).
24:21 The disciples' hope for redemption was still imbedded in a foolish (v. 25) misunderstanding of the Messiah as a political savior or deliverer. With Christ's death, this earthly hope had been dashed.
It is partial faith to believe either in a Messiah who only suffered or one that would only reign in His glory. Complete faith sees the Messiah encompassing both, for all of this was foretold in the Law and the Prophets (see also note for v. 16).
The Lord breaks bread in the same manner as at the Last Supper (22:19), imaging the Eucharist of the NT Church. All who commune with the Lord in His risen Body in faith have their eyes opened (v. 31) to know Him, for the Lord is known most perfectly in the breaking of bread (v. 35).
Did not our heart burn within us: The inescapable effect of hearing the Holy Scriptures taught correctly and with faith (see 2Ti 2:15). This burning is the conviction that the words and promises are true.
Peace to you: This resurrectional greeting of Christ is proclaimed by the priest or the bishop frequently in Orthodox worship services.
Christ eats not because He in His resurrected body needs food, but to prove to the disciples that He is truly risen in the flesh. The spiritual significance assigned to the fish is active virtue, and the honeycomb is the sweetness of divine wisdom.
Remission of sins refers to the putting away of sins in baptism, which is preached by St. Peter at Pentecost (see Acts 2:38).
24:49  Are endued with is literally “have put on” (the same verb found in Eph 6:11), indicating the complete protection of spiritual armor. Tarry is literally “sit down,” and is an instruction not only to stay in place, but also to take rest and prepare attentively before a great and difficult task (compare Mk 14:32). The Promise of My Father is the Holy Spirit (see Acts 1:4).
The Ascension of Christ is celebrated forty days after the Resurrection (Acts 1:3). This event fulfills the type given when Elijah ascended in a fiery chariot (4Kg 2:11) and marks the completion of Christ's glorification and lordship over all creation. At the Incarnation, Christ brought His divine nature to human nature. In the mystery of the Ascension, Christ brings human nature to the divine Kingdom. He reigns with the Father and the Holy Spirit in His glorified body, revealing His glorified human nature—indeed, human flesh—to be worshiped by the whole angelic realm. At Vespers of Ascension we sing, “The angels were amazed seeing a Man so exalted.” In some icons of the Ascension, Christ's white robes are tinted red to indicate the shedding of His blood for the redemption of the world and the ascent of that life-giving blood into heaven (Is 63:1–3; see also Ps 23:7–10).
In the beginning recalls the creation story of Genesis, but speaks more clearly of the Creator Himself. Furthermore, while Genesis spoke of the first creation, this “Prologue” of John (vv. 1–18) reveals the new creation in Christ.

Was the Word (Gr. logos): The Word is the eternal Son of God. Was indicates existence without reference to a starting point and emphasizes the Word's eternal existence without beginning. Logos can mean “wisdom,” “reason,” and “action” as well as “word,” all of which are attributes of the Son of God. The Word was with God: With shows that the Word—the Son of God—is a distinct Person from the Father and that He is in eternal communion with the Father. The Word was God: The Word—the Son of God—is co-equal and co-eternal with the Father; He Himself is God with the same divinity as the Father. Some twist and mistranslate this phrase “the Word was a god” in order to propagate their heresy that the Son of God is a created being, a creature not fully divine. Such a translation is unsupportable, false, dishonest, and deceptive.
The Word is the co-Creator with the Father and the Holy Spirit (Gn 1; Ps 32:6, 9; Heb 1:2) and not merely an instrument or servant used by the Father. Will, operation, and power are one in the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Thus, the heavens and the earth are the works of the One who made them, while the Son was not made but is eternally begotten of the Father.
Only God has life in Himself. Thus, the Word, being God, is the source of life, together with the Father and the Holy Spirit. The life was the light of men: John now introduces mankind as receiver of the divine light. By participating in the life of the Son, believers themselves become children of the light (12:36; Eph 5:8; 1Th 5:5). Moses saw the divine light in the burning bush (Ex 3:2); the whole nation saw it at the Red Sea (Ex 13:21); Isaiah saw it in his heavenly vision (Is 6:1–5); and three apostles saw it at the Transfiguration (Mt 17:1–5).
1:5 Darkness indicates both spiritual ignorance and satanic opposition to the light. Those who hate truth prefer ignorance for themselves and strive to keep others ignorant as well (3:19). The word translated comprehend means both “understand” and “overcome.” Thus, darkness can never overpower the light of Christ, nor can it understand the way of love.
This John is John the Baptist, not the author of this Gospel.
Christ offers light to every person, but the world and even many of His own refuse to receive Him; thus, they can neither know nor recognize Him. Those who accept Him have His light. In a hymn sung at the end of Liturgy, after hearing the Gospel and receiving communion, we sing, “We have seen the true light, we have received the heavenly Spirit.”
Right also means “authority” and indicates a gift from God, not an inalienable right. Those who receive Christ become children of God by adoption (Gal 4:4–7) and by grace inherit everything Christ is by nature (see the article “Deification” at 2 Peter). To believe in His name means to believe and trust in Him who in His humanity took the name Jesus as Word, Son, Messiah, and Savior.
Adoption as a child of God is not a matter of ethnic descent (of blood) as it was in the OT; nor are we children of God simply by natural birth (the will of the flesh), nor by man's own decision (the will of man). Becoming a child of God is a spiritual birth by grace, through faith, and in the Holy Spirit. This is accomplished and manifested in the sacrament of Holy Baptism (3:5–8; see Tts 3:4–7).
The Word became flesh clarifies the manner in which the Son and Word of God came to His people (vv. 9–11), pointing specifically to His Incarnation. The Word became fully human without ceasing to be fully God. He assumed complete human nature: body, soul, will, emotion, and even mortality—everything that pertains to humanity except sin. As God and Man in one Person, Christ pours divinity into all of human nature, for anything not assumed by Christ would not have been healed.

Dwelt among us: In the OT, God's presence dwelt (“tabernacled”) in the ark of the covenant and later in the temple. Here, the eternal Word comes to dwell in and among humanity itself. His glory refers both to His divine power shown by His signs and wonders (2:11; 11:4, 40), and to His humble service to mankind, shown most perfectly on the Cross (12:23–32; 13:31). In both ways, Christ reveals that He is the One sent from the Father.

Only begotten of the Father: The Son has no beginning, but has the Father as His source from eternity. He is called only begotten because there is no other born from the Father. (The Holy Spirit exists eternally from the Father through another mystery called “procession”; see 15:26.)

Full of grace and truth: This phrase qualifies both the Word and His glory. Grace is Christ's uncreated energy given to us through His love and mercy. Truth includes His faithfulness to His promises and covenants and to the reality of His words and gifts.
In saying we have all received of His fullness, the Scriptures confirm that God's grace can fill human nature to the extent of actually deifying it (see the article “Deification” at 2 Peter). In Christ, God's children become gods by grace (10:34, 35) without ceasing to be human. As metal thrust into fire takes on properties of fire (such as heat and light) without ceasing to be metal, so human nature permeated by God takes on properties of the divine nature. Grace for grace is a Semitic expression signifying an overabundance of grace.
No one has seen God at any time: No one can see the nature, or essence, of God, for to see God is to die (Ex 33:20). Only One who is Himself divine can see God, and thus the Son is the only One who can declare Him. This revelation of God's energies can be received by the faithful. Moses saw the “back” of God (Ex 33:21–23); Isaiah saw His glory (see Is 6:1; John 12:41).
Here the theological Prologue has concluded with 1:18, and the focus shifts to the beginnings of Christ's ministry: the witness of John the Baptist (1:19–34); the calling of the first apostles (1:35–51); Christ's first sign at Cana (2:1–11); and His rest at Capernaum (2:12). Just as John began his Gospel similarly to the opening of Genesis (“In the beginning”—v. 1; see Gn 1:1), so he parallels Genesis in this opening account, which covers seven consecutive days.

(1) The first day (1:19–28)—John the Baptist bears witness to the Light—the Christ—in the presence of the Jews. This parallels the creation of light on the first day in Gn 1:3–5.

(2) The second day (1:29–34)—John the Baptist declares that Christ baptizes with the Holy Spirit, which is greater than his own baptism of repentance, performed with water on earth. This parallels the separation of water above from the water below on the second day in Gn 1:6–8.

(3) The third day (1:35–42)—John the Baptist sends two disciples to Christ whom Christ gathers to be His own, one of whom He declares to be the foundation of the Church (v. 42; see Mt 16:18). This parallels the gathering of the waters and the establishment of growth on the land on the third day in Gn 1:9–13.

(4) The fourth day (1:43–51)—Jesus calls Philip and Nathanael, who see Christ as the true Light, the One who was revealed in the OT, a lesser light. This parallels the establishment of the lesser and greater lights governing the night and the day respectively on the fourth day in Gn 1:14–19.

(5) The sixth day (2:1–11)—John does not include the events of the fifth day, but jumps to the sixth. The phrase on the third day is an expression meaning “two days later,” for it includes the current day in the calculation (see 2:1 and note). On this sixth day, the wedding in Cana occurs, which parallels the creation of man and woman in Gn 1:26–31.

(6) The seventh day (2:12)—Jesus rests at Capernaum with His mother, His brothers, and His disciples, which parallels God resting on the seventh day in Gn 2:1–3.
1:21 John the Baptist is a prophet but not the Prophet, the Messiah, whose coming Moses foretold (Dt 18:15–19).
On John's baptism, see notes at Lk 3:3 and 3:16, 17.
John's declaring Jesus as the Lamb of God recalls Isaiah's “Servant of God” who dies for the transgressions of His people (Is 53:4–12). Christ, the true Paschal (Passover) Lamb, offers Himself for our deliverance from darkness and death (1Pt 1:18, 19). St. John Chrysostom teaches that Jesus came to John this second time in order for John to make this declaration and thus stop anyone from thinking that Jesus needed baptism to wash away sins.
That the Spirit remained upon Him was a sign that Christ possesses the Spirit in His fullness from all eternity. Christ did not receive the Holy Spirit at His Baptism; rather, this vision that John saw revealed the truth that the Holy Spirit has always rested on Christ.
The Lord's first disciples had been followers of John the Baptist. They were Andrew (v. 40); Simon, who was also known as Peter, or Cephas (vv. 41, 42); Philip (v. 43); Nathanael (v. 45), who was also known as Bartholomew; and an unnamed disciple (vv. 35–40), who some Fathers say was John, the author of this Gospel. It was a common literary device for a writer not to give his own name (see Lk 24:13).
No deceit means both having a pure heart and being straightforward with others.
What exactly occurred under the fig tree is not stated. St. John Chrysostom teaches this was the meeting place of Philip and Nathanael (vv. 45, 46), and that Jesus was praising Nathanael for being so diligent and careful in His search for the Messiah. Christ's foreknowledge and His ability to see into Nathanael's heart stir him to this confession of faith (v. 49).
The title Son of Man is a title of the Messiah that had a level of mystery in its meaning, indicating a man of heavenly origin who would usher in the Kingdom of God (Dan 7:13, 14). In an OT prophecy, Jacob dreamed of a ladder connecting earth to heaven, upon which the angels of God were ascending and descending (Gn 28:12–15). Jesus is this “ladder” who unites earth to heaven, and therefore is this Son of Man.
The wedding in Cana is the setting for the first of the seven signs (v. 11) performed by Jesus in the Gospel of John. John uses the term signs to show that these miraculous actions point beyond themselves to the truth that the Kingdom of God has come among us in the Person of Jesus Christ. The seven signs are (1) changing water into wine (2:1–11); (2) curing the nobleman's son (4:46–54); (3) healing the paralytic (5:1–15); (4) feeding the five thousand (6:1–14); (5) walking on water (6:15–21); (6) opening the eyes of a blind man (9:1–41); and (7) raising Lazarus from the dead (11:38–44).

The setting here is significant. In the OT, marriage feasts symbolized the union of God with His Bride, Israel. Jesus begins His ministry at Galilee, which had a large Gentile population; this was a sign of the spread of the gospel to all the world. That this wedding took place on the third day sets a resurrectional tone, showing that the marriage of God and His Church will be fulfilled in Christ's Resurrection. Other parallels between the marriage here and the Resurrection account in 20:1–18 are that both involve a woman named Mary who makes an appeal, and in both passages the disciples are invited to witness the event. Furthermore, the Resurrection account (20:11–18) has a striking similarity to SS 3:1–5, again showing the unity between marriage and our Lord's Resurrection.

By His presence at this wedding, Jesus further declares marriage to be holy and honorable (Heb 13:4); therefore, this passage is read at Orthodox weddings, and these images are incorporated into many prayers in the wedding service.
Here is an example of Mary's gift of intercession. Even now, Mary continually speaks to her Son on our behalf and is our preeminent intercessor before His Throne. This is declared in the words of an Orthodox prayer: “The intercessions of a mother have great effect to win the favor of the Master.” This is confirmed as Jesus grants her request here.

In this passage, wine is symbolic of life, and thus there are two levels of meaning to Mary's statement, “They have no wine”: (1) a marriage is not complete without the presence of Christ; and (2) the old covenant was unable to bestow life even on the most faithful people.

Contrary to certain modern usages, Woman is a sacred title in Scripture, an address conveying deep respect and distinction (4:21; 8:10; 19:26; 20:13; compare to Gn 2:23). What does your concern have to do with Me? is more literally, “What is that to Me and to you?” This answer is not a refusal of Mary's intercession, but a declaration that the time had not yet come for Christ to be revealed. That Christ fulfills Mary's request teaches several things: (1) Christ is Lord over hours and seasons and is not subject to them. (2) The wedding party needed to be aware of their lack of wine first so that they might learn that it is Christ who fulfills all needs. (3) We need to have perseverance in our petitions before God (Mt 15:21–28). (4) The intercessions of the righteous have great power (Jam 5:16).
Waterpots were made of stone because, according to rabbinical teaching, stone would not contract ritual impurity. That there are six (one less than the perfect seven) indicates that the Law, illustrated by water being reserved for Jewish purification, was incomplete, imperfect, and unable to bestow life. This water is changed into wine, symbolizing the old covenant being fulfilled in the new, which is capable of bestowing life. The overabundant gallons of wine illustrate the overflowing grace Christ grants to all.
The Fathers see this transformation as prefiguring the transformation of bread and wine into the Body and Blood of Christ in the Eucharist.
Since Jesus is not a Levitical priest, His authority to cleanse the temple is challenged. The term Jews in John's Gospel often refers specifically to the leaders; in this case, it refers to the chief priests and the elders (see Mt 21:23). As Christ is careful not to reveal Himself to scoffers, He answers in a hidden way: the ultimate sign will be His death and Resurrection.
John reports three Passover feasts between our Lord's Baptism and Passion (see also 6:4; 11:55), showing that His earthly ministry lasted three years.
Nicodemus believed Jesus was from God (v. 2), but his faith was still weak, as he was afraid of his peers and thus came to Jesus by night (v. 2). Following this conversation, Nicodemus's faith grows to the point of defending Jesus before the Sanhedrin (7:50, 51) and finally making the bold public expression of faith of preparing and entombing our Lord's body (19:39–42). His memory is celebrated on the third Sunday of Pascha (Easter) along with the Myrrhbearing Women and Joseph of Arimathea. According to some early sources, Nicodemus was baptized by Peter and consequently was removed from the Sanhedrin and forced to flee Jerusalem.
Born again: The word again can also be translated “from above” and clearly refers to the heavenly birth from God through faith in Christ (1:12, 13). This heavenly birth is baptism (v. 5) and our adoption by God as our Father (Gal 4:4–7). This new birth is but the beginning of our spiritual life, with its goal being entrance into the kingdom of God.
Nicodemus misunderstands, questioning the possibility of a second physical birth. Misunderstandings occur frequently in John's Gospel (see 2:19–21; 4:10–14, 30–34; 6:27; 7:37–39; 11:11–15). Christ uses these opportunities to elevate an idea from a superficial or earthly meaning to a heavenly and eternal meaning.
This birth of water and the Spirit is a direct reference to Christian baptism and the gift of the Holy Spirit given at chrismation.
A play on words: the Greek word pneuma means both wind and Spirit. The working of the Holy Spirit in the new birth is as mysterious as the source and destination of the blowing wind. Likewise, the Spirit moves where He wills and cannot be contained by human ideas or agendas.
According to St. John Chrysostom, earthly things refer to grace and baptism given to man. These are earthly, not in the sense of “unspiritual,” but only in the sense that they occur on earth and are given to creatures. The heavenly things involve the ungraspable mysteries of the eternal generation of the Son from the Father; they relate to His eternal existence before all time and to God's divine plan of salvation for the world. A person first must grasp the ways in which God works among mankind before he can even begin to understand things that pertain to God Himself.
Moses lifted up an image of a serpent to cure the Israelites from deadly bites of poisonous snakes (Nm 21:4–9). This miracle-working image prefigured Christ being lifted up on the Cross. As believers behold the crucified Christ in faith, the power of sin and death is overthrown in them. Just as the image of a serpent was the weapon that destroyed the power of the serpents, so the instrument of Christ's death becomes the weapon that overthrows death itself.
To show the reason the Son must be crucified ("lifted up"—v. 14), Jesus declares God's great love not only for Israel, but for the world. This single verse expresses the whole of the message of John's Gospel, and indeed, of salvation history.
While Christ came to save and not to condemn, man has free will. Thus, he can reject this gift, and he becomes condemned by his own rejection.
3:26 He is baptizing: See 4:2.
John the Baptist is called the friend (the “best man”), while Christ Himself is the bridegroom. The bride is the Church, the people of God. John confesses his role in the coming of the Messiah—that he is witness to the wedding of Christ and His people, and thus he rejoices in that celebration.
John expresses a humility that serves as an example for all believers. He renounces all earthly glory and reputation for the sake of Christ. By allowing Christ to increase in him, John himself finds true glory. This statement further indicates the end of the old covenant. As the law vanishes, the grace of Jesus Christ abounds. John's declaration is revealed in the liturgical calendar, wherein his birth is celebrated at a time when the sun begins to decrease in the sky (June 24), while Christ's birth is celebrated when the sun begins to increase (Dec. 25).
John echoes the teaching of Christ Himself (v. 18). Note the absence of the word “alone” in this statement of faith. “We do not from this assert that faith alone is sufficient for salvation; the directions for living that are given in many places in the Gospels show this” (JohnChr). See also Jam 2:14–24.
4:4 Samaria was the region to the north of Jerusalem, between Judea and Galilee.
The OT does not mention Jacob's well, though Jacob did dwell in the area (Gn 33:19). Wells were significant because of their rarity and their value in desert life. Therefore, wells came to symbolize life itself (Ps 35:9, 10; 45:4; Is 55:1). This particular well is maintained as a shrine to this day, and pilgrims can drink from it. Jesus is wearied from His journey, showing His complete humanity. The sixth hour is noontime. This woman is identified in church tradition as St. Photini (see note at 4:28–30).
The Samaritans were a mixed race and traditional enemies of the Jews. Although they worshiped the God of Israel and were also awaiting the Messiah, they accepted only the first five books of the OT (the Pentateuch) as their Scriptures. They had built their own temple on Mt. Gerizim, which the Jews destroyed in 128 BC.
Living water in the ordinary sense means fresh, flowing water, from a stream or spring rather than from a pond or cistern. Christ uses the term to mean the grace of the Holy Spirit that leads to eternal life (7:37–39). This gift not only remains in a person, but is so abundant it overflows to others. The woman misunderstands Christ and asks, “Are You greater than our father Jacob?” In the Scriptures, Jacob is a type of Christ, for he received the vision of the divine ladder (Gn 28:12), which Christ fulfills. Furthermore, just as Jacob gave this well for earthly life, now Christ gives the well of the Holy Spirit for eternal life.
4:16-19 Since Jesus perceived she was living with a man without being married, and as He knew of her string of husbands, the woman perceives He is a prophet. As the Samaritans did not accept any prophets after Moses, the only prophet they expected was the Messiah whom Moses foretold (Dt 18:15–18). Christ's insight into people's hearts, reported many times in the Gospels, underscores His divine nature.
If Jesus was indeed the expected Prophet (see previous note), then He could settle the historical argument about where worship was to take place. Jesus refuses to answer such an earthly question and elevates the discussion to the manner in which people ought to worship. Even more importantly, He turns the attention to the One we worship: God Himself. The Father is worshiped in spirit—that is, in the Holy Spirit—and in truth—that is in Christ Himself (14:6) and according to Christ's revelation. God is Spirit: God cannot be confined to a particular location. Those who receive the Holy Spirit and believe in Jesus Christ can worship God the Father with purity of heart.

Salvation is of the Jews (v. 22): The Lord affirms that true revelation comes from Judaism. “The commonwealth of Israel was the school of the knowledge of God for all the nations” (AthanG). More importantly, Jesus is testifying that the Messiah, who was prophesied among the Jews, has risen from among the Jews. While the gift of salvation in Christ is to all nations, it has come from within Judaism. The hour (v. 21) refers to the death and Resurrection of Christ and to the outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, which inaugurates the worship of the new covenant.
4:26  I who speak to you am He is literally translated “I AM [Gr. ego eimi], who speak to you.” “I AM” is the divine Name of God; its use indicates a theophany, or revelation of God Himself. The use of this Name by a mere man was considered blasphemy and punishable by death (see 8:58; Mk 14:62). However, as Jesus is divine, His use of this Name reveals His unity with the Father and the Holy Spirit; indeed, He is God Incarnate.
They marveled not only that Jesus spoke with a Samaritan, but that He was speaking with an unaccompanied woman, which was potentially scandalous. For further instances of the Lord's dealings with women, see 7:53–8:11; 11:20–33; 20:11–18 (see also Lk 8:1–3).
The Samaritan woman becomes an early evangelist, testifying to the advent of Christ and bringing others to Him (v. 39). According to an early tradition, after the Resurrection she was baptized with the name Photini, “the enlightened one.” Along with her two sons and five daughters, she went to Carthage to spread the gospel. She was later martyred with her family under the emperor Nero by being thrown into a well. The Church remembers her on March 20 and on the fourth Sunday of Pascha.
On misunderstandings in John's Gospel, see note at 3:4. Christ fulfills His role as Messiah by doing the will of the Father; therefore this is His food. This also teaches us we are to perform the will of God in our lives without being distracted by earthly cares (6:27; see also Mt 4:4; 6:25–33).
Behold: According to St. John Chrysostom, this command to look was given because the townspeople were approaching, ready and eager to believe in Jesus. Christ compares these foreigners (relative to the Jews) to fields ready for harvest. This command is also to all believers to look to those around us and to share the gospel with anyone wanting to hear it, regardless of race or ethnicity.
St. John Chrysostom teaches those who sow and those who reap are the prophets of the OT and the apostles, respectively. The prophets sowed in preparation for the coming of the Messiah, but did not see His coming and thus did not reap. The apostles did not do the preparation, but would draw thousands to Christ in their own lifetimes.
That these foreigners are among the first to recognize Jesus as the Savior of the world shows the gospel is for all people in every nation.
4:44 His own country is Galilee (1:46; 2:1; 7:42, 52; 19:19).
Galileans were present at Jerusalem during the Passover (2:13–25), when Jesus performed many signs. While the Galileans received Christ having seen His signs, St. John Chrysostom gives greater credit to the Samaritans for accepting Christ based on words alone without the accompanying signs (see also 20:29).
This is the second sign (v. 54) reported in John's Gospel (see note at 2:1–11). Having revealed He can see into the hearts of people from a distance (1:45–48), the Lord now demonstrates He can heal from a distance, showing His divine power knows no earthly limits. While there are certain similarities between this sign and the miracle recorded in Mt 8:5–13, there are many crucial differences; these are clearly two different encounters.
Christ is admonishing the people in general (you in this verse is plural both times) and not merely the nobleman. Faith based on miraculous works alone is insufficient for salvation; this kind of incomplete faith quickly turns to scorn should the miracles cease (19:15).
4:49-53 The nobleman's concern is clearly for his child, though his faith in Christ is weak. He does not understand that Christ is Lord over illness even from a distance, nor does he grasp that Jesus would have the power to heal even if the child were to die. Finally, he inquires about the timing of the healing (v. 52), still not completely trusting the Lord's authority. Only after all is confirmed do he and his whole household believe (v. 53). Thus, in healing the child from a distance, Jesus heals not only the body of the child, but the soul of the nobleman.
This healing is the third sign in John's Gospel (see note at 2:1–11) and exemplifies the divine power to restore a person to wholeness. The Fathers teach this feast is the OT Pentecost (also called the “Feast of Weeks”), which celebrates the giving of the Law on Mt. Sinai. The references to the Law of Moses later in this chapter confirm this interpretation.
This double-basin pool, believed to have curative powers, has been discovered about 100 yards north of the temple area, near the Sheep Gate. The water for this high-ground pool came from underground springs and was used to wash down the sacrificial lambs before they were slain.

The pool functions as a type of Christian baptism. Under the old covenant, a great multitude (v. 3) waited to enter the water for physical healing after an angel touched it (v. 4). The waters were special in that they were a way of indirectly participating in the animal sacrifices of the temple, since the animals were washed in the same water. Yet the grace was limited to the first person to enter. Under the new covenant, baptism is given to all nations as a direct participation in Christ's own sacrificial death (Rom 6:3–6) without the mediation of angels. Baptism thus grants healing of the soul and the promise of eternal resurrection of the body, and its grace in inexhaustible.
According to St. John Chrysostom, Jesus singled out the man who had waited for thirty-eight years in order to teach us to have perseverance, and as a judgment against those who lose hope or patience in much lesser troubles lasting a far shorter time.
The Lord's question is relevant for many reasons. (1) It made public the fact that the sick man kept his faith even in a situation that was seemingly hopeless, for how could a paralytic ever be the first into the water? (2) The Lord draws attention away from the water and toward the need we have for a man to help us. This is fulfilled in Christ Himself, who became Man to heal all. (3) Not everyone who is ill actually desires healing. Sadly, some may prefer to remain infirm in order to have license to complain, to avoid responsibility for their lives, or to continue exciting the pity of others.
Although the Law itself does not specifically forbid the carrying of burdens on the Sabbath, this is prohibited in Jer 17:23 and explicitly forbidden in rabbinical teachings. That Christ is Lord over the Sabbath is made clear by His command (v. 8) and by the man's obedience (v. 9; see also Mt 12:1–8 and notes). As is often the case in John's Gospel, the term Jews here refers to the leaders and not to the people in general (see note at 2:18–21). Notice the malice of these leaders, for they focus solely on the Sabbath violation, asking the man, “Who is the Man who said to you, ‘Take up your bed’?” but ignoring altogether the miraculous healing.
That the man was found in the temple shows his great faith, for he had gone there directly to thank God for his cure rather than departing to someone's home or to the marketplace.

Sin no more: While there is a general connection between sin and suffering (Rom 6:23), this connection is not always one-to-one, for the innocent often suffer, and the guilty are often spared earthly sufferings (see also 9:1–3). Nevertheless, sometimes our sins lead directly to our own suffering in this world; according to St. John Chrysostom, this was the case with this paralytic. Christ's warning here, however, is that the sins that destroy the soul lead to a far worse result than an affliction of the body. The only hope is to flee from sin altogether.
The man does not report Jesus to the leaders of the Jews in a malicious way, but as a witness to Christ's goodness. For even though these leaders were only interested in the violation of the Sabbath (v. 12), the healed man emphasizes that it was Jesus who had made him well, saying nothing about carrying his bed.
5:16-30 When Jesus declares God to be My Father, the Jews clearly understand this implies absolute equality (vv. 17, 18). That the Son can do nothing of Himself (v. 19) proves that His every act and word is in complete unity with the Father and the Holy Spirit. This discourse reveals that the Father and the Son are completely united in nature, will, and action. Thus, the Son fully shares the divine attributes of both giving life and executing judgment. Christ's judgment (v. 22) is based on both faith (v. 24) and works (v. 29).
The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead will hear the voice of the Son of God: The dead refers both to the spiritually dead, who will find life in Christ, and to the physically dead, who will rise in the general resurrection. Christ confirms this statement by raising Lazarus from the dead (11:38–44) before going to His own death. Verses 24–30 are read at the Orthodox funeral service, confirming the same reward for those who fall asleep in faith.
5:30 The divine will is common to the three Persons of the Trinity—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—for all fully share the same divine nature. When the Son is said to obey the Father, this refers to His human will, which Christ assumed at His Incarnation. Christ freely aligned His human will in every aspect with the divine will of the Father (see note at 6:38), and we are called to do likewise.
How could Christ's witness ever be untrue? It cannot (see 8:14). Rather, Jesus is anticipating the argument and speaking the thoughts of the Jewish leaders (he does the same thing in Lk 4:23). In Jewish tradition, a valid testimony requires two witnesses (Dt 17:6). Jesus offers four witnesses to confirm His identity as Messiah and as Son of God: (1) God the Father (vv. 32, 37, 38); (2) John the Baptist (vv 33–35); (3) His own works (v. 36); and (4) the OT Scriptures, through which Moses and others gave testimony (vv. 39–47).
This chapter parallels the story of the Passover and Exodus of Israel from Egypt in several important ways.

1. In the Exodus account (Ex 11–17), God first performed His signs against Pharaoh, then gave instructions on how to be saved at the time of the Passover (Ex 11:1–12:14). In this passage, the multitudes follow Christ because of His signs (v. 2), and this too takes place at Passover (v. 4).

2. In the Exodus, the Jews were said to eat unleavened bread because they were hastily driven out of Egypt and had brought no provisions for themselves (Ex 12:39). Here, Jesus feeds the multitudes with earthly bread because they had brought no provisions, having rushed out to see Him (vv. 2–14).

3. In the Exodus, Moses leads the people across the Red Sea, walking on dry ground in the midst of the water (Ex 14:15–31). Here, Christ sends His disciples across the sea (v. 17) and then walks on the sea (v. 19) as if it were dry ground.

4. In the Exodus, God fed His people manna and gave them drink from a miraculous water source (Ex 16:1–17:7). Here, Christ declares Himself to be the true food and drink, the true bread that has come down from heaven (vv. 48–58).

These parallels show that Christ our God is the fulfillment of the old covenant, and that the breaking of His body and the shedding of His blood, which free mankind from the slavery of sin, fulfill the sacrifice of the Passover lambs (1:29), which brought the people out of slavery into the Promised Land.
Christ tests Philip to increase his faith (v. 5), for Philip needed help in understanding Him (14:8–10). Two hundred denarii corresponds to over six months' wages for a laborer. Andrew has greater faith than Philip: knowing the prophet Elisha had multiplied bread for 100 men (4Kg 4:42–44), he offers the food brought by a certain lad. Nevertheless, Andrew is still weak in faith, questioning what a mere five loaves could do for the number of people there (v. 9).
Though Jesus had performed greater signs than this, these crowds were so desirous of an earthly Messiah that they declared Jesus to be the expected Prophet (Dt 18:15–19) only when they were filled with earthly things (see v. 26). Because of this misunderstanding, Jesus departed from them.
This is the fifth sign recorded by John (see note at 2:1–11). On the parallel between this sign and Israel's crossing of the Red Sea, see note on 6:1–71. See also note at Mt 14:27.
Christ was crucified in the flesh and His blood was shed on the Cross, and on the third day He was raised in a glorified state. We receive the grace of Christ's sacrificial offering by coming to Him in faith (v. 35) and by receiving Holy Communion in faith. In Communion, we truly eat His flesh and drink His blood, and this grants the faithful eternal life (v. 54), with Christ abiding in us and us in Him (v. 56). “There is no room left for any doubt about the reality of His flesh and blood, because we have both the witness of His words and our own faith. Thus when we eat and drink these elements, we are in Christ and Christ is in us” (HilryP).
This section (7:1–10:21) tells of our Lord's visit to Jerusalem for the Feast of Tabernacles (v. 2); the entire section covers eight days. At this festival during the last year of His earthly life, Jesus taught in the temple and attracted a great deal of public attention. Some thought Him mad (v. 20); others believed Him to be the Messiah (vv. 31, 40); and still others (such as the Sadducees and the Pharisees) considered Him to be a threat (vv. 32, 45–52). The Jews who sought to kill Him (v. 1) are the religious leaders and not the people in general.
The Feast of Tabernacles (Heb. succoth) is an eight-day autumn harvest festival commemorating the time when Israel wandered in the wilderness of Sinai and the people lived in tents, or tabernacles. Along with Passover and Pentecost, this was one of the three most important festivals of the ancient Jews; it included numerous sacrifices and celebrations (Lv 23:33–43). In later times, the final day of this feast also included drawing water from the pool of Siloam to be mixed with wine and poured at the foot of the altar, both as a purification and in remembrance of the water flowing from the rock that Moses struck (Ex 17:1–7). It further included the lighting of great lamps in the outer court of the temple (see notes for vv. 37–39; 8:12; see also 2Mc 10:5–9).
7:10  Not openly means not with a grand, public entrance as on Palm Sunday (12:12–16).
The simple desire to know and follow God's will is the key to understanding it. Spiritual blindness comes from unwillingness to know God or to recognize His authority.

St. John Chrysostom paraphrases Christ in this way: “Rid yourselves of wickedness: the anger, the envy, and the hatred which have arisen in your hearts, without provocation, against Me. Then you will have no difficulty in realizing that My words are actually those of God. As it is, these passions darken your understanding and distort sound judgment. If you remove these passions, you will no longer be afflicted in this way.”
We know where this Man is from: The crowds are mistaken, both in an earthly sense and in a divine sense. Humanly speaking, they think of Jesus as being from Nazareth of Galilee; they are not aware that He was actually born in Bethlehem (v. 42; see Lk 2:1–7). Beyond this, they cannot comprehend that He has come from the Father in Heaven, eternally begotten before all ages, and thus His divine “origin” remains unknown to them as well.
His hour is the time of His suffering and death. Christ is the Lord over time, an authority possessed by God alone. He comes to His Cross of His own free will and in His time, and not according to the plots of men (see 8:20; 10:39).
7:33-34  This statement refers to the Lord's death, Resurrection, and Ascension into heaven.
Among the Greeks means among the Gentiles. This unwitting prophecy points to the time after His Ascension when Christ's name will be preached among the Gentiles by the apostles.
The last day, that great day of the feast was the eighth day of the Feast of Tabernacles. The ceremony of the drawing of water (see note for v. 2) provides the context for the Lord's words, “If anyone thirsts, let him come to Me and drink.” The living water (v. 38) is the gift of the Holy Spirit (v. 39) and the new life that accompanies this gift.
The Prophet refers to the expected Messiah, the Savior Moses foretold would come (Dt 18:15–19).
Bethlehem was the town from which the Christ was expected to come (Mic 5:2; see note for v. 27).
The chief priests had sent officers of the temple to arrest Jesus in the middle of the Feast (v. 32). By the time the last day had arrived (v. 37), no arrest had been made, because these officers had been converted by the Lord's teaching. The Pharisees and the scribes who had “witnessed the miracles and read the Scriptures derived no benefit” from either. These officers, on the other hand, even though they could claim none of this learning, were “captivated by a single sermon.” When the mind is open, “there is no need for long speeches. Truth is like that” (JohnChr).
Nicodemus had spoken with Jesus (3:1–21) and had increased in faith (see note for 3:1, 2). Yet his defense of Christ was still based on our law and was not yet a public profession of faith (see 19:38, 39). According to the law, Jesus must be given a hearing before He can be judged (Ex 23:1; Dt 1:15–17).

No prophet has arisen out of Galilee: The Pharisees show their blind hatred and their ignorance of the Scriptures, for the prophet Jonah came from Galilee, from the town of Gath Hepher, which was only three miles from Nazareth (4Kg 14:25).
This story of the woman caught in adultery is not found in several ancient manuscripts, nor is it covered in the commentaries of St. John Chrysostom and certain other Fathers. However, it is still sealed by the Church as inspired, authentic, canonical Scripture, and it bears the same authority as all other Scripture. It is read on one of the two days when St. Mary of Egypt, a reformed prostitute, is commemorated.
The law dictated the death penalty for adulterers (Lv 20:10). This ordinance was not observed to the letter in the days of Jesus; the Pharisees brought this particular woman because they saw an opportunity to test Him. If Christ objected to the punishment, He could be accused of opposing the Law; if He upheld the punishment, then He could be accused of showing no mercy to sinners.

This is the only place in the NT where our Lord wrote something. Several theories exist as to what He wrote. Some say He wrote out the Ten Commandments, which all the accusers had violated at least once. Others say He wrote the names of the accusers who had themselves committed adultery.
Christ's answer confounds the Pharisees, for He upholds a great principle of the Law—that the wages of sin is death (Gn 2:17; Rom 6:23)—without neglecting its greater aspect of mercy (Dt 13:17; Ps 116:2–117:4; Hos 6:6). This mercy is offered freely to all repentant sinners. In order for us to receive this gift, we must in turn flee from sin (v. 11).
8:12  I am the light of the world: Jesus spoke these words in the context of the great lamps being lit at the conclusion of the Feast of Tabernacles (see note at 7:2). Thus He declares Himself to be the fulfillment and the divine object of all celebrations of light. In the Scriptures, God the Father Himself is light (1:4–9; 1Jn 1:5), an attribute He bestows on His followers (Mt 5:14; Php 2:15). Our Lord confirms His claim by performing the great sign of opening the eyes of a man born blind (9:1–7; see especially 9:5).
Because the Son and the Father share the same divine nature, one cannot be known apart from the other (14:7–11).
8:21 Going away refers to Jesus' death, Resurrection, and Ascension into heaven.
Lift up has the double meaning of being nailed to the Cross and of being exalted by His Father upon the completion of His work.
8:31  Jesus expects all who follow Him to be disciples, that is, learners. Abiding in His word is the responsibility of all believers, not only of the clergy or of an elite class of zealots.
The truth refers both to the virtue of truth and, more importantly, to Christ Himself (14:6). Being free refers to the freedom from darkness, confusion, and lies, as well as the freedom from the bondage of sin and death.
To be a child of Abraham, it is not enough to be simply related by blood; rather, Abraham's true children share his faith and virtue (Lk 3:8). St. John Chrysostom teaches that our Lord wanted to detach the Jews from racial pride and to teach them no longer to place their hope of salvation in being of the race of Abraham's children by nature, but to come to faith by their own free will. Their idea that being a descendant of Abraham was enough for salvation was the very thing that prevented them from coming to Christ.
Proceeded refers not to the Son coming eternally from the Father, but to Christ being sent from the Father to His Incarnation on earth.
Just as being a child of Abraham is based on sharing his attributes (see note for vv. 37–40), likewise, those who reject Christ share the same attributes as the devil (in particular, a hatred for truth), and thus are rightly called the devil's children.
Unable to defeat Christ through logic or truth, these enemies resort to personal insult (see also 9:34).
8:58 I AM (Gr. ego eimi) is the divine Name of God in the OT, first revealed to Moses at the burning bush (Ex 3:13–15). To the Jews, this was a direct, explicit, and unmistakable claim to perfect equality with God, as evidenced by their reaction (v. 59; see also Mk 14:62–64). John places special emphasis on the use of this Name to clearly reveal Christ as God. This divine claim illuminates Christ's authority even over death (v. 52), a power belonging only to God the Father.
9:1-38  This healing is the sixth sign in John's Gospel (see note on 2:1–11). Of all the miracle stories in the Bible, this is the only one in which the person was blind from birth (see v. 32). The blind man is symbolic of all humanity: all need illumination by Christ, the Light of the world. This sign is an illustration of baptism, which is also called “holy illumination.” As Pascha (Easter) is the traditional day to receive catechumens into the Church, the lessons following Pascha reflect a baptismal theology. Thus, this passage is read on the sixth Sunday of Pascha.
The Savior rejects the assumption (common in the ancient world) that all troubles and maladies are necessarily the consequence of personal sin or even the sins of one's parents (see Ex 20:5; Dt 5:9; contrast Ezek 18:19–21). Though suffering can be the direct result of personal sin, this is certainly not always the case (see note at 5:14). In this instance, the man's blindness provided the occasion for the works of God to be revealed; it was not related directly to the man's personal sins.
The work that people do consists of faith (6:29), good deeds (5:29), and repentance (12:40). The night that comes refers both to the time after a person's death and to the age to come, when there is no longer an opportunity to express faith. On that day there will not be faith, but all will submit, whether willingly or unwillingly (JohnChr).
The unprecedented healing of the man born blind confirms Christ's claim that He is the light of the world (see 8:12 and note).
St. Irenaeus sees in this mixture of clay and saliva a type of the creation of humanity from the earth (Gn 2:7). Christ reveals His divinity by restoring part of creation using the same material with which He created humanity in the beginning.
The pool of Siloam was on the outskirts of Jerusalem, a considerable distance from the temple. From this pool water was taken for the rites connected with the Feast of Tabernacles (see note at 7:2). Siloam, translated, Sent, symbolizes Christ, the One sent by the Father (5:36; 20:21). Just as the healing of the blind man confirmed Christ’s claim to be the light of the world (8:12), so also, His making use of the pool of Siloam confirms that He is the true purification of the temple and those who worship in it.
9:16 Just as the Pharisees had ignored the healing of the paralytic and focused only on the perceived violation of the Sabbath (5:10–16), here many of them cannot see the glory of God through their own prejudices.
With Jesus not present, the Pharisees call Him a sinner, but earlier when He asked them face-to-face, “Which of you convicts Me of sin?” (8:46), they evaded the question.

Give God the glory! was an oath formula used before giving testimony. Nevertheless, the healed man will indeed give God glory (v. 38). The more he is pressed, the more fervent his faith becomes, while the Pharisees lapse into deeper darkness.
This healed man becomes a model of Christian witness. Many people do not bear witness to Christ because they fear they will be asked questions they cannot answer. This man's answer to people much more educated than he provides the solution: he admits what he does not know, but follows up with what he does know. The formula, "That I don't know, but what I do know is this," is foundational to witnessing one's faith to others.
Having opened the blind man's eyes, the Lord also opens his heart and illumines his spirit. The man moves from knowing almost nothing about Christ (v. 25), through the conclusion that Jesus could not possibly be a sinner (v. 31), through confessing that Jesus must be from God (v. 33), to finally seeing Him as the divine Son of God and worshiping Him (v. 38). The Pharisees again cannot refute this man's logic nor the truth of what he reveals, and thus they resort to personal insult (v. 34; see 8:48).
The unprecedented nature of opening the eyes of one who was born blind is a confirmation of Christ's divinity. This was one of the signs of the coming Messiah (Is 35:5; 42:7) and a prerogative belonging solely to God (Ps 145:8).
9:39-41  Our Lord's coming brought judgment to the world, not because He came to judge (12:47, 48), but because of man's accountability to Him. Those who see and hear Him but do not believe are judged by their own faithlessness.
Jesus’ conversation with the Pharisees continues, as there is no break between 9:41 and 10:1. All of this is taking place at the conclusion of the Feast of Tabernacles (see note at 7:1). Christ is contrasting their leadership with His own. They have failed as pastors of God's people (“pastor” comes from the Latin word for “shepherd”). Their leadership has been marked by deceit and pride and has lacked compassion. Christ, on the other hand, fulfills all virtue.

According to St. John Chrysostom, the door is God's Word, meaning both the Scriptures and our Lord Himself (vv. 7, 9), since the Scriptures reveal God the Word. The one who tries to lead in a way that is neither in Christ nor according to the teaching of the Scriptures is a thief and a robber. Rather than using this door so all can see His works openly, these false shepherds use underhanded means to control, steal, and manipulate people, ultimately destroying their souls (v. 10). In contrast, those pastors who lead according to Christ will find eternal life (v. 9).
As Christ has intimate knowledge of every person, so also true pastors in the Church strive to know their people by name, that is, personally. These pastors endeavor to understand each person's situation and needs, from the greatest to the least, possessing Christlike compassion for each one (Heb 4:15). In return, the people will respond to a true leader, trusting he is a follower of Christ. “Where the bishop is present, there the people shall gather” (IgnAnt). Indeed, the response of the faithful can be a better indicator of who is a true shepherd than the claims of leaders (7:47–49).
The phrase all who ever came before Me does not refer to Moses or genuine prophets, but to people claiming to be the Messiah both before and after Christ, such as Judas of Galilee and Theudas (Acts 5:36, 37).
The ultimate thief is Satan, who spreads lies and heresies among the people of God, luring away both leaders and people. Life means living in God's grace here on earth, while the more abundant life indicates the Kingdom to come.
Christ reveals Himself as the good shepherd: (1) He enters by the door (v. 2), that is, He fulfills the Scriptures concerning Himself; (2) He knows and is known by the Father (v. 15); (3) He knows His people personally, and therefore is known by them (vv. 3, 14); and (4) He gives His life for the sake of His people (v. 11), which is a direct prophecy of His coming Passion.
Other sheep are the Gentiles, who will be brought into the one flock with the Jews under the one shepherd. Thus, for example, the Church transcends ethnic and racial lines. It has been the Orthodox teaching from the beginning that there be one bishop serving a city (Canon 8 of I Nicea), a principle affirmed in every generation. Writing in the early second century to a Church that held separate liturgies for Jewish and Gentile Christians, St. Ignatius taught, “Be careful to observe a single Eucharist, for there is one Flesh of our Lord Jesus Christ, and one cup of His Blood that makes us one, and one altar, just as there is one bishop. . . . This is in line with God's will.”
10:17-18
I lay down My life: The Lord is clear that His life-giving death will be voluntary. He does nothing apart from the will of His Father. As He laid down His life for us, we lay down our lives for Him and for the sake of others.
Those who respond in faith are not merely impressed by the signs, but perceive the holiness of His words.
The Feast of Dedication took place approximately three months after the Feast of Tabernacles (7:1–10:21) and was known as the “Festival of Lights” (also called Hanukkah). It commemorates the rededication of the temple in Jerusalem after the Seleucid King Epiphanes desecrated it in 167 BC (see 1Mc 1–4). At this festival, the leaders of Israel's past were commemorated, many of whom were themselves shepherds.
Both what Christ told them and the works He had done have already answered their question. Only the Messiah could open the eyes of the blind (see note 9:32) or perform these miracles that bear witness to Him. Likewise, only the Messiah could speak to the hearts of people as Christ had (7:46; 9:21).
10:26  As I said to you indicates these are the same Pharisees whom Christ addressed three months earlier (10:1–5).
Responding to their question (v. 24), Jesus reveals Himself to be fully God: One means one in nature or essence. He is God before all ages, and He remains God after the Incarnation and for all eternity. The plural verb are indicates two distinct Persons, while confirming a continuous unity. The Jews clearly recognize this claim of divinity (v. 33) and thus accuse Him of blasphemy.
10:34-36 You are gods: People who receive God's grace in faith will partake of His divine nature (2Pt 1:4) and can rightly be called gods (see article “Deification” at 2 Peter). Christ is effectively saying, “If those who have received this honor by grace are not guilty for calling themselves gods, how can He who has this by nature deserve to be rebuked?” (JohnChr).
Because Christ is going to His Passion voluntarily and according to His own will (vv. 17, 18), His accusers cannot arrest Him until He is ready (7:30; 8:20; see Lk 4:28–30).
The resurrection of Lazarus is the seventh sign in John's Gospel (see note 2:1–11), the sign that sealed the Jewish authorities' decision to put Jesus to death (vv. 47–50). This event is celebrated liturgically on Lazarus Saturday, the day before Palm Sunday.

Bethany is on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, about two miles from Jerusalem (v. 18). Lazarus is the same name as “Eleazar” (lit. “God helps”).
This message is sent back to Mary and Martha to strengthen them so that when Lazarus dies, they may take confidence in Christ's words. The Son of God being glorified must not be understood to be the cause of Lazarus dying; instead, this indicates Christ will be glorified as a result of his death (which occurred from a natural illness) and his being raised from the dead.
The Lord delays in order for Lazarus to be dead long enough that the corruption of his body could set in (v. 39). Thus, no one could doubt the miracle, and the might of the Lord would be clearly seen by all.
Thomas's statement is an unwitting prophecy of his own future martyrdom. It also illustrates the path that all believers must take—that we die daily to the world for the sake of following Christ (Lk 9:23, 24).
There existed a rabbinical opinion that the soul lingered about the body for three days, but after four days resuscitation would be impossible.
Mourning began on the day of a person's death. Weeping and wailing lasted three days; lamentation lasted one week; and general mourning lasted 30 days.
Not unlike the incident of Lk 10:38–42, the two sisters react differently to Christ’s arrival. Martha, being inclined to active service, rushes out to meet Jesus, while Mary remains in mourning until called by Christ (vv. 28, 29). Sitting was the traditional posture when mourning and receiving other mourners (Job 2:8, 13; Ezk 8:14).
While Martha possesses great faith, her statements indicate a lack of understanding about Christ. In saying, “if You had been here, my brother would not have died,” Martha reveals she does not fully see that Christ is God, thinking He needed to be present to effect healings (contrast 5:46–54). By saying, “whatever you ask of God, God will give You,” she shows her lack of understanding that Christ possesses full divine authority to act as He wills.
I am the resurrection and the life: To correct Martha's misunderstanding (see note above), Christ declares His divine authority to raise the dead at the last day (v. 24) as well as here in this world. Such is the power of these words that Martha is immediately led to her great confession of faith (v. 27). Do you believe this? is a question directed not only to Martha, but to all of us.
Mary approaches Christ with the identical words Martha used (v. 21). While Jesus engaged Martha with words, here He engages Mary with deeds—the raising of her brother from the dead (vv. 38–44).
John emphasizes that Jesus wept and groaned in spirit (vv. 33, 38) to show He had fully taken on human nature and was subject to grief as any man would be. Weeping is the natural response to the tragedy of death. At Compline of Lazarus Saturday, we sing, “Shedding tears by Your own choice, You have given us proof of Your heartfelt love.”
Though Martha's faith had increased (vv. 23–27), she still understood neither Christ's will nor His power. The spices and oils used to anoint a dead body would only hold the stench of decomposition at bay for a short time (see note at 11:6). Many icons of the raising of Lazarus show bystanders covering their noses, illustrating both the reality of his corrupted flesh and the fact that many did not believe Christ could raise the dead.
To show His divine will was one with the Father's, and that His human will was freely subject in every way to the Father's, Christ prays aloud for the sake of the people.
See 5:28, 29. Christ calls Lazarus forth, not in the name of the Father, but by His own authority. This shows the people that while Christ came from the Father, He fully possesses divine authority in Himself.
That Lazarus came out bound in his graveclothes is seen by many Fathers as an indication that he will need them again—that his resurrection continues an earthly life which will again end in death. The Savior's graveclothes, by contrast, would be left in the tomb (20:5–7). Unlike Lazarus's, Christ's Resurrection transfigures human nature; He will never die again.

This sign not only prepared the disciples to believe in Christ's Resurrection, but in the words of the hymn for the day, it also “confirmed the universal resurrection,” proving Christ has the power to fulfill the promise given to Ezekiel that all the dead will one day rise (Ezk 37:1–13).
Caiaphas, being high priest, is given the authority to speak prophetically. The failings and even wickedness of the officeholder do not diminish the grace of the office itself. Here, Caiaphas means only that the death of Christ will spare the Jews from Roman intervention. God's meaning, however, is that all people will be saved through the death of the Son.
Because Jesus is the Lamb of God (1:29), the connection between the Passover, when lambs were slaughtered to save the Jews from death (Ex 12:1–13), and the death of Jesus, which saves mankind from sin and death, is continually emphasized.
This Passover is the third mentioned in John (see 2:13; 6:4) and is the setting for the last week of Christ's earthly ministry, which is narrated in careful detail. Jesus had already been glorified through His signs and words; it remained for Him to be glorified through His death and Resurrection (see note at 1:14).
The other disciples said the same thing Judas said (v. 5), but with a very different motive (see Mt 26:6–13 and note). Judas spoke from greed, while the others spoke from the virtue of charity. That Jesus put a thief in charge of the money shows that by every means He attempted to save Judas: He fulfilled Judas' lust for money; He allowed Judas to exercise apostolic authority (6:11; see also Mk 6:7); He washed Judas' feet with the other disciples (13:5); and He allowed him to partake at the table of the Mystical Supper (13:26). Yet Judas could never overcome his greed (see note at Mt 26:14–16).
12:12-18 The Triumphal Entry into Jerusalem: See Mt 21:1–11 and accompanying notes.
These Greeks were Gentiles who believed in the God of Abraham, having come to participate in the Passover feast. That they were still called Greeks shows they were not yet full proselytes (converts). Since Jesus had taught His disciples not to go to the Gentiles (Mt 10:5; 15:24), the disciples approach Him before bringing these inquirers. Glorified (v. 23) refers to the Savior's death on the Cross. Christ's obscure response indicates two things: (1) the answer these Greeks are seeking will not be found in words, but in the Cross; and (2) the Cross will be the event that opens all manner of grace to the Gentiles.
12:24 The image of the grain of wheat dying in order to bear fruit signifies that Christ's death will give life to the world. In many Orthodox churches, boiled wheat that is sweetened and spiced is served at memorial services for the departed faithful to affirm God's promise that those who have died in Christ will rise again to life.
12:28 The Father's name is an extension of His Person. The Son's death completes the purpose of the Father and shows His love for all, thus glorifying Him. Christ is in effect saying, “Father, lead Me to the Cross.” This is the Lord's divine response to the human prompting to avoid the Cross (v. 27). The Father's response refers to the signs already performed by Christ and to the death and Resurrection to come.
12:29 Though the Father spoke clearly, some people heard indistinct sounds like thunder because they lacked faith. Those with a little faith heard the words but did not know the source, thinking it was an angel. The disciples knew the Father Himself had spoken (see v. 30).
12:31-33 Lifted up (v. 32) is a reference to Christ being hung on the Cross (see also 3:14, 15; 8:28). This death will bring salvation to all peoples, while at the same time rendering judgment on the faithless and destroying once for all the power of Satan, the ruler of this world.
The light refers to Christ (1:4–9; 8:12). His teaching here has several facets of meaning. First, He will be completing His public ministry shortly. Further, our lives are very limited; we have but a short time to repent and believe in Christ before death. Finally, the second coming of Christ is but a little while when compared to eternity.
According to St. John Chrysostom, Isaiah's prophecy does not mean God causes spiritual blindness in people who would otherwise have been faithful. This is a figure of speech common to Scripture revealing God as giving people up to their own devices (as in Rom 1:24, 26). What is meant by He has blinded is that God has permitted their self-chosen blindness (compare Ex 8:15, 32 with Ex 10:20, 27). They did not become blind because God spoke through Isaiah, but rather Isaiah spoke because he foresaw their blindness.
Isaiah saw His [Christ's] glory in about 700 BC (Isa 6:1) and spoke of Him in many places throughout his lengthy prophecy.
These rulers, according to St. John Chrysostom, are in reality the worst of slaves in that they are enslaved by the opinions of men. This keeps them from leading as God would have them lead.
Christ does not judge with favoritism or partiality. He has spoken the words of life, words of love, forgiveness, repentance, virtue, and mercy. His words will be the unbending standard by which all people are judged on the last day.
John's account of our Lord's discourses during the Last Supper is contained in chs. 13–17. The feast of Passover commemorated God's passing over the Israelites when He killed the firstborn of the Egyptians (Ex 12). It is also linked with Israel's “crossing over” the Red Sea (Ex 14) from slavery to freedom. In Christ, we escape death and pass over from this world, which is enslaved to sin, and into the Kingdom of God. When Jesus had eaten the Passover supper with His disciples (v. 2), He made a new covenant in which eternal life is granted. His hour: the time of Christ's death, Resurrection, and Ascension into heaven.
Supper: This account does not directly mention the Eucharist (which is clearly reflected in 6:51–59). John omits the specifics of both the Eucharist and our Lord's Baptism (see 1:19–36; 3:1–36), accounts with which his hearers would have been familiar by the time John wrote his Gospel (about AD 90). Instead, he focuses on the significance of these events. Our Lord's discourses and actions at the Last Supper reveal the mystery of His Incarnation, service, and mission to and in the world. He emphasizes in turn the disciples' own mission to the world.

There are two main ways the devil influences the human heart: (1) through ideas or thoughts; and (2) through conceptual images, as taught in 2Co 10:5. Satan influenced Judas in both areas. Christians are called to reject the thoughts and images suggested by the devil the moment they occur. Judas cooperated with the devil's will, not only by entertaining these thoughts, but then by carrying them out. Far from being a helpless victim, Judas was the devil's willing co-conspirator.
The foot-washing is an act of love and humility. It was a common expression of hospitality in the ancient Middle East, but was normally done by slaves or house-servants. Peter's response (vv. 6, 8) shows his shock at seeing the Master performing the duties of a slave.
If I do not wash you, you have no part with Me (v. 8) shows the cleansing power of Christ's death and Resurrection, for only by participating in Christ's death can we be raised with Him (Rom 6:3–11).

He who is bathed needs only to wash his feet (v. 10): This foot-washing also serves as an image of the sacrament of confession. Those who have completely bathed, that is, have been baptized, have no need ever to be baptized again, for baptism is indelible. The sins the believer assumes during his life must still be washed through ongoing repentance, just as the feet of a person returning from the public bath must be washed before entering the house. As Christians, we are bathed by Christ in baptism and have periodic washings in the sacrament of confession.
The command to wash one another's feet (v. 14) symbolizes that humble service is to be shown to all people. If Christ, who is Lord of all, humbly served not only His servants but even the traitor among them, then we must certainly do the same not only to our fellow servants, but also to our enemies. Within the Church, the clergy are seen first and foremost as servants of their flocks. To this day, the bishops of the Church (and in some places the presbyters) wash the feet of the faithful on Holy Thursday.
13:26-30 In the upper room, all was light, because Christ was present (12:46). Judas' exit from the Last Supper at night (v. 30) symbolizes his entrance into all-encompassing spiritual darkness (3:19).
After Judas had gone out, our Lord presents the final teachings of His earthly ministry (often called the “Farewell Discourse”) and offers His High Priestly Prayer (ch. 17). Calling His death “glorification” (vv. 31–33), Christ shows that He does not fear death and that He accepts it willingly. The Father and the Son are glorified through the death of Christ because His death destroys all powers of darkness.
Many religions and philosophies teach people to love one another. What makes this commandment new is the measure required of our love: we must love as Christ has loved us, laying down His life not only for His friends, but even for His enemies.
13:36 This is a prophecy of the martyrdom of Simon Peter, which he would suffer for the sake of Christ by being crucified upside down in Rome in about AD 67 (see 21:18, 19).
14:2 Many mansions is a word-picture of an abundance of living accommodations around a central courtyard. Mansions also speaks of the multitude of blessings that await those who enter the Kingdom of God.
The way, the truth, and the life: The way we reach the Father is forever established in the Person and work of the Son. The Son is the truth because He is the unique revelation of the Father. Christ is the life who became Man so we might have life, and as He is our life, not even death can hinder us from coming to Him. Only in Christ can one come to know the Father, for only in Christ is the way of all truth and all life found.
14:9  He who has seen Me has seen the Father: Our response to Christ determines our relationship with the Father. If we reject Christ then we will never find the Father; but if we believe in Christ and follow Him, then we ourselves will become “children of God,” living eternally in the love of the Father (1:12).
While human beings are made in God's image (Gn 1:26), the Incarnate Son is Himself the exact image of the Father (Col 1:15). Christ did not say, “I am the Father,” for He is not. Rather, He declares that He and the Father are one in essence and undivided in nature while being distinct Persons in the Godhead.
The greater works indicate that Christ's working through mere humans after Pentecost is greater than His performing signs and wonders directly. These works, attested to in the Book of Acts, include spreading the gospel throughout the world, miraculous healings, and raising the dead.
To pray in Christ's name does not simply mean to attach the phrase “in Jesus' name we pray” to the end of prayers. Rather, to pray in His name means to pray according to His will. Just as an emissary of a king can only be said to be speaking in the king's name if he says what the king would want him to say, so also we can only be said to be praying in the name of Christ when we pray according to what He wants. The purpose here is not to get God to do our will, but for us to learn to pray properly, according to God's will (Mt 6:10).
14:16 Helper (Gr. parakletos) refers to the Holy Spirit. This title also means “Comforter,” “Counselor,” and “Advocate.”
The Spirit of truth is in each believer, and we are called to know Him. The Holy Spirit prays in us and for us when we do not know how to pray, enabling us to pray in Christ's name (14:13, 14; Rom 8:26) and giving us words of witness when we speak the gospel (Mk 13:11).
14:19 The brief separation of Jesus from the disciples at His death will lead to a deeper mystical union after the Resurrection and to the gift of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost.
14:20  That day refers to Pentecost, for as St. John Chrysostom notes, it is “the power of the Holy Spirit that taught them all things.”
Peace was the customary Jewish word of both greeting and farewell. Perfect peace is brought by Christ, who reconciles humanity to God (Eph 2:14). Peace is part of the traditional greeting of Christians to each other (Rom 1:7; 1Co 1:3), and the greeting “Peace be to all” is offered many times during the liturgical services of the Church.
My Father is greater than I does not mean greater in nature or essence, for the Father and the Son share one divine nature. Nor does it mean the Son is created, for the Son is begotten from all eternity. Rather, it means that the Father, as the Fountainhead of the Trinity, is the eternal cause of the Son.
14:29 Before it comes refers to our Lord's Passion. Telling these events beforehand strengthened the disciples' faith.
The ruler of this world is the devil, who dominates the realm of those who do not love Christ or keep His commandments. Jesus said the devil has nothing in Me because there can be no compromise between Christ or His followers and the devil. Jesus became Man, but was never stained with sin.
14:31  Arise, let us go from here: Christ takes His disciples to another room or location to complete His discourse in order to gain their undivided attention. According to St. John Chrysostom, their current location was susceptible to intrusions, and the disciples were likely to be distracted from fear.
The vine is a symbol of Israel (Is 5:1–7; Jer 2:21). In contrast to disobedient and unfruitful Israel, our Lord calls Himself the true vine, which together with the branches constitutes a new and fruitful people of God: the Church. At the Divine Liturgy, the bishop prays that the Lord will visit and confirm the vineyard, the local body of Christ, which He planted with His own right hand (Ps 79:15, 16).

To abide in this vine is to abide in Christ and His Church. The figure of the vine and the branches shows (1) our union with Christ is intimate and real; (2) life flows from the vine to the branches—abiding in Christ is dynamic and vitalizing; and (3) the fruit we bear is both good works and mission (v. 16; 17:18).
One cannot love God and disobey His commandments. To love God is to obey Him (14:15).
Friendship is higher than servanthood. Servants obey their masters out of fear or a sense of duty; friends obey out of love and an internal desire to do what is good and right. Abraham was called a “friend of God” (Jam 2:23) because he obeyed God out of the belief of his heart. The disciples, and indeed all the saints, are honored as friends of Christ because they freely obey His commandments out of love. Those who have this spirit of loving obedience are open to receive and understand the revelations of the Father.
15:18-25  The term world is used in several distinct ways in Scripture. In some cases, it refers to all that is glorious, beautiful, and redeemable in God’s creation (3:16). Other times, it refers to that which is finite in contrast to that which is eternal (11:9; 18:36). In still other instances, as here, it indicates all that is in rebellion against God (see also 8:23).

The rebellion of the world against God reveals several things: (1) While union with Christ brings love, truth, and peace, it also brings persecution, because the world hates love and truth (v. 19). (2) The world hated Christ; therefore, it will hate all who try to be Christlike (v. 20). (3) The world hates Christ because it neither knows nor desires to know the Father (vv. 21–24). (4) Hatred for Jesus Christ is irrational and unreasonable, for Christ brings love and mercy; thus, Christ is hated without a cause (v. 25).
With respect to God's working salvation in the world, the Son sends the Holy Spirit from the Father. With respect to the divine nature, the Holy Spirit eternally proceeds from the Father alone. In other words, the Holy Spirit receives His eternal existence only from the Father. In conformity with Christ's words, the Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed confesses belief “in the Holy Spirit, the Lord, the giver of life, who proceeds from the Father.” While the Son is begotten of the Father alone, the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father alone; the source, the Fountainhead, of both Persons is the Father.
Sorrow here means “extreme grief leading to despondency or despair,” which is a sinful passion. “Great is the tyranny of despondency” (JohnChr). This sin is constantly referred to in the writings of the Desert Fathers. When the world persecutes the believer or when God seems to be absent, Christians are called to fight against this despondency, taking comfort from the presence of the Holy Spirit (vv. 5–15).
Through the illumination brought by the Holy Spirit, the world will be convicted, that is, proven wrong. It will be convicted concerning (1) its sin, the ultimate of which is denying Jesus Christ; (2) righteousness (v. 10), which it failed to accept from Christ with faith and thanksgiving; and (3) judgment (v. 11), for all who reject Christ will receive the same penalty that Satan, the ruler of this world, has already received (see Mt 25:41).
16:13 Because the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of truth, and because this Spirit abides in the Church, the Church is the guardian of all truth.
16:16 The first little while refers to Christ's arrest, death, and burial. The second is His time in the tomb until His Resurrection.
No longer remembers does not imply the faithful are to forget the Passion and Cross of Christ, any more than a woman “forgets” labor. Rather, we now see these sufferings in light of the victory of the Resurrection, and this victory transfigures our perception of sufferings. Christ's victory allows us to rejoice in anguish because of the infinitely greater good that comes from it (Rom 5:3–5; Php 3:10).
The time when Christ would speak plainly about the Father was during the 40 days following the Resurrection (Acts 1:3).
We know prayer is offered in the name of God the Father, for Christ taught us to pray that way (Mt 6:9), and He Himself prayed to the Father (11:41; 12:28; 17:1). In Christ, we have direct access to the Father, and thus we pray in the name of the Son as well (see note at 14:13, 14). After Pentecost, we learn the Holy Spirit Himself “makes intercession for us” (Rom 8:26), and we are instructed to pray always “in the Spirit” (Eph 6:18). Therefore, as Orthodox Christians, we pray continually and with confidence to all three Persons of the Trinity, “in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit.”
Christ's prayer is often called the High Priestly Prayer, as it contains the basic elements of prayer a priest offers to God when a sacrifice is about to be made: glorification (vv. 3–5, 25), remembrance of God's works (vv. 2, 6–8, 22, 23), intercession on behalf of others (vv. 9, 11, 15, 20, 21, 24), and a declaration of the offering itself (vv. 1, 5).

The passage that includes vv. 1–13 is read on the seventh Sunday of Pascha (Easter), a day remembering the Fathers of the First Ecumenical Council (Nicea I) in AD 325. At this council the heresy of Arianism was condemned. This heresy taught that the Son of God was created by the Father and that there was a time when the Son of God did not exist. We find our Lord's words here bearing witness to His divinity and to His filial relationship with the Father. This testimony is sufficient in itself to dismiss Arianism.

The hour has come signifies Christ is Lord over time. “He voluntarily willed to ascend the Cross in the flesh” (hymn of Orthodoxy Sunday). Glorify refers to the redemption of all creation that will be accomplished through the Cross and Resurrection—the purpose for which Christ was sent into the world. In this redemption, the Father and the Son are glorified. This is why the Cross, which is a sign of death, is glorified in the Church as “life-giving” and the “weapon of peace.”
The knowledge of the only true God is far more than intellectual understanding. It is participation in His divine life and in communion with Him. Thus, eternal life is an ongoing, loving knowledge of God in Christ and the Holy Spirit.
Christ's work can never be separated from who He is. This verse is a statement each believer can make at the end of life, no matter how long or short that life may be.
The men whom You have given Me are the apostles. They are the ones through whom God's word comes to us. This handing down of God's word to successive generations is called apostolic tradition.

Isaiah prophesied that in the days of the Messiah, the knowledge of the Name of God would be revealed (Is 52:6). Your name: In the OT times, the phrase “the Name” was reverently used as a substitute for God's actual Name “Yahweh,” which was too sacred to pronounce. The fuller revelation of the Name was given to those who believe in Christ, for Christ manifested the Name not only by declaring the Father, but by being the very presence of God and sharing the Name with Him.
Christ first prayed for Himself (vv. 1–5) and secondly for them, the apostles (vv. 6–19). Only then does He pray for those whom You have given Me—all who will come to believe in Him (vv. 20–26). Here the world is the portion of humanity in rebellion against God, those who prefer darkness to His light.
Holy Father is echoed in the eucharistic prayer of Didache 10:2: “We give you thanks, Holy Father, for Your holy name which You have made to dwell in our hearts.”
The son of perdition ("destruction") is Judas Iscariot (6:70, 71). OT prophecy alludes to Judas (Ps 40:10; 108:2–13; Zec 11:12, 13), and Judas becomes a type for all who will fall away in the last days (see 2Th 2:3, where “son of perdition” refers to the Antichrist).
Inasmuch as Christ is from heaven, those who are joined to Him become like Him. Thus, all believers attract the world's hatred. The second-century Letter to Diognetus (6:3) states, “Christians dwell in the world but do not belong to the world.” Reborn in Christ, Christians have their citizenship in the Kingdom of God (3:1–5), yet their vocation is in the world, where they are protected by God against the evil one.
Sanctify: To consecrate, make holy, separate, set apart from the world, and bring into the sphere of the sacred for God's use. St. John Chrysostom interprets this verse as saying, “Make them holy through the gift of the Spirit and by correct doctrine.”
Those who will believe: The Church in every generation participates in the life and glory of the Trinity. Christians enjoy two kinds of unity: with God and with one another, the latter being rooted in the former.
The ultimate goal of Christ's prayer, and indeed of life itself, is for the love of the Father to dwell in each person.
This garden was at the Mount of Olives (Mk 14:26).
18:2 That Christ intentionally came to the place known to His betrayer Judas, one of His disciples, shows He was going to His Passion willingly and voluntarily. It reveals Christ went to find Judas rather than Judas finding Christ.
That Jesus spoke first without waiting for them shows that in every step toward His arrest, He is Lord and in control (see vv. 8, 35).
18:5 That Judas . . . stood with them shows his allegiance to the priests and Pharisees (v. 3).
I am He is literally “I AM” (Gr. ego eimi), the divine Name (see note at 8:58). The power of this Name drives all His accusers to the ground. Even so, they do not repent.
Notice Jesus is giving commands at His own arrest, and they are being obeyed, showing He is Lord of His own Passion (see vv. 4, 35). The obedience of Christ's captors is particularly striking in that Peter was not arrested when he attacked the high priest's servant with a sword (v. 10). The command to let the disciples go their way also indicates His mercy toward them, as they were not yet strong enough to face martyrdom. God does not allow a burden beyond a person's spiritual strength (1Co 10:13).
Annas was the previous high priest and remained a force of power behind the religious establishment (see note at Lk 3:2). Caiaphas was high priest the year of Jesus' Crucifixion, holding the office from AD 18–36.
This other disciple is John, the author of this Gospel. It was a common practice for an author to conceal his name in the details of his story (see 13:23; compare Mk 14:51, 52; Lk 24:13, 18).
18:17  A girl being the first to test Peter is an icon of the temptation of Adam by Eve (Gn 3:6). This fallen state is overcome in Christ, when a woman is the first to hear, believe, and proclaim the Resurrection (20:1, 11–18).
The questioning of the high priest tries to uncover subversive activity that would not only violate the Law of Moses, but be reason enough to accuse Jesus of a political crime before Pilate. Note the two points of question put to Jesus concern His disciples and His doctrine, two essential components of Christ and His Church.
After his three denials, Peter will be restored through his three affirmations of love following the Resurrection (21:15–17).
St. John Chrysostom notes the irony that Christ's accusers did not fear being defiled by condemning an innocent Man to death, but would not set foot into a court of justice.
Since the chief priests of the Jews had no actual crime with which to make an accusation against Jesus (vv. 29, 30), Pilate refused to pass judgment. When the chief priests say, “It is not lawful for us to put anyone to death,” they are not referring to the Law of Moses, but to the laws of Roman occupation, for the Romans reserved the right to execute people. Thus, the chief priests relied on Pilate to sentence Jesus to death.
The Jewish law prescribed stoning as the usual means of execution. However, Christ had prophesied He would be killed by being lifted up on the Cross (3:14; 8:28; 12:32, 33), having foreknowledge that He would die, not at the hands of the Jews, but by the Roman method of crucifixion.
It is unheard of that the accused would have to name the charges against himself in any court, since the captors would be the ones to name the crime. That Pilate has to ask Jesus what the charges are shows that the chief priests could name no crime He might have committed (vv. 29, 30). And more importantly, it shows Jesus was Lord over the events of His death (see vv. 4, 8). For even the governor has to come to Him in order for the trial to proceed.
18:38-40 Though Pilate knows Christ to be innocent of any crime, he attempts to strike a compromise with the Jews by declaring Christ guilty, but freeing Him on account of Passover. Thus, the chief priests would have an official declaration of guilt and Christ would not be unjustly punished.
Having failed to reach a compromise that would have released Jesus without punishment (18:38–40), Pilate has Him scourged (v. 1) and mocked (vv. 2, 3; see note at Mt 27:27–31). Scourging was a severe punishment using a whip that had bits of bone or metal imbedded at the tips. Pilate does all this in hopes of moderating the wrath of the chief priests so he does not have to execute a Man he knows to be innocent (v. 4). Instead of subsiding, the rage of the chief priests increases, and they begin demanding Pilate crucify Him (v. 6).
The chief priests finally reveal that their true charge against Christ is blasphemy (v. 7), which was not a crime under Roman law. According to Jewish Law, however, it deserved death (Lv 24:16). Under Roman law, the Jewish leaders could not put anyone to death. Since Pilate alone had the power to enforce the death penalty, he had to be given a serious political accusation. Therefore the Jews changed their charge from blasphemy (v. 7) to treason (v. 12), saying Jesus speaks against Caesar.
19:10 Pilate again looks to Christ to give him a way to avoid having to condemn Him. Once more, this shows Jesus is the true Lord over the events taking place (see 18:4, 8, 35), a truth Jesus states with perfect clarity (v. 11).
Since Pilate had been given authority from above, he shares in the sin of condemning Jesus. However, as he had no previous knowledge of Christ, nor was He a Jew with the advantage of the Law and the prophets, Pilate's sin was less. While the one who delivered Christ can refer either to Judas (18:3) or to Caiaphas (18:28), it also refers to all mankind, for all of us sin against Christ, and thus all of us have participated in delivering Him to the Cross.
While the synoptic Gospels date the Crucifixion on the first day of Passover, John dates it on the Preparation Day, the day before Passover. Thus, in the synoptic tradition, the Last Supper is the Passover meal, while in John's Gospel, Jesus, as the Lamb of God (1:29), dies at the exact time the Passover lambs are being slain in the temple. While it is impossible to determine which is historically accurate, both traditions are theologically accurate—the Mystical Supper is the fulfillment of the Passover meal (the synoptic tradition), and Christ's death is the fulfillment of the Passover lambs being slain (John's tradition).
A title: What was intended as an accusation and a mockery became instead a triumphant symbol. Pilate's act is prophetic, showing the Jews had risen against their own King, and that the cross was the means by which Christ established His Kingdom.
The tunic is interpreted as representing Christ's body in two ways. That it is woven from the top shows Christ came down from heaven; that it is without seam is a sign of the unity of the Church.
We see here several important truths concerning Christ's mother: (1) In calling Mary “Woman” (v. 26), Jesus is using a term of dignity and affection. Contrary to certain modern usages, this is a sacred title in Scripture, an address conveying deep respect and distinction (2:4; 4:21; 8:10; 20:13; compare to Gn 2:23). (2) In saying to John, “Behold your mother!” (v. 27), our Lord symbolically establishes Mary's role as mother of all faithful disciples in every generation. (3) If Mary had other children, Jesus would not have placed her in the care of John, for her own children would have cared for her. Thus the apostolic teaching that Mary remained ever-virgin is confirmed by His action. (4) Christ also demonstrates we must “even to our last breath show every care for our parents” (JohnChr).
19:28 I thirst: The Son of God assumed our human need for water in order that we might be delivered from spiritual thirst (4:13, 14; 7:37, 38). The Scripture refers to Ps 21:16.
Finished is better translated “accomplished” or “fulfilled”—not meaning Christ’s life is ended, but showing His divine plan of salvation has now been completed. Bowing His head, He gave up His spirit: St. John Chrysostom writes that Christ did not die first, with His head falling as a result of death. Instead, as Lord even of His own death, Jesus first bowed His head, and then willingly gave up His spirit (see note at Lk 23:46).
The blood and water from Christ's body show the reality of the great sacraments. The water speaks of our baptism, which is participation in Christ's life-giving death (Rom 3:6–11). In Communion, we receive His life-giving Blood, “drinking from His very side” (JohnChr). It is literally the forgiveness of sins and the regeneration of mankind that poured out from our Lord's side.
Joseph of Arimathea was a hidden disciple, one who believed in Jesus but had made no public acknowledgement of faith. Nicodemus had come to Jesus by night (3:2) and later defended Him before the Pharisees (7:50–52). By burying Him, both show their devotion to our Lord publicly, in stark contrast to the fearful disciples, who had scattered. See also note at Lk 23:50–53.
The first day of the week is Sunday, or the Lord's Day. The remembrance of this day in Christian tradition does not replace the Sabbath, but completes it. Saturday still remains the Sabbath, the blessed day on which Christ rested in the tomb, just as He rested when He completed the creation of the universe (Gn 2:2). Because of the Resurrection, Sunday is also known in the Church as the eighth day, which symbolizes eternity, a day without end.
20:2 Though John does not mention the other myrrhbearing women (Mk 16:1; Lk 24:10), Mary's use of we indicates they were present.
The response of Peter and John (the other disciple) reveals each one's disposition. John's reaching the tomb first indicates his faith is lofty and full of understanding, and indeed, he is the first to have believed (v. 8). Peter's faith, on the other hand, is more direct and bold, shown by his immediate entrance into the tomb (v. 6).
The details John gives concerning the linen cloths confirm the Resurrection, for if thieves had taken away Christ's body as Mary initially thought (v. 2), they would not have taken the time to strip the body, nor to fold and place each piece carefully and separately.
The Scripture had foretold Christ could not remain dead (Ps 15:10).
The encounter between the risen Lord and Mary is reminiscent of the encounter between the bride and her beloved in the Song of Solomon (SS 3:1–4). This parallel teaches that through the Resurrection, Christ has taken the Church to be His eternal Bride (see note at 2:1–11; Eph 5:31, 32; Rev 21:9, 10).
That Mary turned again (see v. 14) shows she had been looking back and forth between the angels (v. 12) and her Lord, sensing the awe of the angels in the presence of their Ruler, but not yet recognizing Jesus herself. Through Christ calling Mary by name, her eyes and heart are opened, and she recognizes Him (see 10:3, 4). Rabboni is an affectionate term meaning “my dear Teacher.”
20:17 Do not cling to Me: Christ does not prohibit the touching of His resurrected flesh, for we commune with His flesh in the Eucharist, and He even commands Thomas to touch Him (v. 27). Here, Christ is instructing Mary to understand and accept that His life is not merely continuing in the same state as before, and that He will not remain with her as He did in the past, but is pressing forward to His Ascension to the Father.
Mary Magdalene, having remained faithful to Christ to the end, is the first person sent to proclaim the risen Lord, and thus is the first apostle of the Resurrection. She is known in the Church as “the apostle to the apostles.”
Christ commissions the disciples to continue His mission on earth, granting them the Holy Spirit (v. 22) and the authority to forgive the sins of others (v. 23). (See the articles “Ordination” at Acts 14 and “Confession” at 1Jn 1.) Through this direct consecration and through apostolic continuity, Christ's own Priesthood is communicated to the bishops and presbyters of the Church.
The doubt of Thomas is described in the Church hymns as “blessed,” for it was not a doubt of resistance to truth, but one that desperately desired a truthful answer—a “doubt which gave birth to faith” when the answer was revealed. In hymns of the Church, Christ says to Thomas, “Your doubt will teach My Passion and Resurrection to all,” and we affirm that his doubt “brought the hearts of believers to knowledge.” The conversion of Thomas' doubt into faith led him to the clearest confession of Christ's divinity, addressing Jesus as my Lord and my God (v. 28).
The Sea of Tiberias is another name for the Sea of Galilee. Because Christ's resurrected body was transfigured and incorruptible, it was not visible unless He willingly showed Himself. His resurrected body is indeed human, but it is glorified in every respect and illustrates the kind of body each believer will have in the general resurrection (see 1Co 15:42–49).
This is the second time Christ provided a multitude of fish for these men (Lk 5:4–6). Jesus often revealed Himself after the Resurrection through words and acts that were familiar (20:16; Lk 24:35). It is through this familiar grace that our Lord is recognizable to all His followers (see also note at Lk 5:6). John, the beloved disciple, is the first to perceive that the Man on the shore is the Lord, showing that love for Christ brings spiritual insight. Peter plunging into the sea demonstrates the boldness of his faith (see note at 20:3–8).
The great catch of fish is an image of the disciples bringing mankind to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, and it fulfills the prophecy of Jer 16:16. In the festal hymn of Pentecost we sing to Christ, “Through the fishermen, You drew the world into Your net.”
Peter takes the initiative in dragging the net to land, an act symbolic of his leadership in the early Church. That the net was not broken shows the invincibility of the Church, while the number one hundred and fifty-three symbolizes all nations of humanity.
21:12 The disciples' inner desire to ask Christ, “Who are You?” shows His form was altered in a way that amazed them. Yet they did not ask because they knew even though His appearance was altered, it was the Lord.
This meal is reminiscent of the feeding of the five thousand and carries the same eucharistic significance (see note at 6:2–14). The fish became a symbol of identity for early Christians. The initials of the phrase “Jesus Christ, God's Son, Savior” in Greek form the acronym ICHTHYS, which is Greek for “fish.”
That Christ singles out Simon Peter has a twofold significance: (1) Peter was the leader among the disciples, and thus had to be the first to confess his love for the risen Lord. (2) Peter had denied Christ three times (18:17, 25–27), and here Christ restores Him with a threefold confession of love.

It is important to note that the first two times Christ inquires of Peter, “Do you love Me?” He uses a form of the word agape, which denotes the highest form of sacrificial and self-emptying love, the kind of love God has for man and that man can develop only through maturing in God's grace. Each time, however, Peter is unable to claim such a lofty love. When Peter answers, “You know that I love You,” he uses the term philo, which is a lesser form of love, akin to brotherly affection. When the Lord asks the third time, “Do you love Me?” He has changed to the term philo, condescending to Peter's weakness and accepting whatever love Peter is able to offer. Nevertheless, Christ knows that Peter will develop agape love for Him, as Peter will eventually accept martyrdom for His sake (vv. 18, 19). Peter was grieved both that the Lord had to condescend to his level of love and that this was a clear, though gentle, reference to his three denials.
21:18-19 This is Christ's second prophecy of Peter's martyrdom (see 13:36), which Peter would suffer under Nero in about AD 67 by being crucified upside down.
This disciple is John, the author of this Gospel. St. John lived a long life, dying at about the age of 100 (c. AD 98–108). Early Christians marveled at his longevity, and some thought he would not die before the return of Christ. John corrects this assumption by clarifying that Jesus did not say to him that he would not die.
21:24 John's use of we indicates he had an assistant. Tradition holds John used a scribe named Prochorus who wrote down his words and teachings; this scribe is shown in many icons.
Acknowledging his Gospel contains only a fraction of Christ's life, John has written his book to bring his hearers to faith (20:31). While the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke contain many more miracles and parables, these too are far from exhaustive. This verse not only emphasizes the holiness of what was written, but also points to the ongoing oral tradition within the Church (see 2Th 2:15).
During the Last Supper, Jesus promised to teach His disciples through the Holy Spirit (Jn 16:13). After His Resurrection, His promise is fulfilled.
Forty is a number indicating completion or fulfillment.
The Promise of the Father is the gift of the Holy Spirit (v. 5), which the Jews had been expecting to accompany the messianic age (see Joel 3:1).
That the disciples are still fixated on the establishment of an earthly kingdom shows that the Holy Spirit has not yet been given, for only after Pentecost do the disciples receive the full understanding of the Kingdom of God. Here, the disciples are asking the wrong question, for Christ will not restore the kingdom to Israel, but will rather restore Israel and the world to the Kingdom.
1:9-11 Christ's Ascension is His enthronement in the fullness of divine authority and glory. Icons of the Ascension represent Christ in such a way that one cannot tell whether He is going to heaven or coming again to earth. This captures the profound truth that we are already living under His reign while awaiting His return. Thus, the icon shows Christ being taken up (v. 11), coming again in like manner (v. 11), and yet continually present (Mt 28:20). Believers are not to stand idly gazing up into heaven, but rather are called to virtuous faith and action in this world until Christ's return.
A Sabbath day's journey is the distance the Jews could travel without breaking the Sabbath rest—something under a mile.
Because the apostles had been enlightened by Christ to understand the OT as pointing to Him and His works (Lk 24:27), Peter now sees these two prophetic psalms (v. 20) as foretelling the fate of Judas.
See Mt 27:3–5. Though the accounts may seem to differ, Luke's report here is merely a more detailed account of Judas' end. This should also be understood in a spiritual sense, that the heart and soul of the rebellious or faithless person will be spilled out in the final judgment.
The Greek word episkope, here rendered office, is literally “bishopric” and refers to the apostolic position of overseer. Thus, we learn the apostles were the first bishops of the Church. The authority of overseeing the life of the Church continues in the bishops who stand in their succession.
Casting lots to discern the will of God has been practiced since ancient times (Jos 18:6–10; Neh 11:1; Jon 1:7) and continues in various places in the Church to this day. This should not be misunderstood as surrendering all authority to random chance. The authority of the apostles is shown by their offering of specific names (v. 23). Nevertheless, the final outcome is left to God.
The Day of Pentecost, also called the Feast of Weeks in the OT (see Lv 23:16), comes 50 days after Passover and is a celebration of the first fruits of harvest. As Jesus was crucified at Passover, the events of ch. 2 occur 50 days after His death. On the first Christian Pentecost, the unity of assembling with one accord (or purpose) in one place provides the environment in which the Holy Spirit comes to dwell in us.
The Holy Spirit coming in the appearance of divided tongues, as of fire fulfills the prophecy of John the Baptist that Christ would “baptize you with the Holy Spirit and fire” (Lk 3:16). This fire is a manifestation of the uncreated energy of God. Because God is wholly uncreated, His power or energy is also uncreated.
This is a fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel 3:1 and a divine reversal or recapitulation of the events at the Tower of Babel (Gn 11:1–9). In the account of Babel, pride was shown to possess the awesome power to divide; here, the humble reception of the Holy Spirit is shown to have the overwhelming power to unite, even in diversity. A key lesson of Pentecost is that the people hear the gospel in their own language.
Peter's sermon focuses on two prophetic themes: (1) the promised coming of the Holy Spirit (vv. 14–21); and (2) the Resurrection of Christ (vv. 22–40). This pattern of showing the OT prophecy being fulfilled in Christ is the central means by which the apostles preached the gospel (see 8:35). This method of preaching led directly to the multitude's repentance, baptism, and reception of the Holy Spirit (vv. 38, 39).
On Pentecost, the first part of Joel's prophecy (vv. 17–19) was fulfilled with the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The second part (vv. 19–21) will be fulfilled at the Second Coming of Christ.
The term made refers to Christ's Incarnation and works as a Man, and not to His eternal existence as Lord and God.
Peter's listeners were cut to the heart because they understood and had been prepared by the OT. Almost half of Peter's message is a quotation of OT scriptures. The evidence that Jesus fulfills these prophecies is overwhelming to them.
Peter's answer defines Christian life within the Church. We must (1) repent, (2) be baptized, and (3) receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. The baptismal service of the Orthodox Church reflects this way of life. Candidates first repent, confess their sins, and renounce the devil. Second, they are baptized by immersion. Third, they are given the gift of the Holy Spirit through chrismation.
Central elements of worship that were present from the very beginning continue in the Orthodox Church to this day: apostolic doctrine being taught in the fellowship of a common assembly, the breaking of the eucharistic bread, and specific liturgical prayers. Prayers is literally “the prayers” in Greek, referring to specific liturgical prayers. The Jews had practiced liturgical prayer for centuries, the preeminent prayers being the Psalms. Because the Psalms point so clearly to Christ, Christians immediately incorporated them into NT worship.
Having all things in common was practiced as a necessity, for many of the new converts were far from home. While such communal living is not a mandate for all Christians, it is still practiced in various monasteries. Furthermore, it continually reminds us that all things belong to God and are for the benefit of all mankind.
At the hour of prayer, the ninth hour: The apostles were observing regular Jewish hours of prayer, just as believers had done for centuries (Ps 54:18; Dan 6:11). The practice of praying at the first (6:00 a.m.), third (9:00 a.m.), sixth (12:00 noon), and ninth (3:00 p.m.) hours of the day carried over into the Church from the start. This practice continues to this day in the Orthodox Church in private prayers, in monasteries, and in some parishes. (See also 10:3, 9, 30.)
The apostles participate not only in preaching and teaching but in healing as well. The sacrament of healing manifests God's presence in the Church and confirms the message of the gospel.
3:11 Solomon's porch is in the temple area.
Peter's sermon clarifies several key truths concerning Jesus: (1) He reveals the identity of Jesus, by whose power the lame man was healed. He is God's Suffering Servant (v. 13), the Holy One (v. 14) of God, the Prince of life (v. 15), the Christ foretold by the prophets (v. 18). (2) As prophesied, Christ was rejected, for the leaders had Him killed (v. 15). But God raised Him, and the apostles are witnesses to that Resurrection (v. 15). (3) The rejection of Christ shows profound ignorance of God's saving activity (vv. 18–20). (4) The only saving response the people can make is to repent and be converted (v. 19), which is a thorough change of mind and heart. (5) The rewards of conversion include forgiveness of sins, renewal, and confidence in the glorious Second Coming of Christ (vv. 19–26).
Repentance always bring blessings from the Lord. Some fear turning away from sin makes life hard to bear. Instead, through repentance, life that was merely existence is transformed into real living—that is, living in faith, love, joy, and confident hope.
Sadducees: See 23:8.
The name of Christ is not simply a verbal pronunciation, but indicates His will, His life, His person, His very presence. Salvation in the name of Christ indicates salvation in His eternal being. As Christ is the one and only Son of God, salvation can only be found in Him.
Uneducated and untrained refers specifically to religious education. This lack of religious training stands in contrast to the expertise of the Sanhedrin. The wisdom and power of the Holy Spirit transcend earthly religious training, for God works in the humble and simple as well as in those who are formally educated or influential.
4:16 The admission of a notable miracle without a faithful response illustrates the hardness of the human heart where there is no repentance.
While God commands our obedience to governing authorities (Lk 20:25; Rom 13:1–7), obedience to God comes first. When the two are in conflict, the believer must follow God and be willing to accept the consequences.
This prayer follows a traditional liturgical formula of praise, remembrance of God's works, and petition. Note that signs and wonders (v. 30) are requested, not as ends in themselves, but in order to give boldness to the preachers and to confirm the word they speak (v. 29).
While the Holy Spirit continually abides in the Church, His presence is experienced again and again in liturgical assemblies and in recurring pentecostal outpourings. Note how quickly the petition of the apostles (vv. 29, 30) was answered.
Ananias and Sapphira are accountable for allowing Satan to fill their hearts with lies, and for breaking the trust and integrity of the Church. Their sin is not only keeping back possessions but deception (v. 4). Lying to the Church is equal to lying to the Holy Spirit (v. 3), the Spirit of truth.
Signs and wonders are given by God, not as ends in themselves, but to encourage and strengthen the apostles to preach the gospel (see 4:24–31).
Christ's Cross is often referred to as a tree, both because it is made of wood and because trees were often used to crucify criminals. There is also a deeper meaning in this term, for just as a living tree brought death to mankind through Adam (Gn 2:17), now a dead tree brings life to mankind through Jesus. See also Dt 21:23; Gal 3:13.
Gamaliel was a famous rabbi under whom Paul studied (22:3).
Theudas and Judas of Galilee were two of many who made false messianic claims. They raised the sword of rebellion against Rome and were crushed, as reported by the Jewish historian Josephus.
Rejoicing: See Lk 6:22, 23. Suffering is not necessarily a sign of God's displeasure, as thought by many Jews (see Lk 13:1–4; Jn 9:1–3). Rather, Christians accept persecution joyfully, knowing that the rewards of the Kingdom far outweigh any sufferings on earth. See also Rom 5:3–5.
The Hebrews here are Jewish Christians in Jerusalem who spoke Aramaic. The Hellenists were Greek-speaking Jewish Christians from other parts of the Hellenized world who had settled back in Jerusalem. St. John Chrysostom notes that this complaint shows a lack of order among the multitude of believers, even though the neglect was not malicious. Thus, the difficulties facing the Church arose not only from outside, but also by dissension from within.
The term disciples in Acts generally refers to all believers, and not only to the twelve apostles. While the ministries of the word and of serving widows are both important, they cannot be performed by the same people and still receive the proper attention. Thus, the Church develops diversified ministries. In the Orthodox Church to this day, the bishops and presbyters are called to focus on prayer and the ministry of the word, with the other ministries being accomplished by the deacons and the laity. Note that the servants to be chosen must not only be spiritual, but full of the wisdom necessary to manage the business they are called to do (v. 3).
While the multitude submitted the names of the seven deacons (v. 5), the apostles were the ones to ordain them (v. 6). Thus, the synergy between laity and clergy is demonstrated in the selection of Church leaders. It should be noted that there is disagreement among the Fathers as to whether these men held the liturgical office of deacon, or whether this diaconate was more service-oriented. In either understanding, they nevertheless received this office by ordination.
The number of disciples multiplied greatly: This growth only happens when three great pillars of church life are fully in place. These pillars are (1) worship (v. 4), (2) evangelism (v. 4), and (3) charity (v. 3). Furthermore, this growth happens after the external and internal struggles have been addressed. The priests here were Christian converts who had been Jewish priests; they had not necessarily been ordained to the priestly ministry within the Christian Church after their conversion.
Freedmen were Jews who had been formerly held captive under the Romans, often because of rebellion.
This charge is brought against Stephen because in Christ, the liturgy and Law of the OT are fulfilled, and are thus changed and transformed (Heb 7:12). To those who do not believe in Christ, these changes are blasphemous.
The charge that Jesus would destroy the temple was leveled against Him at His trial (Mt 26:61) by false witnesses. This was a misinterpretation of two of His sayings: (1) “Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up” (Jn 2:19)—referring to His own body; and (2) His prophecy of the destruction of the temple (Lk 21:6, 20). This prophecy was fulfilled in AD 70, when the Romans destroyed the temple as punishment for a Jewish rebellion.
Those who become one with Christ receive this divine radiance revealed in Stephen's face. This is a preview of the glory all believers will share in the age to come (2Co 3:18). See also Ex 34:29–35.
7:1  Stephen does not answer the high priest directly, but uses the charges as the context for his preaching. As with Peter's sermon on Pentecost (2:14–40), Stephen preaches Jesus Christ based on the OT, showing how the Jews consistently missed the purpose of God's dealings with them due to their hardness of heart (v. 51).
Foreign land: Egypt (See Ex 1–12).
Circumcision identified each male as being adopted into the community of Israel, and as being a true descendant of Abraham.
Pharaoh's order to destroy the Hebrew babies (Ex 1:22) prefigured Herod's attempt to kill Christ by destroying all the infants in Bethlehem (Mt 2:16). As Moses was preserved from death in order to deliver Israel from bondage, so also Christ was preserved in order to save the world through His Passion and Resurrection.
This Angel of the Lord is the Son of God Himself, before He became Man. Angel means “messenger” and is a term used for the pre-eternal Christ as the Word of God, the One who speaks to the people (see Is 9:6). Note that this Angel speaks with the voice of the Lord (v. 31) and declares Himself to be God (v. 32).
The place of God's revelation is holy ground, for God's presence makes creation to be holy. Church buildings are included in this sanctified space because God's revelation comes to the faithful there, and God's presence is experienced through the sacraments there.
The congregation of Israel under the Old Covenant was a type or picture of the New Covenant Church. Just as the Israelite congregation journeyed with the Angel, now the Church journeys toward the Kingdom in the presence of Christ.
The Most High does not dwell in temples made with hands: This does not mean that God was not present in the temple. Rather, it indicates that God's presence is not limited to a specific temple, but dwells in every soul that receives Him.
Israel resisted the Holy Spirit by neither accepting God's plan for them nor receiving His correction through the prophets. The contemporary Jewish leaders continued to resist the Holy Spirit in their opposition to Jesus and to His disciples.
Stephen's vision of the enthroned Christ is seen by his opponents as the ultimate blasphemy, which carried the penalty of stoning (Lv 24:16). Saul, a participant in Stephen's martyrdom, was a great persecutor of the early Christians. He would later be called by Christ to be His apostle and would become the great Christian missionary, Paul of Tarsus (see 9:1–22).
In imitation of his Savior (Lk 23:34), Stephen offers his soul to God and prays for the forgiveness of his enemies.
In the Liturgy of St. Basil, we proclaim God as one who “makes the evil to be good.” In other words, God uses the sins of man for good and holy results. Here, the scattering of the disciples during this persecution led to the spread of the gospel to other areas. St. Stephen is sometimes called the Protomartyr (or “first martyr”), as he is the first believer to be killed in the name of Christ.
Philip the deacon (6:5) is the first to evangelize Samaria with the gospel of Jesus Christ, bringing both teachings and healings. The eager reception by the people (v. 12) is due in part to the foundation laid by St. Photini, the Samaritan woman of Jn 4, who brought news of the Messiah before His crucifixion (see Jn 4:39).
Being a sorcerer and dazzled by Philip's healings, Simon converted for reasons other than faith. He would later try to buy the power to work miracles (vv. 18–24), and according to tradition, he afterwards returned to his magical arts and was a bitter enemy of the Church.
The unity of the Church is shown by new communities being under the authority of and in communion with the church of Jerusalem. In the Church to this day, all communities in a given area are united under the authority of a local bishop, who is in communion with all the other bishops of the Orthodox Church.
Baptism and chrismation (lit. “anointing for the reception of the Holy Spirit”) were considered two distinct sacraments from the beginning. The phrase baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus should not be understood to mean that the Trinity was not mentioned at the time of baptism. “Do not imagine that because the names of the Father and the Holy Spirit are sometimes omitted when the Apostle speaks of baptism that the invocation of their names has been omitted” (BasilG). Sometimes the Bible speaks of baptism in the Holy Spirit and sometimes of baptism in Christ to emphasize certain points. Always “we are baptized in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit” (BasilG; see Mt 28:19). Specific reference to baptism in Jesus Christ was not intended to neglect the Trinity, but to distinguish Christian baptism from John's baptism of repentance (see 19:1–5).
Faith must be accompanied by a total change of life or it is worthless. Simon believed on a certain level (v. 13), but he was not justified, because he was poisoned by bitterness and bound by iniquity.
Eunuchs were men who were castrated, whether by birth defect, disease, or mutilation, and were often employed to guard women of nobility. This eunuch had a thorough knowledge of Judaism and was likely a Jewish proselyte (convert).
Only those who are mature in faith can hear and discern the promptings of the Spirit (JohnChr). Those of lesser faith are prompted more directly by words and angels.
Because the Scriptures have a specific, God-given meaning (2Pt 1:20, 21), it is impossible to truly understand them apart from the Church, for apostolic interpretation is held in the consciousness of the Church.
This passage from Isaiah is prayed by the presbyter as he prepares the bread for the Divine Liturgy.
Again, the OT is the foundation for proclaiming the gospel of Jesus Christ (see 2:14–40; 7:1–53). Such is the power of the OT that if anyone “would apply himself to the study of the prophets, he would need no miracles” (JohnChr).
From the beginning, baptism in water (v. 36) and faith in Christ (v. 37) are both essential for entrance into the NT Church. The apostolic pattern of conversion in Christ is hearing, believing, and baptism.
9:1, 2 Saul persecutes Christians under the legal structure of Judaism; as such, he is charged to arrest Jewish Christians, but has no authority over Gentile Christians. Christianity became known as the Way based on Christ calling Himself “the way” (Jn 14:6), and on the fact that following Christ is not simply a momentary decision or the observance of outward religious practices, but a whole way of life.
To persecute either Christians individually or the Church generally is to persecute Christ Himself, for they cannot be separated (see Mt 25:40; Eph 5:23, 30).
Goads are spikes used to prod farm animals. The term is sometimes used as a metaphor for the wisdom or promptings of God (Ecc 12:11, “pointed sticks”). Here Christ is declaring the futility of fighting against divine truth.
Saul's blindness illustrates Christ's teachings on spiritual blindness (Jn 9:39). As long as Saul saw things from his own perspective, he was spiritually blind. Only by having his earthly vision taken away does Saul become capable of truly seeing Christ in glory and truth. This action also drives Saul to submit to the Church for baptism.
The Orthodox Church of Antioch continues an unbroken succession to this early Damascus Church and to this day is headquartered on the street called Straight.
Ananias was likely one of Saul's targets for arrest in Damascus. He served as first bishop of that city.
That Saul was God's chosen vessel does not mean that he had no free will in the matter. Rather, it indicates that God had selected Saul, knowing that he would freely accept and be capable of doing the work set before him.
Note that even though Saul had a direct revelation of Christ and believed in Him, he still submitted to baptism in the Church. The scales falling from Saul's eyes illustrate that those under the Law remain ultimately blind until they encounter and receive Jesus Christ.
The former persecutor is now persecuted (see also 5:41).
9:29 These Hellenists were not Christians, but Greek-speaking Jews who rejected Christ (contrast 6:1).
This is the first mention in the Book of Acts of churches in the plural, showing that the Church is not invisible, but consists of visible local communities united in faith, doctrine, worship, and authority.
The term saints refers to all Christian believers, for all who believe in Jesus Christ with their whole heart and are sanctified by the Holy Spirit are by definition saints. The later use of the term saints for holy people who lived particularly exemplary lives and who are canonized (or glorified) by the Church does not undo this primary meaning. Lydda is about 25 miles northwest of Jerusalem.
Peter brings Christ's healing to a paralytic in a manner similar to Jesus healing the paralytic in Jn 5:1–15. The healing power of Jesus the Christ continues in His Church to this day.
Sharon was a region north of Lydda along the Mediterranean seacoast. The signs the apostles worked convinced many people who turned to the Lord. These signs prove the mercy and power of God, thus confirming the gospel and leading people to repentance.
Peter's raising of Tabitha from the dead parallels Christ's raising of the synagogue ruler's daughter (Mt 9:22–25).
With this chapter, a whole new period in church history begins. Initially composed of Jews and then Samaritans (8:5–25), with the conversion of Cornelius the Church begins its dramatic growth among the Gentiles.
10:2 “Fearer of God” was a formal designation for a Gentile who followed precepts of the Jewish religion but had not yet become a proselyte, or full convert. Two things characterized the devotion of Cornelius: he gave alms generously and he prayed. His devotion did not make Him a Christian, but His prayers and alms were accepted by God (v. 4) and prepared him for conversion to Jesus Christ at the preaching of Peter. Even good people need Christ!
The ninth hour is 3:00 p.m., one of the traditional hours for liturgical prayer for both Jews and early Christians. These hours of liturgical prayer were prayed by both the Jewish Christians (e.g., Peter in v. 9) and Gentile Christians (e.g., Cornelius here). This practice continues in the Orthodox Church today (see 3:1 and note).
Cornelius's obedience to God shows the true state of his heart, for it is those who not only hear but also do the will of God that are the true believers (Mt 7:21; Rom 2:13; Jam 1:22).
Peter's resistance shows the difficulty with which the Jews let go of the Law. God's commandment here is first a declaration that the Old Covenant dietary laws are fulfilled and thus no longer in effect (see Mk 7:19). More importantly, this vision revealed that the Gentiles, who were considered unclean by the Jews, are cleansed by the blood of Christ and are equal partakers of the Kingdom (see v. 28). This vision thus prepared Peter to receive Cornelius (vv. 17–48). Finally, this also teaches us that God desires to receive everyone into His Church, regardless of heritage, social class, or past sins, for all are one in Christ.
Cornelius and those with him are eager to hear, for “faith comes by hearing” (Rom 10:17), and faithful and devoted people still need to hear the gospel.
Peter's focus is on the saving work and power of Jesus Christ, His death and Resurrection, and how He fulfilled the word spoken by the OT prophets (v. 43).
Justification is not merely a one-time event, but a dynamic, ongoing process. In addition to faith, two conditions are given here: God accepts whoever fears Him and works righteousness. This does not deny justification by faith, but demonstrates clearly that justification is not by faith alone (Jam 2:24).
It was in His humanity that Jesus was anointed by the Holy Spirit, for Christ possessed the Holy Spirit from all eternity before the Incarnation. Note also the core faith in the Trinity: God the Father, together with His Son Jesus and the Holy Spirit, are co-operative in the salvation of mankind.
10:44 The giving of the Holy Spirit prior to baptism is something the Church had not seen before (v. 45). This unusual occurrence is a sign that God has accepted the Gentiles, and that baptism is not to be denied them.
To be baptized is of monumental importance. Even after the household of Cornelius had believed and received the Holy Spirit, baptism was still essential. The Book of Acts clearly teaches the crucial importance of the great sacraments—baptism (see also 2:38, 41; 8:12, 36–38; 9:18; 16:15, 33; 18:8; 19:5; 22:16); chrismation, or the sacramental reception of the Holy Spirit (2:38; 8:17; 9:17; 19:6); the Eucharist (2:42, 46; 20:7; 27:35); and ordination (6:6; 13:3; 14:23).
Those of the circumcision were Jewish Christians who insisted that circumcision and the rest of the OT Law must continue to be observed even by Christians in order to receive salvation (see 15:1; Gal 2:12). These Jewish Christians also advocated separation from Gentiles.
11:13 Call for Simon: The need to be received into the apostolic Church is indisputable. Even those who have direct revelations of Christ in the Holy Spirit are invariably directed to the apostolic Church (see also 9:6–18; 11:22). For it is in the Church that the unity and fullness of Christ are experienced, and the words of salvation (v. 14) are proclaimed without alteration.
The evangelization of the Gentiles brought a significant amount of conflict to the early Church. Even though Christ had commanded the apostles to preach the gospel universally (1:8), it took a while for this to be put into practice. Much debate would come over what requirements from the OT Law, if any, these Gentile Christians would have to follow (see ch. 15).
11:20  Hellenists here refers to actual Greeks, not to Hellenistic Jews (contrast 6:1). The Church in Antioch was instrumental in bringing numerous Gentiles to the Lord Jesus.
Two key truths are revealed in Barnabas being sent out to Antioch: (1) an apostle is sent, but does not work in isolation from the Church (v. 23); and (2) the church in Antioch needed the seal of apostolic authority to be integrated into the universal Church (see note at v. 13).
In seeking help Barnabas reveals humility, a recognition of his own limitations, and his communion with and dependence on the other apostles.
Two key elements of early church practice included (1) the eucharistic assembly and (2) the teaching of the gospel. That the disciples were first called Christians in Antioch is more than just historical fact. It demonstrates that Christ's command to preach the gospel among the Gentiles was first fully realized in Antioch. “It was there for the first time that men were accounted worthy of that name” (JohnChr).
These prophets are Christian believers within the Church who have the gift of prophecy (see 1Co 12:29; 14:3, 29; Eph 4:11).
11:28-29 This great famine took place in AD 44–51, beginning in Judea and spreading to Greece and Italy. The principle of giving, each according to his ability, is one that continues in the Church to this day.
The elders (lit., “the bearded ones”) are the presbyters, or priests; they are the clergy ordained and put in charge of the local churches by the apostles who established them (see 14:23). As to the orders of the ministry, bishops (the apostles) are first mentioned in 1:20 (see note). Deacons appear in 6:2–6. Here is the first reference to presbyters or priests.
Herod Agrippa is the grandson of Herod the Great, who tried to kill Jesus as an infant (Mt 2:16). Herod Agrippa ruled as king in Palestine under Rome in AD 41–44. The dates of his reign determine the period in which James was killed (v. 2) and Peter was imprisoned (v. 3). James was the first of the twelve apostles to be martyred. This event reveals that by the year AD 44, there was growing popular displeasure against Christians.
The Days of Unleavened Bread mark the Passover period, and thus the commemoration of the Passion and Resurrection of Christ.
The power of intercessory prayer by the church on behalf of its leaders is evidenced by Peter's release from prison (v. 10).
Peter's initial confusion (v. 9) and subsequent understanding (v. 11) about his release from prison show that God's works are not always clear to us while they are unfolding. But in hindsight His purpose often becomes clear.
John whose surname was Mark is St. Mark the Evangelist, who would compose the Gospel of Mark. He would later become a coworker with Paul and Barnabas (v. 25; Col 4:10) and still later with Peter (1Pt 5:13).
It is his angel shows not only that the early Christians believed in angels, but that each person is assigned one. To this day in the Liturgy of the Orthodox Church, we pray "for an angel of peace, a faithful guide, a guardian of our souls and bodies." (See Mt 18:10.)
This James is the “brother” of the Lord (Gal 1:19; see also note at Mt 12:46–50), not the apostle of the twelve, for that James had already been martyred (v. 2). By this time, James is bishop of Jerusalem (see 15:13; 21:18). The brethren are the Christians of the Jerusalem Church.
The death of Herod reveals a deeper spiritual meaning: all who seek or accept unworthy praise are taking that which rightly belongs to God alone.
12:24 The enemies of God cannot stop the spread of the word of God.
13:1 Manaen was raised with Herod Antipas (39–4 BC), the Herod who slaughtered the infants in Bethlehem (Mt 2:16). Manaen was one of the early Christians with noble family connections.
Ministered (Gr. leitourgounton) literally means “performed liturgical acts.” It is the same root word from which “liturgy” is derived. This phrase would be more accurately translated, “as they performed the liturgy to the Lord and fasted.” Liturgical worship did not originate in Antioch. Its roots are in ancient Israel. Saul and Barnabas, who came from Jerusalem, taught the Antiochian Christians—among other things—true worship (11:22–26). Note too that fasting and liturgy are inseparable. It is in the midst of this liturgy that the Holy Spirit speaks. Separate means “to set apart for special service.”
13:3  Laid hands on them is a reference to the sacrament of ordination (see note at 10:48). While contemporary Orthodox practice is usually to ordain no more than one person to a specific rank at a given liturgy, here was a case of multiple ordinations. Note that even Saul (Paul), who had a direct call to serve from Jesus Christ (9:1–6; 2Co 12:1–4), still had to experience ordination in the Church.
This is the first use in Acts of the name Paul for Saul. No particular significance is stated, but it was not the result of his conversion as many have suggested, for he is still called Saul for quite some time after his conversion. Paul is a Roman name, and Saul is a Hebrew name. Many Jews of this time had two names, one Jewish and another Greek or Roman. Paul may have begun to favor his Roman name out of humility (Paul means “little”), or because his ministry was now becoming more focused on the Gentiles. St. John Chrysostom suggests that the name change was the result of ordination (vv. 2, 3), just as Christ gave Simon the new name Peter (Mt 16:17, 18; Jn 1:42).
The hand of the Lord acts not to inflict punishment for punishment's sake, but to bring repentance and conversion—which proves fruitful in this case of the proconsul. This is the first recorded instance of conversion to Christ of a high Roman official.
Antioch in Pisidia was in Galatia, and should not be confused with Antioch of Syria, from which Paul and Barnabas had just been sent.
Paul preaches Christ based on His fulfillment of OT events and prophecies (see note at 8:35).
The heart of Paul's message is: (1) Christ is the promise and therefore the fulfillment of the Jewish faith; (2) Jesus is the seed of David, and thus fulfills his office as the true King of Israel; and (3) Jesus is the One John the Baptist preached.
13:26 The family of Abraham refers to the Jews, while those who fear God refer to Gentile believers; thus, salvation is proclaimed to all mankind.
Paul consistently presses the point that if the OT is properly understood, it is clear Jesus is the Messiah. Even the Jewish leaders' rejection of Jesus fulfilled these prophecies (Ps 2:1, 2; 118:22, 23; Is 53:1–9).
13:38-39 In addition to Christ's death and Resurrection, two recurring themes in apostolic preaching are (1) the forgiveness of sins (v. 38) and (2) no one is justified by the law of Moses (v. 39).
Many of the Jews reject the teaching that salvation is for all people, so Paul and Barnabas now turn to the Gentiles. This pattern continues throughout Acts: the gospel is preached first to the Jews, God's chosen people, then to the Gentiles (Rom 1:16).
Iconium: The capital of Lycaonia in Asia Minor between Antioch and Lystra. An interesting second-century account tells of a man from Iconium who went to meet St. Paul. Paul had been described to him as being “a small man in size with meeting eyebrows, a rather large nose, bald, bow-legged, but strongly built, full of grace, who at times seemed to have the face of an angel” (from The Acts of Thekla).
Unbelieving could also be translated “disobedient.” It is from the common Greek verb apeitheo, meaning “to disobey.”
See Mt 10:34–36.
The inner resistance to repentance is so strong that many would rather deny the wonders of God (v. 3) and destroy His messengers than look inward and change.
This unfitting praise by the people was “a contrivance of the devil” (John Chr), an attempt to lead the people to a new idolatry and to tempt Paul and Barnabas to pride.
While Paul preached Christ to the Jews using the OT (13:17–41), here he presents the Lord to these Gentiles from the perspective of creation (see also 17:22–26). In this way, he uses a starting point most accessible to his hearers.
14:18-19 The people's immediate change from worshipping these apostles to persecuting them shows a mob mentality, and that a faith based solely on the miraculous (vv. 8–11) is fickle, weak, and easily shattered.
Leaving town in the face of persecution shows wisdom, not lack of faith (Mt 10:23). The short reference to Derbe does not imply a short stay, for many disciples were made before these apostles departed again.
Part of the apostolic calling is making new disciples, while an equally important part is strengthening those who already believe. It would be an empty gesture for the Church to convert someone and then leave him to struggle on his own. Instead, the believers' souls must be guarded and continually nurtured.
14:23    Elders are presbyters (priests) ordained by the apostles to nurture and lead the churches they established (see note for v. 22). The word translated appointed (Gr. cheirotoneo) means “to ordain by the laying on of hands.”
15:1 See 11:2; Gal 2:12.
This brewing dispute concerning the relationship between the OT Law and Christianity (v. 1) came to a head and had to be settled before it divided the Church completely. The Church has never been free from disputes and dissensions, but nevertheless has maintained a way to resolve them: in council. The meeting of bishops in council, with the participation of elders (presbyters) and knowledgeable laymen, continues to guide the Church to this day.
This is the Apostolic Council in Jerusalem, about AD 49, a precedent of tremendous importance for the government of the Church. The Orthodox Church is sometimes known as “the Church of the Councils,” for it continues the practice of solving disputes and coming to a consensus through councils. This council progresses through the stages of assembly (v. 6), testimony (vv. 7–12), decision (vv. 13–21), and adoption (vv. 22–29).
Peter gives his testimony after much dispute (v. 7); he stresses how God has worked among the Gentiles, and then Paul and Barnabas do the same. The emphasis of all three apostles is that God has already shown them the answer and He must not be opposed.
Note that even though Peter is present, James, being bishop of Jerusalem, presides at this council (see note at 12:17). He interprets the testimony in light of the Scriptures and finds that Simon Peter's testimony is in agreement with the OT prophets (v. 15). Thus, James makes his decision by recognizing the consensus of the apostles in light of the Holy Scriptures. When James declares, I judge (v. 19), he does not mean “I think” or “In my opinion”; rather, he is making the final decision. Nevertheless, this verdict is not merely his own opinion, but a summary of the testimony of the council.

The four prohibited acts (v. 20) reflect both qualities of Christian behavior and minimal requirements of the OT Law. Some interpreters understand blood to mean eating blood (Lv 17:14); others, such as St. John Chrysostom, understand this to mean murder, the shedding of blood.
While James makes the definitive decision, it is not valid until it is adopted by not only the council, but the whole church. This apostolic letter is an early form of church canon.
It seemed good to the Holy Spirit, and to us does not indicate an equality between God and man. Rather, it emphasizes the unity between God and the Church and the way in which the Holy Spirit works in and through holy councils. The Church strive to limit canons to only those that are truly essential, in order to lay upon the faithful no greater burden than . . . necessary.
The one who had departed: See 13:13. This dispute shows that Christians can be plagued with disagreements concerning details and can even separate physically without falling from communion with one another. This particular dispute was eventually resolved, and John Mark later rejoined Paul (see 2Ti 4:11).
This Timothy would become one of the chief co-workers of Paul, would be the recipient of two of Paul's epistles, and would later follow the apostle John as bishop of Ephesus.
Since Timothy is partly of Jewish heritage, Paul has him circumcised to accommodate Jewish sensibilities. In the case of Titus, a Gentile, Paul refuses to do this on dogmatic principles, reaffirming that believers do not receive salvation through the Law (Gal 2:3).
Decrees translates the Greek word dogma, which includes not only decrees but official teachings. The Church preserves her dogmas, or doctrines, as delivered by the apostles, and these essential teachings are never up for negotiation.
Though no indication is given in the Scriptures why Paul was forbidden by the Holy Spirit to preach in these places, St. John Chrysostom likens this to the way a hunter will underfeed his dogs before a hunt in order to increase their hunger for the prize. Likewise, these people were not yet hungry for the gospel, and thus God delays the gospel being preached in their presence until a desire for Him can be cultivated.
The use of we indicates that Luke (the author of Acts) has joined Paul, Silas, and Timothy in Troas. This is the first of several uses of we in Acts, indicating that Luke was an eyewitness to many of the events he recorded.
16:13 The place for prayer was usually a synagogue, though in Philippi there were few Jews. Thus, this may have been a private home or gathering place by the riverside for lack of an actual synagogue.
Paul is the church planter par excellence, and his work remains the model for building churches. He starts with people already attuned to God and expounds for them the fullness of the gospel message (see note at 8:35). Lydia, the first convert in Europe, was a well-to-do businesswoman with a large home sufficient to host the Christian missionaries.
Exorcisms in the name of Christ are part of apostolic ministry. Notably, every baptismal service in the Orthodox Church begins with an exorcism to expel Satan from having any further influence over the new believer. Though the demon declared the truth through this slave girl, nevertheless, she needed to be free to accept Christ on her own, and Paul could not endure to see her tormented any longer. Furthermore, impure praise from God's enemies is not acceptable (WSir 15:9; see note at Lk 4:41).
Paul's accusers here care little for religion, but they use religious prejudice against the Jews to retaliate for their financial loss.
16:25  Being persecuted unjustly for Christ leads Paul and Silas to joy rather than sorrow (Lk 6:22, 23). Their praying and singing hymns prepares the other prisoners for conversion later than night.
Was about to kill himself: A jailer who let prisoners escape would be subject to cruel torture and execution.
The jailer's question, "what must I do to be saved?" implies he has already heard his prisoners proclaiming "the way of salvation" (v. 17) and their praying and singing (v. 25). The miraculous earthquake (v. 26) and Paul's concern for the jailer's life (v. 28) strengthen his faith and lead to his conversion.
16:33 All his family would include not only his wife and children, but any servants as well (see note at v. 15).
Note that Paul does not appeal to his Roman citizenship in order to escape punishment for Christ, which he could easily have done. Rather, he uses his citizenship to have additional opportunities to proclaim the gospel (see also 22:22–30).
The largest and most important city in Macedonia, Thessalonica was very cosmopolitan, possessing an excellent harbor and superior commerce. With the flow of goods, communication, and people to and from the city, word of what was happening there spread quickly, and the church there became highly influential (1Th 1:8).
Reasoned (Gr. dialegomai) does not mean engaging in rational debate, for the proclamation of the gospel is not about winning intellectual arguments. Rather, this term indicates speaking or conversing about truths, ideas, or things that have been witnessed (note how this term is used in 20:9). The English word “dialogue” comes from the same root. The Scriptures are the OT writings (see notes at 8:35; 13:17–41).
Devout as used here is a synonym of “God-fearing.” It was used to designate a Gentile who followed the precepts of the Jewish religion, but had not yet become a proselyte or full convert (see 10:2).
The trumped-up charge that Christians claimed another king—Jesus is reminiscent of the charges brought against Jesus of being a political king. Instead, Paul was proclaiming the Kingdom of God, with Jesus as King (see 14:22; 19:28; 20:5).
Security: A deposit of money held as a bond to encourage Jason to uphold public peace in the future.
17:13 Though unwilling to search the Scriptures to see if Paul's message is true, as the Jews in Berea did (v. 11), the Jews from Thessalonica were willing to travel the 60 miles to Berea to stir up the crowds against Paul.
17:14 Brethren: The new Christians.
In freethinking Athens, Paul moves beyond the synagogue and makes open contact with Gentiles in the marketplace.
Both the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers believed that fulfillment could be achieved in this life through emotional calm and impassivity. However, they pursued this aim differently. The Epicureans pursued pleasure, while the Stoics renounced it.
Paul consistently preaches Christ from a starting point familiar to his hearers. To the Jews, he preaches from the OT (vv. 2, 3). To these Gentiles, he uses one of their own altars to proclaim Christ (v. 23) and emphasizes: (1) God is Creator of all; (2) God is the giver of life; (3) God desires all people to seek Him; (4) repentance is a way toward God; (5) God is Judge of all; and (6) God raised Jesus from the dead. (See also note at 14:15–17.)
The resurrection of the dead is the point at which some Gentile philosophers react negatively, while the other aspects of Paul's speech go unchallenged (see previous note). This rejection is due to the Platonic view that the body was a prison for the soul and unworthy of salvation.
18:6 Shaking out his garments was a sign of God's judgment. Quoting the OT (2Kg 1:16; Ezk 18:13), Paul declares the fulfillment of his responsibility and these Jews' own accountability for their rejection of the gospel message.
Gallio was governor of Corinth and Achaia in AD 51–52, which firmly dates Paul's first visit to Corinth.
God willing underscores Paul's constant reliance on God and the continual submission of his own plans to God's (see Jam 4:13–17). The coming feast was either Passover, which became the Christian celebration of Christ's Resurrection, or Pentecost, which became the celebration of the descent of the Holy Spirit (see 20:16). Note there was already a budding liturgical “calendar” among the apostles, revealing their deep desire to gather in remembrance of the great Christian feasts.
18:24-28  Two outstanding qualities characterize Apollos: (1) He is fervent in spirit, and (2) he is humble. A fervent person can be useful to God even if he is not yet well taught. Apollos apparently was not yet in the Church, but still spoke boldly in the synagogue (v. 26). His humility is shown in that he submits to correction by two tentmakers, one of whom was a woman—offensive to most educated men in his culture. Aquila and Pricilla displayed great decency and wisdom: they did not correct Apollos publicly, but rather took him aside privately.
Ephesus was the capital of the Roman province of Asia Minor, a large, magnificent city. Paul remained there for at least two years and three months (vv. 8–10). Because of this city's influence, churches were formed in almost every neighboring city and town within those three years. The seven churches in Revelation 2; 3 are all in this area.
Repentance (v. 4) is good, but apart from Christ Jesus, it does not secure salvation. Repentance is enough to stay people from sin, but it cannot restore us from corruption. Only the Incarnation of the Son of God has the power to overthrow both sin and its subsequent corruption (AthanG). Thus, a person needs to be joined to Christ in baptism and the sustaining power of the Holy Spirit.
On the term reasoning as it occurs in vv. 8, 9, see note at 17:2, 3. Again Paul follows the pattern of first preaching to the Jews and then moving to the Gentiles (see 13:45).
The miracles performed here follow those performed by Christ and show that Christ lives and works through His followers. Of particular significance is the way physical objects (handkerchiefs and aprons, v. 12) become instruments of grace when touched by people of great faith. That God works wonders both through His saints and through created objects shows that creation itself is being renewed. (For other examples of objects bestowing grace, see 5:15; Nm 21:8, 9; 4Kg 13:20, 21; Mk 6:12, 13; Lk 8:41–48; Jn 9:6, 7.)
Being dynamic and vital, the Church has an impact on every culture in which it exists, bringing both conversion and opposition. Note that Paul, a man without wealth or political status, influenced almost all Asia by his simple proclamation of the gospel. St. John Chrysostom emphasizes that this fact alone demonstrates God's hand was upon him.
The temple of Diana (Gr. Artemis), goddess of the hunt, was one of seven wonders of the ancient world because of its size and exquisite beauty. In the center of the temple was a statue of Diana, which the people there believed Zeus had sent down from heaven (see v. 35).
Gaius, from Asia Minor (20:4) is perhaps the same person mentioned in Rom 16:23 and 1Co 1:14. Aristarchus is a Thessalonian (20:4; Col 4:10).
Alexander, who was a Jew, attempted to prevent the Jews from associating with the Christians and to turn the anger of the crowds against them.
Apostolic preaching does not blaspheme other people's gods. Instead, as simply as possible, it presents the message of salvation through Jesus Christ.
Paul never took missionary journeys alone, but always a team accompanied him and together they raised up local leaders.
The first day of the week was Sunday, the Lord's Day of Resurrection, the Church's customary day to celebrate the Eucharist. Worship on the Sabbath ceased with the passing of the old covenant. To break bread means to celebrate the eucharistic Liturgy. While teaching and preaching are vital, the weekly Eucharist is always the culmination of the Lord's Day assembly.

Note the unified order of liturgical worship here. After gathering on the Lord's Day, the first part of the Liturgy focuses on the proclamation of the word, with Paul giving his lengthy sermon (v. 7). The second part of the Liturgy consists of breaking the bread, or Holy Communion (v. 11), followed by the agape feast, or community meal and fellowship. This pattern of liturgical worship continues in the Church to this day.
St. John Chrysostom upholds Eutychus as an example for young believers. While some young people stay up into the night for the purposes of entertainment, drunkenness, or immorality, this young man tried to remain awake in order to hear Paul preach the gospel.
20:10 See 4Kg 4:34.
That Paul desired to be with the other apostles in Jerusalem for Pentecost shows that a liturgical calendar based on sacred days was already being kept in the early Church. In that tradition, the Orthodox Church to this day keeps a calendar of special feasts, fasts, and celebrations (see 18:21 and note).
From this meeting, we learn: (1) the Church in Ephesus is living and growing; (2) it has already developed a permanent pattern of sacramental leadership in the elders (lit. “presbyters”; v. 17) and the overseers (lit. “bishops,” v. 28); and (3) the threat of false teachers and heresies arising both within and without the Church is already present (vv. 29, 30).
20:19  Paul reminds his hearers of the tears and trials he faced in Ephesus in order to strengthen them for what is to come. Paul's persecutions in Ephesus (Asia Minor) were among the worst he faced (1Co 15:32; 2Co 1:8).
20:26  Innocent of the blood does not mean that Paul has no responsibility to others. Rather, it means he has fulfilled his responsibility with regard to preaching the gospel, and their rejection of Jesus Christ is their own. (See 18:6 and note; see also note for v. 28 below.)
Blood in biblical language signifies life. Christ shed His own blood on the Cross to redeem His people and establish His Church.
Because trials come from both outside (v. 29) and inside (v. 30) the Church, the only protection is with God Himself (v. 32). It is in God and not in man that the Church is sustained and thrives.
While St. Paul teaches the clergy should be supported materially by the faithful (1Co 9:1–23), he has not required this for himself from the communities he established. This allowed Paul to preach all the more freely and took away any opportunity for others to question his motives (compare with Neh 5:14–19; 13:10–13). The quotation from Christ (v. 35) is not recorded in the four Gospels (see Jn 21:25).
Prophecy is the gift of the Holy Spirit to speak the will of God authoritatively. This gift is given to both men and women (see 1Co 11:4, 5), and many holy women were prophets, including Miriam (Ex 15:20, 21), Deborah (Jdg 4:4), Huldah (4Kg 22:14), Isaiah's wife (Is 8:3), the Virgin Mary (Lk 1:46–55), and Anna (Lk 2:36–38).
This same Agabus is mentioned in 11:28. Here he prophesies in the style of the OT prophets, using an ordinary object to illustrate his message (see Is 20:2; Jer 13:1).
Paul meets with James, the bishop of Jerusalem, who reports that many Jews have set themselves against Paul. While neither Jews nor Gentiles find salvation through the Law, James encourages Paul to demonstrate his compliance with the Law in order to gain the trust of the Jewish Christians in Jerusalem.
For a Gentile to enter prohibited precincts of the temple area was a serious offense punishable by death.
21:31 Since Jerusalem is under Roman occupation, disturbances like this were held in check here by the Roman commander.
21:36  Away with him was the same cry shouted against Jesus at His trial (Jn 19:15).
The Egyptian, according to Josephus the historian, claimed to be a prophet and led a group of 30,000 to the Mount of Olives, telling them the walls of the city would fall at his word. Felix, the Roman governor, attacked the rebels and killed thousands of them, but this false prophet and some of his followers fled into the wilderness.
Brethren and fathers is a respectful form of address (7:2), showing that Paul treats even his enemies with courtesy.
Again, Paul begins at a point with which his listeners would be familiar, first identifying with his hearers before trying to bring them to a new understanding (see note at 14:15–17). Paul is careful to mention his relationship with important Jews (Gamaliel, v. 3; Ananias, v. 12) both to calm and to identify with this crowd at the temple.
In apostolic understanding, being baptized is directly equated with the cleansing of sins (see notes at 8:36–39; 10:48).
22:17 Trance means a religious ecstasy or a direct vision of God's divine energy.
In spite of Paul's attempts to moderate the wrath of these Jews, the mere mention of Gentiles sets them off against him, demanding his death.
Scourging was a form of punishment in which prisoners were bound in a stooping position with their hands tied behind their backs, and whipped with leather lashes that had bits of bone or metal in them. This punishment could be inflicted on non-citizens either to extract a confession or as a penalty for a crime. For Roman citizens, it could only be used if the person had been found guilty of a crime.
God often works through secular leaders (see 23:23). Here, the civil authority wants to interrogate Paul more thoroughly, which allows Paul all the more opportunity to proclaim faith in the Resurrection.
This council is the Jewish Sanhedrin, the highest Jewish governing body.
Ananias was high priest during AD 47–59. He was a hard and violent man who was later assassinated by his own people at the start of the Jewish war against the Romans (AD 70). Paul has thus far said nothing offensive to the Jews, and St. John Chrysostom calls the order to strike Paul “shameless” and without cause.
Paul accuses Ananias of the ultimate hypocrisy: violating the Law while posing as one who judges according to the Law. Paul nevertheless shows great respect for the holy office of the high priest even though the officeholder himself was contemptible.
Knowing that his interrogators will not hear him impartially, Paul intentionally divides the council against itself by bringing up the heart of the Christian faith: the resurrection of the dead.
The Pharisees confess both: Why is the word both used when three things are mentioned? According to St. John Chrysostom, angel and spirit refer to one entity or concept. Thus both refers to belief in the resurrection and belief in a realm of angels or spirits.
Paul receives comfort from the Lord in the face of the impending plot on his life (vv. 12–16), and a prophecy of both his preaching and his subsequent death at Rome. For the word witness can also refer to martyrdom.
23:23 God often works through secular leaders (see also 22:30). Here the commander (v. 19) protects Paul from assassination, which allows God's plan to unfold for Paul to preach in Rome (v. 11). The third hour of the night is 9:00 p.m.
23:24 Felix was the Roman governor from AD 52–59.
Antipatris was a town halfway between Jerusalem and Caesarea which had a military outpost.
Herod's Praetorium was a palace and fortress built decades earlier by Herod the Great. It was later taken over by the Roman governors as their official residence.
The presence of the high priest indicates the vigor with which the Jewish leaders sought Paul's destruction.
Since Paul has broken no Roman law, Tertullus the prosecutor tries to present Paul as a social agitator who could stir up trouble at any time. Roman authorities were very particular about keeping peace and order.
24:11 Twelve days: Part of Paul's defense is that he had not been in Jerusalem long enough to gather people and start a riot.
Paul again affirms the unity between Christianity (the Way) and God's promises in the OT (see 8:35; 13:17–41).
24:17 This is the only time Paul reveals that bringing alms was the main reason he came to Jerusalem, showing that charity is to be performed without drawing attention to oneself (Mt 6:1–4; see also Rom 15:25–28; 1Co 16:1–4; Gal 2:10).
Though Paul has now been in prison for two years (24:27), his Jewish opponents are still determined to kill him. Festus denies their request for a trial in Jerusalem, not so much to protect Paul as to underscore his own authority by having the trial at his headquarters in Caesarea.
25:7 Compare Mk 14:56, 59.
Perceiving that Festus might yield to the Jewish authorities, Paul appeals to Caesar. It was the right of Roman citizens to be tried before the imperial tribunal in Rome. This course of events allows the Lord's prophecy that Paul would preach in Rome to be fulfilled (23:11).
King Agrippa is Herod Agrippa II, ruler of Galilee. He is the son of Herod Agrippa I (12:1–23), who beheaded James and imprisoned Peter, and a grandson of Herod the Great (Mt 2:1), who slaughtered the infants in Bethlehem. Bernice is Agrippa's sister.
As I supposed: Because of the turmoil and the pressure being placed on him by the whole Jewish council, Festus assumed that Paul must have committed some staggering crimes.
Again, the course of events allows for a large group of influential people to be exposed to the gospel message (see 26:2ff).
Paul's trial here is strikingly unusual in that there are no actual charges against him, yet there is already an appeal. As Festus would look incompetent sending a man to Caesar on appeal without any charges, this hearing has to be held in order to come up with a legal accusation (compare Jn 18:29–35).
This is the third account in Acts of Paul's conversion (see 9:1–8; 22:1–21 and notes).
The Greek word for reason (sophrosune) would be better translated “good judgment.”
26:26 This thing was not done in a corner: A proverb meaning something was done publicly and was widely known, here a reference to the Resurrection of Christ (v. 23).
Agrippa was of Jewish blood and familiar with the OT (v. 3). If he believed in the OT writings, he would have to take Paul's proclamation seriously.
Though not legally necessary at this point, Paul's appeal serves the advancement of the gospel in two ways: (1) it protects him from his enemies, and thus a teacher of the gospel is kept alive; and (2) it allows the gospel to be preached in Rome (23:11).
The term friends here refers to other Christian believers.
The Fast refers to the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur), which falls in late September or early October.
I perceive: Paul gave a personal opinion (rather than a prophecy), in contrast to the professional opinion of the helmsman (v. 11), so that the others would listen to him later when the ship was being torn up (vv. 21–25). The fact that the voyage did not result in the loss of lives does not mean that Paul was wrong; rather, it indicates that if the natural order of things had not been superseded, men would have died. Instead, God intervenes, and the people are spared (vv. 30–34).
The skiff: A small boat or dinghy pulled by the ship, which could be used for expeditions to land.
The Syrtis Sands: A sandbank on the north coast of North Africa.
27:18 Lightened the ship means throwing the most expendable cargo overboard to compensate for having taken on water in a storm.
Since Paul's earlier words had proven true (see v. 10 and note), the centurion was now inclined to trust Paul, resulting in all the people on board being saved.
Paul's actions express both the Jewish and Christian practice of giving thanks to God before a meal. This expression of thanks in the midst of a terrible storm teaches us to be thankful to God even when circumstances appear hopeless. It also helped those on the ship to have confidence in Paul and to be more inclined to listen to him. Note the high level of trust they placed in Paul, for even though there were so many people (v. 37), they threw out the rest of the food based on his words.
According to St. John Chrysostom, the destruction of the ship serves several purposes. It shows: (1) the severity of the danger, and thus the power of Paul's prophecy (v. 22); (2) that people are ultimately to depend on God rather than earthly things, for God saved the men when the ship was unable to; and (3) the importance of having holy people dwell among us, for they guide us to safety according to the will of God.
28:2 Natives is literally “barbarians,” which simply means they were not cultured and did not speak Greek.
28:3 The apostle Paul does not cease to be a servant of others.
Though their understanding of God is flawed, these natives are deeply spiritual and on some level recognize God as being present everywhere, directing the course of human events. According to St. John Chrysostom, they have a far better understanding of God than worldly philosophers.
The natural kindness of the residents of Malta (v. 2) increased all the more as they saw the works of God being done among them.
The Twin Brothers of Greek mythology were sons of Zeus and were considered protectors of sailors.
Syracuse was a major seaport in Sicily.
Brethren are Christians. By AD 60, there were numerous churches scattered throughout the empire, including one in Puteoli. From this point, Paul's company traveled on foot.
The Jews had a strong and well-organized community in Rome. As was his custom in every city, Paul spoke first to the Jewish leaders concerning the gospel of Jesus Christ (see 13:45).
The hope of Israel means the resurrection, which Paul has made central in his preaching (see 23:6). This chain refers to his imprisonment under house arrest.
That Christianity was spoken against everywhere shows the tremendous influence it had already in Rome. The Jews in Rome were more open to the gospel than the Jews in Judea.
Paul's preaching finishes here where it began: proclaiming (1) the Kingdom of God and (2) things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. These two interrelated subjects are still the content of the preaching and teaching of the Orthodox Church. No one forbidding him: Imprisonment did not stop Paul from bearing witness to Jesus Christ, for the gospel cannot be hidden (Mt 5:14). The story of the Acts of the Apostles continues through their successors in the Church to this day.
St. Paul is a bondservant, a slave to Jesus Christ. Apostle: one who is sent. The gospel of God: the good news of salvation in Jesus Christ. This gospel fulfills what God promised in the OT (v. 2), which is realized in the Incarnation of the Son of God (v. 3). This gospel also reveals the Trinity, for it is from God the Father (v. 1), it concerns His Son (v. 3), and it is according to the Spirit (v. 4).
Jesus Christ is one Person with two natures: human and divine. His divine nature is from all eternity and is revealed in that He is both God's Son and the Lord. His human nature is revealed in His being born of the seed of David according to the flesh: He was conceived and born of the Virgin Mary while never ceasing to be God.
Christ's resurrection did not make Him the Son of God, but rather declared Him to be so. The truth of His divinity, which had been veiled from the world, is revealed fully in His Passion and Resurrection.
1:5 Obedience to the faith can mean either acceptance of the gospel of Christ itself, or the virtue of obedience practiced by those who believe in His name.
New believers are called by the Church to a life of faith. It is not up to us to create the Church, for the Church existed before us. Rather, we are called to enter the living historic Church of Jesus Christ as she exists today.
St. Paul shows a pastoral concern for the Roman Christians even though he was not the founder of the church at Rome. He thanks God for them (v. 8), prays always for them daily (v. 9), and longs to see them (v. 11).
Paul had not yet visited Rome when he wrote this letter. This epistle contains the core of apostolic doctrine essential for the foundation of a local community. For this reason, the Church reads Romans immediately following Pentecost, the season in which we celebrate the spread of the gospel from Jerusalem to the ends of the world.
Paul was hindered in coming to Rome because of his missionary work among the other Gentiles. Though Paul's personal desire was to go to Rome, he submitted to God's will by first accomplishing what God had planned for him in these other places.
St. Paul is not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, thus setting an example for all believers (see Lk 9:26).
The righteousness of God is to be in a continuous state of communion with Him. This state of being right with God originates with God and is accepted by mankind in faith. From faith to faith: We first receive Jesus Christ by faith and then live in Him by that faith.

“The just shall live by faith” is one of the passages of the OT (Hab 2:4) most quoted in the NT. It shows the harmony between both testaments and summarizes the theme of Romans: faith is a way of life. The righteous (just means “righteous”) are those who not only believe, but live righteously in accordance with their faith.
1:18 The wrath of God is His righteous and holy judgment. It is not a loss of temper or self-control, but the revelation of His divine truth, love, and power confronting those who reject Him (see Mt 25:41–46; 2Th 1:6–10; 2:8).
All humanity can recognize “natural revelation,” that is, God's energy or power and His transcendence (Godhead), by simply observing the glories of creation. Thus, the rejection of God cannot be excused by the claim of ignorance, for even “the heavens declare the glory of God; / The firmament shows the creation of His hands” (Ps 18:2).
1:21 Humanity by nature worships. Some seek to worship the Creator, while others worship the creation. A brief definition of being fully human is giving glory and thanks to the true God. Those who refuse to worship Him become darkened in their hearts.
Homosexual behavior, men with men, is a vile rejection of God's order for creation. These passions are against nature and therefore spiritually devastating. Error means “delusion.”
While sexual immorality is not the only way man is given over to unrighteousness, it is often more destructive than other sins and thus receives specific attention here (see 1Co 6:12–20). Those who focus only on sexual sins fail to see that all sin separates man from God and leads to destruction. Covetousness is a sinful passion directly opposite the virtue of thankfulness—it is being unsatisfied with the blessings already received and having an insatiable desire for more. Murder also includes hatred towards another (Mt 5:21, 22). Whisperers are people who gossip. Inventors of evil things are those who cooperate with the devil to discover new forms of wickedness. Those who approve (v. 32) of sins such as homosexual behavior, greed, and rebellion against parents are as guilty as those who commit them.
Not only will the unrighteous experience God’s judgment (1:18–32), so also will the self-righteous.
2:2-16 See the article, “The Basis of God's Judgment” in this chapter.
2:14-16 A Gentile is counted as a Jew—as one of God's people—when his conscience leads him to righteousness the way the law leads a virtuous Jew.

The law written in their hearts (v. 15) refers to a person's conscience. Because man's conscience is God-given, it has the same power to lead a person to God as the law does. According to St. John Chrysostom, those who are able to follow their conscience to God are more virtuous than those with the law, for they do not have the advantage of concrete instructions yet still desire to please God (however, see 3:1, 2).
Many Jews relied on knowing the law for their righteousness, when in fact they did not obey it. Knowing the law does not make one a guide to the blind (v. 19); it is keeping the spirit and heart of the law that makes one a guide to others.
2:25-27  Circumcision is an outward sign of the law, valuable only when accompanied by interior conversion and love for God. Those who are uncircumcised but virtuous will judge the circumcised.
The name Jew comes from “Judah,” which means “the Lord be praised.” A true Jew is one who seeks praise . . . not from men but from God. The goal of the legalist is to have praise from men; the goal of the spiritual person is to please God.
While the Gentiles can find God through their conscience (2:14–16, 25–29), they are not better off than the Jews. The Jews have the advantage of the oracles of God (that is, the Law and the Prophets) to lead them all the more to God. The advantage to the Jew is pedagogical; they are taught more thoroughly and more precisely about God. Nevertheless, this advantage does not make the Jew any more righteous than the Gentile, for all are under sin (vv. 9, 23).
Let God be true but every man a liar means God remains faithful to His word and to His creation, while man is continually unfaithful to God.
These quotations from the OT speak to the questions Paul asks in vv. 1–9.
3:19 Since the law reveals sin, all the world is accountable before God by the very presence of the law.
The law cannot justify a person (that is, bring them into an ongoing state of communion with God) because that is not the purpose of the law, nor does it have that power. The purpose of the law is to reveal the knowledge of sin—that we have fallen from communion with God—in order to turn our hearts to repentance.
The law may be kept by obedience (Lv 18:5) and by faith (Dt 30:14). Obedience without faith cannot bring anyone to righteousness. Yet faith, even apart from the law, can bring a person to righteousness, because Jesus Christ supersedes the law.
The ultimate purpose of man's existence is to attain the glory of God. Even if a person were to keep the whole law, he would still fall short of that glory, because he would still be bound by death. The glory of God is both eternal righteousness and eternal life. Jesus Christ alone lived in completed righteousness, and He alone was resurrected from the dead. Therefore, He alone is the fullness of the glory of God, and we receive that glory in Him (see Jn 14:6).
Being justified refers to an ongoing state of righteousness and not merely to a one-time event. This justification requires a redemption: a sacrificial offering capable of (1) setting us free from sin and death, and (2) uniting us eternally with righteousness and life. In the OT, this sacrificial offering was prefigured by blood sacrifices—the killing of physically perfect animals for the temporal remission of sins (see Heb 9). Under the new covenant, Christ is the sacrificial offering that once for all eternally frees us from sin and death (Heb 10:14) and by His grace unites us with righteousness and life.
To propitiate means “to cover” or “to conciliate.” Propitiation refers to the mercy seat in the tabernacle where God was enthroned among His people (Ex 25:17–22). Once a year, on the Day of Atonement, the blood of the sacrifice was liturgically sprinkled on the mercy seat in the holy of holies. This prefigured the covering of our sins and our reconciliation to God that was to come in Jesus Christ. Heaven holds the true mercy seat (Heb 9:23–26; 10:19–22), and Christ's blood was taken to heaven through His Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension, thus reconciling us to God once and for all.
Ongoing faith in Jesus is the way mankind receives God's righteousness. Justification (being made righteous) by faith is not a one-time “not guilty” verdict, as some may teach. Rather, it is Christ living in us, and we in Him (Gal 2:20). Thus, to be justified is to be in communion with Jesus Christ in an ongoing, dynamic, and growing life with Him. The relationship between God and His people is one of Shepherd to sheep, Master to servant, and Father to an adopted child.
The law teaches us that: (1) Attaining righteousness through works alone is impossible (v. 27). (2) Righteousness is attained by faith and is a gift from God (vv. 27, 28). (3) God is impartial—Jews and Gentiles are justified on the same basis of ongoing faith in Jesus Christ (vv. 29, 30). There is “no difference” (JohnChr) between the terms by faith and through faith (v. 30). (4) By teaching justification by faith in Christ, Christians establish (or uphold) the law (v. 31), because Christ Himself fulfills the law (Mt 5:17).
Even Abraham experienced righteousness in the sight of God through faith, and this completely apart from works of the law, for the law had not yet been given. If this holds true for the Jews' founding father, it is true for all Jews. Because Abraham responded in faith to God's promise (Gn 15), he was accounted righteous, or justified (see note at 3:24). Only through faith in God can the ungodly be justified (v. 5).
Faith not only predated the law, it remained active during the time of the law. As revealed in Ps 31, David discovered what Abraham had known: being forgiven comes by God's mercy through repentance, faith, and humility, not by works of the law.
Because Abraham was circumcised as a sign of God's covenant, he is father to all Jews. Yet Abraham was living by faith when he was 75, but was not circumcised until he was 99 (Gn 12:4; 17:24). During this time of being uncircumcised, he was still righteous before God by faith; thus he is also the father of uncircumcised believers, the Gentiles. Imputed (v. 11) means “reckoned” or “rendered.” This term does not refer to a mere legal standing, but indicates that God's righteousness is actually given to mankind by grace. This righteousness transforms the whole person, internally and externally. Those who say God's righteousness is merely an external declaration or fiat that does not really become ours experientially miss the point and fall short of the truth. God's righteousness is a gift that indeed becomes our own, leading us to godliness (see article, “Deification” at 2 Peter).
Righteousness does not come through genetic or ethnic ancestry. Though the law requires one to become a Jew, this law only brings about wrath (v. 15). Why? Its purpose is not to save, but to make man aware of his sin or transgressions. True righteousness is based on God's promise (v. 14) and is received by faith. The righteous are those who receive God's promise in faith and not those of the law (v. 14), that is, those who are merely physical offspring of Abraham. The true descendants of Abraham are the believers, for he is the father of all who believe, whether Jew or Gentile.
Jesus died for the forgiveness of our offenses. If He had been a sinner, the law would have condemned Him as it did everyone else. But He is and has perfect love, and He is without sin. Thus, He perfectly fulfilled both the letter and the heart of the law, and the offering of Himself on the Cross is our justification (see note at 3:24).
Faith in Christ makes us justified, an ongoing state of communion with Him (see note at 3:24). Because of this ongoing communion, we have peace with God which is also ongoing. The Greek word pistis, here translated as faith, can also be rendered “faithfulness.” Faith is more than the conviction that something is true (Jam 2:19). Genuine faithfulness is continuous loyalty and obedience to God. Such faithfulness justifies a person through God's grace.
Christians ask, “How can I experience the love of God and pass it on to others?” St. Paul offers the answer here.
5:6 The ungodly are all of us. Because of sin, everyone stands in alienation from God, and we do not have the capacity to become righteous on our own. Because of God's love, Christ died for our sins to bring us the gift of righteousness.
Those who accept and appropriate Christ's love are reconciled to God, being restored to peace and communion with Him. God has not ceased to be our Friend, for He is unchangeable. We are the ones who have changed and thus need changing. So while we were still rebellious enemies of God, God was working in His love to restore us.
For Adam and Eve, sin came first, and this led to death. This death then spread to all men. The rest of humanity inherits death, and then in our mortal state, we all sin. Thus, all mankind suffers the consequences of Adam's “original sin.” However, the Orthodox Church rejects any teaching that would assign guilt to all mankind for Adam's sin. We indeed suffer the consequences of others' sins, but we carry guilt only for our own sins.
5:13 Until the law came, sin worked freely in the world. From Adam to Moses, people suffered from mortality and committed all manner of sin. They were accountable to God for their sin under natural law (1:18–21; 2:14–16). But without the written law, the seriousness of their sin often remained clouded. God gave the law to Moses to expose the magnitude of man's sin (see note at 4:13–18).
After Adam, our sin could not be said to be in the likeness of his sin, because only Adam's sin brought mortality to our race. Yet the law of sin and death reigned because man overwhelmingly continued to sin in rebellion against God. However, among both Jews and Gentiles, some kept the law of nature and the law of Moses on the basis of inner faith. Yet these still suffered the death that reigned over humanity. Adam is a type, a prefiguring or a foreshadowing of Christ as the head of humanity. As the first man, Adam caused death to reign in the human race. As the new and perfect Man, Christ brings eternal life to humanity.
5:15-17  Just as immortality is far superior to mortality, so also the grace of Christ exceeds the death we inherited from Adam. For by grace, not only is Adam's sin covered, but the sins of the whole world are covered as well. In other words, justification in Christ far exceeds condemnation through Adam (v. 16). As we all inherited Adam's mortality (v. 15), we shall all inherit Christ's immortality. This saving gift (v. 15) must be received through faith. Though all will be raised, some will be raised to eternal life while others will be raised to eternal judgment (Jn 5:28, 29).
Many were made sinners refers to man's subjection to mortality and becoming prone to sin. It does not mean that man inherits the guilt of Adam's sin, nor does it mean that our sinning is completely inevitable. However, the first thing damaged in Adam's nature was his will, and in our corrupted state, this weakened will is prone to falling into sin.

Christ has two wills, one human and one divine. His human will is totally and willingly subject to the divine will. Through Christ's obedience, healing is brought to man's human will. Therefore, many are made righteous and are able by grace to participate in God's righteousness. Indeed, many saints become so filled with grace that they pass extensive periods of time without sinning, for they allow the healing power of Christ to fill their human will.
The law was given as a temporary measure on God's part to reveal sin and to lead us to repentance and faith (Gal 3:23–25). Instead of decreasing under the law, sin abounded even more. This increase of sin amplifies our awareness of our fallen state and serves as an impetus to “bring us to Christ” (Gal 3:24).
Opponents of St. Paul twisted his summary of God’s past dealings with humanity, and instead applied it to individuals. They accused him of saying, “Sin increases grace, so let us increase sin!” (3:8 paraphrased). This argument misses the fact that a person must be allied with one side or the other. If one is willfully living in sin, he cannot experience union with God. Even if grace is increasing, he is destroying himself, and for that he is responsible. Increase of grace honors God when its power leads us to become dead to sin.
To have died to sin does not mean our human nature has died. Rather, it means we are no longer held captive by it. We are to be immovable towards sin as something dead would be.
Freedom from sin is grounded in the sacrament of holy baptism. Ignorance of what happens when we are baptized is a great enemy. Through this ignorance, many are defeated in their battle against sin. What Christ accomplished on the Cross—an actual death to sin—baptism accomplishes in us: an actual death to sin and our liberation from its power. Because our baptism into Christ gives us power over sin, it is an exact likeness of His death. Baptism does not merely “stand for” this truth, but is itself our death to sin.
United together with Christ refers to being planted and growing together in Him, clearly implying the expectation of fruit. In the likeness of His death means baptism causes a real unity with Christ's death. We also shall be in the likeness of His resurrection is literally translated, “we shall be of the resurrection,” referring both to the new life of baptism in this world and to eternal life in the age to come.
6:6 Knowing this refers to our understanding that baptism is a reality, not merely an outward symbol. Old man does not refer to human nature as such, but to the power of sin in fallen man that once held sway over us. The body of sin is not the human body, but all iniquity. “Just as he calls the whole sum of wickedness ‘old man,’ again the wickedness which is made of the different parts of iniquity he calls ‘the body’” (JohnChr). Thus, it is sin itself that is crucified with Him, and not some kind of “sinful nature,” for sin is what we do, not what we are.
A physical body, once it is dead, makes no response to its environment. So we who died with Christ in baptism must not respond to the promptings of sin, for we are freed from sin.
When bondage to sin has died, it must be replaced with something else. For those who are baptized, the replacement is Christ's resurrected life. We shall also live with Him means both a righteous life on earth after baptism and eternal life in the Kingdom to come.
6:10 Christ was never under the control of death or sin, yet He chose voluntarily to die to sin for our sake. In Christ, we too can voluntarily die to sin through baptism. As Christ's death is once for all, so also for us there is never a second baptism. Constant repentance renews our baptism as we grow in our relationship with God.
6:11 A shift in emphasis comes here, from what Christ has done for us (vv. 1–10) to our response to Him (vv. 11–14). Reckon is an action verb, relating to faith: we lay hold of our union with Christ and thereby lay hold of every virtue.
The command to not let sin reign proves that sin's power over man is not absolute. Rather, it is something we allow by our free will. Man's will was the first aspect of human nature damaged through sin, and therefore it is the first thing Christ heals. His healing allows us to make true choices against sin. While sin continues to plague humanity, those who are baptized into Christ have the power to overcome sin through their union with Him. Lusts refers to all the passions of the flesh and spirit that make demands on the will. In Christ, a person can resist and defeat these lusts through righteous exercise of the will.
Instruments (lit. “weapons of war”) are in this case various aspects of human nature, especially the body. Though God created our members good, we may use them to serve either of two rulers, sin or God. For those who live out their baptism, the choice is clear.
Having completed his references to baptism, Paul initiates another discussion: Christians are no longer to sin as those who sinned during the period of the law. Those under law did not have the power of baptism. The law exhorted people to battle sin; the grace of baptism gives people the power to battle sin and win.
Though we choose our master freely, we are always a slave to someone or something. Only obedience to God leads us to righteousness, making us heirs of salvation rather than slaves of sin (8:14–17).
Baptism frees us from being slaves of sin if we continue in obedience to God. The form of doctrine refers to the apostolic teachings of the Church (see 2Ti 1:13).
Human terms are the images of slavery by which Paul expresses the fallen human condition, for God does not want us as slaves but as children (see 8:14–17). If previously we served sin so well, certainly we are now empowered to serve righteousness even more effectively.
While one is enslaved to sin, one does not know enough even to be ashamed of it. But having received the gospel, one realizes how shameful the life of sin is and can clearly see its end: death.
6:22 Slavery to God, initiated by baptism, is actually freedom (see note at v. 19). Only this freedom can bear the fruit of holiness and everlasting life.
Wages are something earned; thus death is earned by man through his sins. Eternal life is never earned, but is a gift. No human actions, no matter how good or noble they may seem, can earn eternal life, for it is only through the grace and love of God that life everlasting is given to us.
Paul has affirmed that justification, our ongoing communion with God, comes by faith in Christ and not by following the works of the law. These verses use examples from the law to prove our ultimate need to be free from the law. Under the Law of Moses, only death releases a person from marriage (v. 2), while divorce does not (v. 3). Likewise, Christ's death brings about our death to the law so that we can be married to another, that is, to Christ (v. 4).
Flesh here refers to unredeemed man under the power of sin and death. In this condition, sinful passions are awakened when man faces the demands of the law (see vv. 7–10). Aroused by is more properly translated “aroused through.” The law merely brings to light our bondage to sin; it does not cause us to sin.

Christian believers, on the other hand, live in a new mode of existence by the power of the Holy Spirit. As we have been liberated from the ways of the flesh, in our marriage to Christ (v. 4) we bear fruit to God. Letter (v. 6) refers to the Mosaic Law.
The law was intended to reveal the depth of humanity's sin so that we would turn to Christ in repentance and faith. The law also had the effect of increasing rebellion and sin in many people. This is not because the law itself is bad, but because unredeemed humanity craves to do what is forbidden.
7:13-17 The passions driving us to sin get even stronger when we fight against them on our own, and the clarity of right and wrong found in the law increases the passions all the more. Only Christ's healing power can save us in this battle.
Man is not sinful by nature. The Orthodox Church rejects any teaching that man has a “sin nature” or that man's nature is depraved to the core. This passage clearly shows that sin is something distinct from our nature. Because we are created in the image of God (Gn 1:26), there is an indelible goodness in our nature that can never be undone. While we can become immersed in sin, we know that it is still not part of our nature, but a foreign force that dwells in us. Thus, sin is what we do, not what we are. See also v. 20.
Paul clarifies the distinction between the will of the soul and the will of the flesh. Because the soul is reborn in baptism, it can strive to follow the law of God (v. 22). Yet our flesh remains corrupt in this world, and it often fights against our will to do good.
This question is answered in 8:1–4. The term body of death refers to our corrupted state in this world; it does not imply that the body is evil, for the body is good. In this world, however, it remains in need of final redemption.
The conclusion is far from hopeless, for the final blame is not to be found in man's nature, nor in the law, but in sin itself.
Repentant sinners will have no condemnation if they remain in Christ Jesus through faith and baptism and if they walk in the power of the Spirit.
The law of Moses failed because of the weakness of human nature. The term sinful flesh does not imply our nature is inherently sinful, but that our flesh has become corrupt and given over to all manner of sin (see 7:17). Christ fulfilled both the law and human nature by becoming flesh Himself. Christ did not sin, for He came in the likeness of our sinfulness, but did not succumb to it. In doing so, He condemned sin itself, destroying its power over mankind. In Christ, human nature has final victory over sin.
The mind here is far more than intellectual capacity. It is the highest knowing faculty of the soul (Gr. nous), the spirit and understanding behind all we think and do. Thus, it follows that repentance literally means to have a “change of mind,” a change not only of intellect but of all our being.

To be carnally minded (v. 6) means to choose to have one's whole being captivated by sin. This decision against God puts us at enmity with Him (v. 7), and thus we have no lasting peace. To be spiritually minded means to accept liberation by the Spirit, so that one's whole being—body, mind, and soul—becomes directed by and is led to the Holy Spirit.
The Spirit of Christ declares the intimacy between the Son and the Holy Spirit. The Son becomes incarnate by the Holy Spirit (Mt 1:20) and in turn sends the Holy Spirit from the Father into the world (Jn 15:26; 16:7).
Though the body is dead (it is mortal) because of sin, the Holy Spirit gives new life, both now in this world and in the promised final resurrection.
8:13 The gift of new life requires the reception and cooperation of the believer through faith and obedience to God. We are His children (v. 14) as He leads us by the power of the Spirit. In this new life, the body becomes the follower, not the leader. In choosing the way of the Holy Spirit, we put to death sinful passions expressed through our thoughts, words, and deeds.
8:14-17 Christians are adopted as children of God (v. 16) and therefore heirs (v. 17) of the same Kingdom Christ inherited when He ascended in the flesh into heaven. This standing is given by grace; what Christ inherited by His own nature, we receive as a gift. Our adoption (v. 15) is a fact of our baptism. Yet it rests on us to receive the love of this adoption by continuing in faith and turning constantly toward God. The experience of this adoption allows us to address God with the intimate term Abba, which means “Papa” (v. 15; see Gal 4:5–7).
8:15 The spirit of bondage refers to a return to the law. Israel feared God as a slave would fear a strong master. Under the new covenant, we are no longer slaves but by adoption are part of God's family, the Church.
8:17 Joint heirs with Christ reveals that everything Christ is by nature, the Father gives to us by grace. See the article, “Deification” at 2 Peter.
Note the contrast between sufferings and glory. As Christians, we have God's glory in us, though His glory is not fully revealed (see also Col 3:3, 4). In the Orthodox Church, the icon of the Incarnation, the Virgin Mary holding the Christ Child, is on the left side of the door to the altar, while the icon of Christ as Ruler is placed on the right side. Thus we proclaim that Christ has come first in the Incarnation and will come again in glory as Ruler and Judge. We learn that we live in a tension between our present and future experience of the Kingdom, one marked by both sufferings and glory.
Glorious liberty is the resurrected life the children of God will experience in the age to come. Then our wills, free from the corruption of the flesh, will be at liberty to follow God completely.
Hope is more than wishful thinking, more than optimism. It is settled confidence concerning things to come. This hope is so sure that we can patiently endure suffering in anticipation of Christ's Kingdom.
Believers do not know how to pray effectively. The guidance of the Spirit in prayer aids in overcoming our weaknesses by teaching us how to pray and by interceding directly for us when our own prayers are inadequate. The Fathers identify three stages of prayer: (1) saying the words of prayers; (2) saying the words with meaning and concentration; (3) praying without the words, when one is so filled with the Holy Spirit that human words become inadequate, the highest form of prayer.
The Scriptures and man's experience both bear witness that all things work together for good to those who love God. Setbacks and difficulties there will be, but God turns them into “light affliction” (2Co 4:17, 18; 12:9, 10). God has foreknowledge of all things.

Predestined must not be understood as overpowering man's free response, for man's free will is a gift from God. Nor does the term apply to individuals. Rather this term (which can also be translated “preordained”) means that God has a specific calling for His people from before the beginning of the world. “God does not will evil to be done, nor does He force virtue” (JohnDm). Based on His foreknowledge, God assures, or predestines, that those who will choose to love Him will be conformed to the image of His Son, that is, glorified.
These verses summarize all that has preceded in the Epistle to the Romans. Because of (1) God's love for us, (2) His victory over sin and death, and (3) our life in His Kingdom, we can withstand all the assaults of the world and the devil and arise from these attacks as more than conquerors (v. 37). We conquer sin not by our own strength, but only through God.
Angels, principalities, and powers are spirit beings of various angelic ranks. While nothing external can separate us from the love of God, we can choose to reject Him by our own free will. Nevertheless, even those who remain in eternal rebellion against God are still loved by Him. Even our rejection of God cannot take away His love for us.
St. Paul had many opponents who accused him of failing to love his fellow Israelites.
Jewish unbelief is illuminated by Paul's description of a twofold Israel: one spiritual and the other physical. God is faithful to all Israel, but the issue is this: Who is a true child of Abraham?

It is not Abraham's children of the flesh (v. 8), his natural or biological offspring, who are his true children. If this were the case, the children of Hagar (Gn 16:4, 15) and of Keturah (Gn 25:1–4) would be Israelites. Furthermore, not all those in Isaac's line are Israelites; otherwise Esau and the Edomites would be. Abraham's true children are the children of the promise (v. 8), that is, those who are in Isaac (v. 7), which means faithful believers. Because Isaac was miraculously conceived through God's promise, which Abraham believed (Gn 18:10–15; 21:1–7), it is those who continue in this faith who are Abraham's true offspring.
Both Jacob and Esau were born of Isaac and Rebecca, yet only Jacob is considered the seed of Abraham. Jacob's position is clearly not the result of mere human lineage, but is secured because he is the child of the promise. Both Jacob and Esau were called to salvation, for God loves all equally. Esau I have hated (v. 13): This does not mean God did not love Esau. Rather, God foresaw the wickedness Esau would choose and hated it. Likewise, God foresaw Jacob's faith and obedience and knew Jacob would serve His purposes.
9:14-18 At Mt. Sinai, some of the idolatrous Jews perished while others survived (Ex 32; 33), though God does not explain why He made this distinction. Likewise, Pharaoh opposed God, and thus God used his arrogance to accomplish the divine will. The actions of God's will are neither capricious nor vindictive, but are based in divine mercy and compassion. Even though mankind does not understand the basis of God's decisions (see Is 55:8, 9), we trust His grace and righteousness, upon which our salvation rests.
Man can have no complaint against God's sovereignty any more than clay can question the potter about how he fashions it. When we recognize our standing before God, the objections vanish (see Job 38:1–42:6). It is not only impossible to answer questions of this kind (vv. 22–24), but it is presumptuous to raise them (JohnChr).
After first instructing his hearers how presumptuous it is to question God's sovereign will (vv. 19–21), Paul nevertheless gives an answer. The proof that God's judgment is based in mercy is shown by how long He endured with much longsuffering those who were in rebellion against Him. In other words, God gave his enemies every benefit and every opportunity to repent, though they deserved none. In this way, His wrath is justified and the glory He grants believers is complete. Vessels of wrath are unbelieving Jews and rebellious foreign nations (see vv. 14–17). The vessels of mercy are believing Jews and Gentiles.
The OT prophets had foreseen God's sovereignty and man's salvation in several ways: (1) He makes the outcasts (Gentiles) to be His people and sons (vv. 25, 26); (2) He saves only a remnant of the Jews (vv. 27, 28); and (3) He forbears to utterly destroy the unbelieving Jews on account of the faithful remnant (v. 29).
The first answer to the question of Jewish unbelief was from God's standpoint: His sovereign will (vv. 6–29). Here, Paul gives the second part of the answer, which is man's free response: faith. The Gentiles who had been unconcerned with righteousness now attain it through faith in Christ. God mercifully overlooks their former unrighteousness because it was practiced in ignorance (Acts 17:30). By contrast, the Jews fail to attain even the righteousness of the law, for they do not pursue the law by faith but by works (v. 32). Because they only saw the letter of the law, they missed both its spirit and its profession of Christ, the Lawgiver, who was to come. Because they saw the letter of the law as being greater than its fulfillment, Christ becomes their stumbling stone (v. 32).
Paul wishes nothing but good for Israel, but their zeal is not based in truth. If they had merely been ignorant in their rejection of Christ, then their offense would certainly be pardonable. However, theirs was more than ignorance, for it was not that they simply did not know Christ, but they were bent on establishing their own righteousness rather than submitting to the righteousness of God. In other words, they trusted in themselves and their works and rejected the way of faith when it was presented to them.
Christ has always been the way of salvation in both testaments. The law prepared people for Him, while His coming was the end of the law and the fulfillment of God's righteousness.
The way of the law and the way of faith are contrasted. Whereas mere obedience to the law has always failed, faith in Christ brings salvation. Faith does not doubt (vv. 6, 7), but trusts in Christ. Faith makes God near to the believer (v. 8). Faith transforms the whole person, heart, soul, mind, and body (vv. 9, 10).
This confession and belief are more than simply mental acknowledgment that something is true. Rather, this belief refers to placing one's whole trust in the resurrected Christ and living with Jesus as one's Lord. Only the giving of the whole self to Christ is belief unto righteousness.
Belief and confession (vv. 9, 10) were both OT themes, Isaiah emphasizing the faith of the heart (v. 11), and Joel emphasizing the confession of the mouth (v. 13). Both prophets teach that grace and faith are universally offered to all people.
From 9:1–10:13, Paul left the Jews with no excuse for rejecting the gospel. Paul insists that God fulfilled His part completely, giving the Jews extraordinary opportunities to come to faith. God sent His message throughout all creation; Israel heard but did not believe (vv. 16, 18, 21). Therefore, God turned to the Gentiles, who heard and believed (vv. 19, 20). The Jews demanded signs, yet God had given them the continual sign of fulfilled prophecy.
Jewish unbelief in Christ raises the question of whether or not God cast away His people. The answer is, Certainly not! If He had done so, not one would have been saved. But Paul himself was being saved (v. 1), and there is a remnant (v. 5) of Jews who believed. Elijah prefigured this remnant when he thought that he alone followed God (vv. 2-4). As only a few heeded Elijah in his day, so only a few heed Jesus and His apostles. God's grace saves the willing. Israel is not willing, for she seeks (v. 7) righteousness on her own terms through works of the law and not through faith in Christ. God has given them a spirit of stupor (v. 8) as a result of their refusal to believe, not as the cause of it.
Though Israel has stumbled by her refusal to believe in Christ, it is not necessarily inevitable that she should fall permanently. The jealousy she feels toward the Gentiles has the potential to lead Israel to repentance and faith. Furthermore, Israel's fall has led to the conversion of the Gentiles, thus renewing the opportunity for Israel's own salvation.
Paul addresses the Gentile believers, reminding them not to be puffed up against the Jews, for (1) Israel's heritage is holy (v. 16); (2) the Gentiles have been grafted in to an existing tree, and thus owe gratitude toward the Jews (vv. 17, 18); and (3) the Gentiles are just as much at risk of falling away from grace through unbelief as the Jews (vv. 20, 21).
The tree which is wild by nature refers to the pagan and godless ways of the Gentiles before their encounter with Christ. The cultivated olive tree refers to the nation of Israel, which had been prepared for Christ through the law, and the remnant of the Jews that believed in Him.
The mystery which explains the unbelief of so many Jews is that the Gentiles are now being united to the remnant of the faithful Jews, and thus this body of believers together form the true Israel. (In Gal 6:15, 16, St. Paul calls those “in Christ Jesus” the “Israel of God,” which is the Church.) This true Israel is not based on biological ancestry but on faithfulness to God's Deliverer, the Messiah. In this understanding, all Israel will be saved (v. 26).
11:30-32 Paul reminds the Gentiles that they have no superiority over the Jews, for both Jew and Gentile were subject to disobedience, and both receive salvation only through God's mercy.
This benediction ends the first part of Romans, which has laid the theological foundation of our communion with God in Christ and clarified the relationship between Jew and Gentile in Christ. From this point forward, Paul uses this doctrinal base to address pastoral issues facing believers in Rome in their attempts to live out this faith in daily life. Forever is literally “unto ages of ages.”
A faithful relationship to God changes our relationship to the world. To be conformed to this world is to stand for and pursue the world's values and pleasures. Mind (Gr. nous) here is more than the intellect; it is the highest faculty of human nature, encompassing the mind and heart. With this faculty one sees and comprehends God.
We live out our faithful relationship to God in the Church, the body of Christ, with humility (v. 3), sober thoughts (v. 3), and proper use of spiritual gifts (vv. 4–8). Ministry requires functioning together in diversity. The seven gifts mentioned here (vv. 6–8) should not be understood to be exhaustive; rather these gifts represent all the infinite gifts God has given to us.
While a believer is justified by faith (see article, “Justification by Faith” at ch. 5), this faith is intimately united to good works, which are genuine expressions of true faith. Faith and works cannot be separated.
Vengeance is perfect and righteous judgment, which only God is capable of carrying out. Evil is overcome only by good, which the Son of God Himself demonstrated on the Cross and which believers are called to emulate.
To defy the civil government is to defy God, for God works in and through the governing authorities. This principle holds true so long as the civil ordinance is not in opposition to God, but promotes good works. When civil rulers are in direct opposition to God, the believer must follow God (see Acts 4:19; 5:29).
13:4 Because the civil government is established by God, St. Paul calls a civil authority God's minister. He is responsible to protect those who are good and to execute punishment on those who practice evil.
Believers are commanded to be subject to civil authorities not only for fear of earthly punishment (because of wrath), but because they know that in obeying the authorities, they are obeying God (for conscience' sake).
The night is life in this world, and especially life under the influence of sin and evil. The day refers to the presence of Christ's Kingdom, both in the Church now at hand and fulfilled completely in the age to come.
In Orthodox Christianity, there are things that cannot be compromised, and there are areas of flexibility. God is gracious and allows diversity in doubtful things (v. 1), matters not related to essential doctrines and moral teachings. The weak in the faith are people who assign primary importance to secondary matters. The two examples of flexible areas given here involve food restrictions (v. 2) and the observance of liturgical calendars (v. 5), things which the weak might try to use to judge others or to divide the Church. In both cases, we are commanded to give flexibility to others, just as God Himself does (v. 3).

This passage is read on the eve of Great Lent, reminding the faithful that the main focus of the season is not on the details of fasting restrictions, but rather on overcoming passions of the soul (13:14).
Because we are the Lord's, we have no business judging others' practices based on our own ideas, prejudices, or cultural heritage. These things cause us to lose sight of the fact that we are united in Christ, who is our one Lord and Judge.
A mature conscience in Christ knows that no food is unclean of itself, and also knows it must use discretion so as not to be a stumbling block to others. We behave righteously to be (1) acceptable to God and (2) approved by men (v. 18).
Those who have strong faith can follow their conscience before God and avoid sin. According to St. John Chrysostom, those who are weak in faith may sin, not because the action is wrong in itself, but because in their hearts they think they are betraying God and proceed anyway. This action is sin because it does not come from that person's faith.
15:1-3 Bear with does not mean “to put up with,” but rather “to carry together” (see Gal 6:2). It is in imitation of Christ, who bore all of humanity's weaknesses, that the strong in faith lovingly and joyfully identify with the weaker believers.
The bounty of mankind's hope can be found in the Scriptures. It is through the witness of the Scriptures that we learn of the patience not only of Israel and the Church, but of God. Likewise, it is through the promises, victories, and spiritual struggles recorded in the Scriptures that we find true comfort.
From the OT Scriptures, Paul demonstrates the unity in Christ between Jew and Gentile that was foretold.
Paul recognizes that his lengthy letter to Rome—a church he did not found—is bold in teaching and counsel. He seeks to soften possible offense by expressing confidence in the Romans' own gifts, and by referring to his special commission from God to be the apostle to the Gentiles, including those at Rome (see 1:13–15; Acts 23:11).
Minister is literally “liturgist” (Gr. leitourgos); ministering is doing the work of a priest. Offering (Gr. prosphora) is a reference to the eucharistic liturgy, in which bread is sanctified by the Holy Spirit. Paul uses this imagery to speak of the Gentiles themselves, who are being offered to God as the Body of Christ and are sanctified through that offering, just as the bread is sanctified in the liturgy.
The fulfillment of both preaching and faith is righteous works done by those obedient to God.
Paul's missionary work involved preaching mostly in virgin territories (v. 20). While the Church in Rome had been flourishing for some time, Spain (v. 24) was unevangelized.
15:27 The Jewish Christians have passed on to the Gentiles the great gift of the gospel. In return, the Gentiles are bound to share their material things with them (1Co 9:11).
Phoebe was a leading Christian woman who was both a deaconess (servant here is lit. “deaconess”) and involved in missionary work. St. John Chrysostom notes that Paul holds her in the highest esteem, as he names her first. “He has added her rank by mentioning her being ‘deaconess,’” and he recognizes “her as being a saint.”
Priscilla and Aquila were a married couple, Jewish business people, and Paul's coworkers (see Acts 18:18, 26).
Prisoners: We know of no imprisonment of Paul in Corinth, where Romans was likely written. According to St. John Chrysostom, Paul is not referring to literal imprisonment, but to his subjection to all kinds of persecution and afflictions (2Co 6:4–10).
Those who serve their own belly are either selfish people or those who caused divisions over dietary rules (see 14:1–6). Simple (Gr. akakos; vv. 18, 19) does not mean unintelligent, but rather innocent, trusting, and truthful.
While Paul is the author of this epistle (1:1), Tertius wrote it down as Paul's secretary. Paul frequently dictated his epistles to a scribe (1Co 16:21; Col 4:18; 2Th 2:17; Phm 19).
Dismissals in Orthodox services are patterned after scriptural benedictions such as this one by Paul. Mystery here refers to God's plan of salvation revealed in Jesus Christ. Obedience to the faith is essential for all believers. Before the celebration of the Eucharist, the Creed is recited by all the faithful to demonstrate a unity of faith. Forever (v. 27) is literally “unto ages of ages”—a frequent refrain in Orthodox prayers and liturgy.
Since Paul is called to be an apostle by the will of God, men cannot remove him as some were trying to do. A Sosthenes is also mentioned in Acts 18:17 as the ruler of the synagogue at Corinth. Probably this is he: there are stories of his spectacular conversion in early records, which also report that Sosthenes became bishop of Caesarea.
Despite disorder, disunity, and error among the Corinthians, the apostle still calls them the church of God, sanctified in Christ, and saints, those set apart to God. Baptized into Christ, united with Him, this Church by His mercy is one with the faithful everywhere.
Grace is God's unlimited, unconditional, uncreated love, freely given to those who do not deserve it. Peace is our reconciliation with God and with each other. “Peace to you,” found repeatedly in the OT, is the common everyday greeting then and now throughout the Middle East. “Peace be to you” in the Orthodox Divine Liturgy is connected to the reading of the Gospel, the kiss of peace, and the Lord's Prayer. Jesus gave to the disciples the gift of peace, which is the presence of the Holy Spirit (Jn 14:27; 20:19).
1:4 Nothing is so acceptable to God as our thankfulness for His grace, both to us and to others.
Revelation implies that although He is not seen, yet the Lord Jesus Christ is present even now, and then shall appear in glory. The Second Coming of Christ is a main point in Paul's teaching, for then our salvation will be clearly revealed and fully known.
Though he will later rebuke this church severely, Paul's assurance concerning their gifts and calling is sincere. For God's grace is given to the Church in every place, even in Corinth.
Here for the first time Paul rebukes the Corinthians, pleading with them in the name of the Lord to put away divisions and maintain unity in the church.
Chloe was a prominent woman who hosted the Corinthian church in her home and who faithfully reported these contentions to Paul.
Apollos was a learned Jew from Alexandria, Egypt, “mighty in the Scriptures” (Acts 18:24). Originally a follower of “the baptism of John” (Acts 18:25), he was taught more fully about Christ by Priscilla and Aquila at Ephesus, and he later preached at Corinth, where some saw him as a rival to Paul. Tradition tells us Apollos became the first bishop of Crete (see Tts 3:13). Paul makes it plain that he and Apollos are partners in apostolic work and that Apollos would not approve of the factionalism in Corinth (3:4–6; 4:6; 16:12).
Is Christ divided? Or is the Church? The answer to all questions in this passage is no. One can leave the Church, but not divide it! Factionalism, however, brings great harm to the Church, for it seeks to give to the apostle a place only Christ should occupy (vv. 13–17). Many looked upon the apostles as teachers of philosophy rather than preachers of the Cross (1:18–2:5). The factious do not accept true wisdom, which is bestowed by the Spirit (2:6–3:4), and they misrepresent the apostles as rivals to each other rather than as fellow workers with Christ (3:5–23).
Crispus had been the ruler of the synagogue at Corinth (Acts 18:8). Converted through the preaching of Paul, then baptized, he was apparently succeeded as ruler by Sosthenes (Acts 18:17). Gaius was a resident of Corinth with whom Paul was staying when he wrote the Epistle to the Romans (Rom 16:23). The third epistle of John (see 3Jn 1) seems to have been directed to this same Gaius.
Paul's denial does not degrade baptism; he is simply emphasizing that baptizing is not his primary role. As an apostle, Paul's primary job is to preach the gospel (v. 17), teaching those seeking God to be baptized. The one who performs a baptism is God's instrument; the convert's loyalty must be to God alone.
Wisdom of words (v. 17) refers especially to philosophical thought and rhetorical devices. Such human wisdom by itself does not promote salvation or an understanding of how God works in the world and what He wishes us to do.
1:18 Why is the message of the cross . . . foolishness to unbelievers? “It is a mark of them that perish not to recognize the things which lead to salvation” (JohnChr). We who bear witness to Christ must not be discouraged when those outside of Him mock, for so did once even Paul himself. Being saved, present tense, refers to the process by which the Cross transforms us with the power of God.
To those who request a sign, the Church offers one: the Cross! The Cross is to be adored, for wherever the sign may be, there Jesus will be.
Since Christ is the power and wisdom of God the Father—the brightness of the Father's glory (Heb 1:3), the substantial and perfect Image of the invisible God—where He is, there is the uncreated and saving grace of God. His Cross restores man to immortality and stirs up desire for the things of heaven.
The base things of the world are “those persons who are considered to be nothing because of their great insignificance” (JohnChr). There is no such thing as a “no-account” Christian (v. 27; 2Co 12:9).
2:4-5 Great preaching is not with “swelling words” (2Pt 2:18) but with (1) the anointing of the Holy Spirit and (2) the dynamic of God's power.
The mature (Gr. teleioi) are the “spiritual” (Gr. pneumatikoi) of v. 15. Mystery here is the gospel of the Kingdom (see Rom 16:25; Eph 3:3, 4, 9; 6:19; Col 4:3; 1Ti 3:9, 16), which neither angels nor any other creature knew before it was revealed by Christ, even though the Incarnation of the Son was God's plan from eternity for transforming creation. Moreover, that Gospel is hidden from those who perish (2Co 4:3). Those who will not believe do not grasp what is clear to the faithful.
The Lord of glory demonstrates that the dignity and honor of Jesus is that of God the Father Himself (Ex 24:16–18). The incarnate Son of God, who clothes Himself “with light as with a garment” (Ps 103:2), stood naked before human judges, receiving blows from hands which He had formed. The Lord of Glory, the Son of the Father, was crucified in His humanity (Acts 2:36). They crucified God!
Paul seems to have collected phrases from several passages (Is 52:15; 64:3; 65:17; Jer 3:16; WSir 1:10), though this may have come from an early hymn.
We come to know God's wisdom through the Holy Spirit, for the Holy Spirit knows the things of God (v. 11), just as the spirit of the man knows what is in man. Note Paul's threefold classification of humanity:

(1) The natural man (lit. “soulish”; v. 14) is one not yet joined to Christ, unenlightened and unregenerate. For such people, divine things appear to be foolishness because they inquire into divine things by human and natural reasoning rather than receiving these by faith.

(2) The spiritual man (2:15) is filled with the Holy Spirit given at chrismation and is maturing in his knowledge of Christ.

(3) The carnal man (lit. “fleshly”; 3:1) is the person who, while in the Church, has his mind set on earthly things, still trying to satisfy personal wants and selfish desires.

We reveal our spiritual condition by our relationships with other Christians. The lesson is plain: Growth in our fellowship with God demands living in the overcoming strength of the Holy Spirit, who brings unity to the Church and great victory over petty, egocentric squabblings.
Enlightenment from God in itself is beyond all words, and even beyond evaluation by other men (v. 15). Nevertheless, the Holy Spirit speaks through spiritual people words that truly reflect the unspeakable knowledge of faith. This language of faith in turn leads spiritually minded people to know God better, although it baffles the natural man (v. 14).
The mind of Christ is enlightenment by the Holy Spirit (v. 10). He brings those chrismated into communion with Christ and others of like mind in His Body, the Church.

The mind of Christ, then, is not private but is given to all: it is the mind of the Church.
3:1-4 Note the gospel was first communicated through the spoken word of the apostles. Since God inspires both oral (apostolic preaching) and written (scriptural) communication of His Word, oral and written Tradition form a seamless whole.
The Church is an organic whole: it is (1) planted (vv. 6–9), (2) a building (vv. 9–11), (3) a temple (vv. 16, 17). In vv. 16, 17 you is plural and refers to the whole Church. One who would break this unity would desecrate a sacred place.
Fellow workers (Gr. synergoi) refers to the biblical concept of synergism, shown here by the way the apostles work together with God in carrying out the ministry. So too, we as God's fellow workers cooperate with Him to do His will. By this cooperation or synergy with God, we do not mean a working together of equals, or a so-called fifty-fifty arrangement. Rather we mean that He is the Lord, and we His servants are called to participate obediently in His work.
3:18-20  The wisdom of this world (v. 19) is attractive and reasonable, and on the surface appears to be true. But such earthly wisdom denies God and leads us away from Him—not to fulfillment, but to death. True wisdom and life are found only in Christ, in our total abandonment to the love of God and neighbor.
Yours and you here are plural. They refer not to the individual but to the corporate Church. The Church possesses the whole, all things, because the Church is the Body of Christ—His perfect and glorified humanity—and Christ is God. Individual opinion in doctrine and private interpretation of Scripture that stand apart from those of the Church, or outside of apostolic tradition, are marks of worldly wisdom.
Here, as in 2:15, judge (Gr. anakrinein) is difficult to render in English. Anakrinein is comparable to the investigation that takes place before and during a trial and preceding judgment; krinein (v. 5; Mt 7:1), to rendering of a verdict. Many Corinthians prejudged Paul as an unfaithful steward; some denied his apostolic authority (see Introduction to 2 Corinthians). For Paul it is improper for them, or even for himself, to prejudge his life, for Christ is the Judge.
In the expression, beyond what is written, most likely Paul refers to the whole OT, reminding the Corinthians that all Scripture urges us not to be proud or contentious. Puffed up in Greek suggests the swollen inflammation around an infected wound; it may be rendered “arrogant” (vv. 18, 19; 5:2).
Paul directs a series of sharp questions to the Corinthians to deflate their pride. Nothing justifies thinking ourselves better than or above anyone else.
Irony and sarcasm are bitter medicine, and Paul uses them here (vv. 8–13) with full force. The three parallel statements we are fools, we are weak, we are dishonored are heaped upon each other in a stinging series. The relative comfort of the Corinthian Christians is contrasted with the persecuted, poverty-stricken and uncertain life of the apostles (vv. 11–13; see Mk 6:4; 9:35; 10:31).
The apostles have endured all kinds of humiliation, being treated as filth, and instead of fighting back have responded with love toward their persecutors—all for the joy of serving Christ and reconciling the world to God.
Paul soothes the soreness of his rebuke by reminding them of his fatherhood (see the note on Mt 23:9, 10). As in a family, so in the Church, maturing children need parental guidance. The apostle to the Gentiles—thus to most Christians—writes imitate me because he imitates Christ (11:1).
Paul will soon visit Corinth and face those who prejudice him to see if any power (Gr. dunamis) lies behind their word. Citizenship in the kingdom of God, discovered in the Church, does not consist in mere talk, but is manifested in a growing life of grace.
Sexual immorality (Gr. porneia, from which we get “pornography”) originally meant prostitution, later immorality in general. In this case of incest, his father's wife is not the man's own mother, but a stepmother. Even so, this sin is grievous among Jews and Gentiles alike.
The Greek word for mourned (pentheo) is also used in the Septuagint to refer to (1) grieving for the dead, and (2) sorrow over unrepentant sinners (see Neh 8:9; Is 24:4; Dan 10:2; Am 8:8). Taken away from among you refers to excommunication.
5:4  My spirit (Gr. pneuma) is Paul's human spirit, which is being sanctified by the Holy Spirit.
In the Church there is protection from the destructive power of Satan (Mt 16:18). This protection is here removed through excommunication in the hope that, having experienced the difference between God's rule and Satan's, this offender may repent and in the end be saved. The flesh (Gr. sarx) is not synonymous with “body” (Gr. soma; see v. 3). Paul is calling for the destruction not of the body but rather of the lusts of the flesh.
5:6-8 The Israelites were to remove the leaven (v. 7) from their houses in preparation for Passover (Ex 12:1–30), the remembrance of their freedom from Pharaoh's bondage. Christ, crucified and risen, is our Paschal lamb, our Passover. United to Him in baptism, our life becomes an unending deliverance from evil. Since our life in Christ includes keeping the feast (v. 8), Passover fulfilled in Eucharist, the old leaven of malice and wickedness must be continually removed from us personally and corporately.
My epistle to which Paul refers is apparently lost. There is evidence Paul wrote letters which were lost and not incorporated in the NT canon (see Col 4:16).
5:12-13 Those... who are outside is an ancient Semitic expression for those outside the community of God (see WSir, Prologue; Mk 4:11; Col 4:5; 1Th 4:12; 1Ti 3:7).
Before the unrighteous refers to judges of secular courts at Corinth. Paul asks, why seek justice before the unjust and not before the saints, their fellow Christians? This is the biblical basis for church courts.
Saints will judge the world (v. 2) and angels (v. 3) because in Christ, Christians share in His authority to judge (see Mt 19:28; Jn 5:22, 27; 2Pt 2:4; Jude 6; Rev 20:4). This being so, how much more are we able to judge the everyday concerns of this life (v. 3)?
Love of litigation is a love of greed, hatred, and retaliation. Christians ought to be possessed of generosity, mercy, and forgiveness. To let yourselves be cheated is to turn the other cheek (see Mt 5:39).
6:9, 10 As to those who will not inherit the kingdom of God, see 15:50; Gal 5:19–21; Eph 5:5; Rev 21:7, 8; 22:15.
6:11 Salvation includes being washed in Holy Baptism, sanctified through the giving of the Holy Spirit in the oil of chrismation, and justified through our faith. Such were some of you shows that in Christ we can be set free from the very worst of sins (see vv. 8–10).
6:12 All things are lawful for me may be a statement Paul made in Corinth sometime earlier (perhaps regarding the Mosaic cleanliness code) which the libertines took out of context as their slogan. The apostle sets the record straight: without discipline and discernment through obedience to Christ, freedom from law is slavery to sin.
The libertines in Corinth—as some do today—argued that illicit sex (adultery and fornication) is as necessary for the body as eating, and both are irrelevant to the spiritual life. Paul contends the body belongs to God, and everything is relevant to the spiritual life. Therefore, dealing with sin means controlling our bodies. This is why in the Orthodox Church abstinence from foods is the first discipline of the Fast, which also includes prayer and charitable giving.
When Paul calls our bodies members of Christ (see 12:12; Rom 6:13; 12:4, 5), he is reminding us of our union with Christ in baptism (see Rom 6:3–10). Fornication is therefore a sin to be fled in horror, for it joins Christ to harlots. “We have many improper wishes, but we must repress them, for we can” (JohnChr).
Temple here refers to the individual Christian as a dwelling place of the Spirit.
Paul's personal preference is for celibacy, but he knows this is a “gift from God” (v. 7) that is not given to all.
The mutuality of marriage, the equality of commitment, that Paul enjoins here is unprecedented in his era. Speaking of husband and wife, St. John Chrysostom teaches neither “is master of himself . . . they are servants to each other.”
While periodic ascetic practices, including temporary abstinence from sexual relations for the sake of prayer, are good, sexual abstinence by married people for other reasons and at other times is usually unwise.
It is wise to consider marriage rather than to insist upon the virtue of chastity and fight a losing battle against sexual passion.
If a Christian couple cannot stay together, the two alternatives are to remain unmarried, that is, separated, or be reconciled. Divorce is hated by God (Mal 2:16), a last measure, a great calamity. Paul forbids remarriage while the first spouse is still living (v. 39).
In Judaism the family was joined to the covenant through the father. But in the Church, the family is holy if either spouse is a believer (see also 2Ti 1:5). This does not mean that all are saved, but all are affected by the faith of a Christian spouse. The family is a spiritual unit: if one member is a Christian, the whole family is set apart by God's grace.
7:17-28 When the Lord has called (v. 17) us into His salvation, we do not change our ethnic identity (vv. 18, 19) or our occupations (vv. 20–23), and we certainly do not rush out and get married or divorced (vv. 25–28)—though Paul's counsel is a preferred option, not a command. Keeping the commandments of God is what matters (v. 19).
7:26  The present distress probably refers to the trials and tribulations of life just before the glorious coming of Christ, which Paul perceived as imminent (vv. 29–33).
Paul expects an imminent end of this age. The time is short; it is better to minimize obligations in this age—without being irresponsible—in order to be prepared for the age to come.
It is not clear whether any man is the father or the fiancé of the virgin, but in any case the option of her marriage is left open.
Though Paul once again recommends the unmarried state, he affirms the holiness of marriage and gives the widow a choice: to be married ... in the Lord (v. 39), that is to another Christian, or to remain as she is (v. 40).
Throughout the Roman Empire, animals were sacrificed to pagan “gods” at feasts and public occasions. Part of each offering was used in a ceremonial meal or went to the donor; the remainder was often sold in public meat markets. Christians had a dilemma. Should they eat meat that had been offered before idols? The Jews had prohibitions, but the Christians believed an idol is nothing. Paul answers they are correct in principle (v. 8), but they must think about other people's consciences (vv. 9, 10). Love of God and of fellow Christians compels Paul not to eat such meat (v. 13).
Of whom and through whom do not speak of the divine nature, but of the relationship of the Father and the Son to us.
Paul's apostleship is under attack; in this chapter he defends it.
The effectiveness of the clergy is certified by the spiritual condition of the sheep.
Clergy must be given material support to be free to sow spiritual things. God saw to this under the Old Covenant (vv. 8, 9), and Paul implies that most Christian pastors are similarly supported (vv. 5, 6).
9:24-27 Using contemporary terms from the sports of running (vv. 24, 25) and boxing (vv. 26, 27), Paul shows the proper use of ascetic practices in the life of faith. They are valuable not in themselves, but for the sake of the goal of salvation. As training prepares an athlete, so spiritual discipline prepares a Christian to exercise faith and enter the Kingdom.
Paul often uses I do not want you to be unaware or a similar formula (Rom 11:25; 12:1; 2Co 1:8; Col 2:1; 1Th 4:13) to introduce a matter vital to the Christian faith.
Israel's liberation from Egypt by Moses prefigures our liberation from sin by Christ. The cloud is a symbol of the Holy Spirit; the sea, of water and baptism; the Rock (v. 4), of the body of Christ, His humanity; and the spiritual drink, of Christ's blood. Jesus Himself linked these events of the Passover with the Eucharist when He established it (Mt 26:17–29).
In spite of her baptism in the Red Sea (v. 2) and her spiritual eating and drinking (vv. 3, 4), Israel still fell into idolatry and sexual immorality.
The lessons of the OT, here those surrounding the Passover (vv. 1–5), are examples for us, that we might not repeat the same mistakes.
The English word communion (Gr. koinonia) is the correct translation; the alternative, “fellowship,” is too weak. For at Communion, at the Eucharist, there is a real participation in the body and blood of Christ. Just as Christ's human body is united to Him, so we are united to Him. As many grains become one loaf, those who take this communion become one in Christ.
Israel after the flesh is the Israel of Judaism as contrasted to the true Israel, which is the Church, the Israel of God (see Gal 6:16).
10:19-22 All worship is sacramental, even false worship. To genuinely offer a sacrifice is to unite spiritually with the object of that offering. An idol (v. 19) by itself is nothing, but behind them lurk demons (v. 20) waiting for someone to partake of them. The Christian offering is the once-for-all sacrifice of Jesus Christ. We are not to engage in any worship contrary to or in competition with the Eucharist of Christ.
Christians are obligated to obey only one law: the law of Christ, the law of love. This obligates us to what is helpful (v. 23) and edifying to the other's well-being (v. 24). We therefore continually seek the good of others in every way.
10:25-33  Since God created everything, everything is clean (v. 26), even what was once used in idolatrous worship (vv. 25, 27). However, offending a fellow Christian in nonessential matters breaks the law of love, the bond of unity (vv. 28–30). If we say that it affects no one but ourselves, yet we must do what is to the glory of God (v. 31), or else we offend God. The salvation of all is more important than the rights of the individual (v. 33). A right is never inalienable if it alienates us from others. Note that Paul assumes Christians say a prayer at meals (v. 30).
Remember is primarily a word of liturgical prayer: The Corinthians constantly pray for their apostle in their corporate prayers. Delivered (Gr. paredoka) refers to the passing on of authentic apostolic tradition. Keep the traditions refers to obedience to what has been delivered—God-given oral tradition, from which Paul taught. He makes no distinction between the authority of his written and his oral instruction.
When the Corinthians come together (v. 17) as the Church, they reveal the world, not heaven. For divisions (v. 18, Gr. schismata) and factions (v. 19, Gr.airesis) are contrary to the Church, which is one and indivisible. Paul finds only one good thing in this ungodly disorder: God's approved (v. 19) faithful are shown to be trustworthy.
The agape meal held before or after the Lord's Supper (see vv. 33, 34; also 2Pt 2:13; Jude 12), was intended to build and unify the community in Christ. It gave the rich opportunity to serve the poor, for everyone brought food and shared it—an ancient potluck supper. When the Corinthians come together, however, they experience drunkenness and gluttony, not Christ and His Body, manifesting not God's love (Gr. agape) but self-love.
Received (Gr. parelabon) and delivered (v. 23) refer to the transmission of Holy Tradition. These words were part of the eucharistic celebration in the first century just as they are today. Remembrance (vv. 24, 25; Gr. anamnesis) is far more than thinking back about something; it is participation in it. In the Eucharist we participate in Christ's human nature, His body and His blood. The Jews were permitted to eat meat but not blood, for the life is in the blood (Lv 17:11), and life belongs to God. Now the Israel of God, the Church, breaks this fast and feasts, as it were, by eating Christ's body and drinking His blood in the Divine Liturgy. We proclaim the Lord's death till He comes (v. 26), for we presently celebrate the Eucharist in Christ's invisible presence, though one day we will feast with Him face to face in His Kingdom.
To receive Christ's body and blood in an unworthy manner means coming to Him with hidden immorality (6:18–20), disunity (v. 18), doctrinal heresy (v. 19), or disorder (vv. 21, 22), failing to see the gifts of God as holy things for holy people.
We prepare for the Eucharist by examining ourselves. This includes confessing our sins and being reconciled to one another in the sacrament of repentance (Mt 5:23–26). In the Orthodox Church this confession before God is done in the presence of a priest, who visibly represents Christ (Mt 16:19; 18:18–20; Jn 20:23), and in general prayers of confession. Being “worthy” does not mean being sinless, but being cleansed. It is not legalism but commitment to walk in righteousness before God.
There is such power in the body and blood of Christ communicated to us in the eating and drinking of His gifts (Jn 6:54–56) that to do so in willful disregard of the Lord could result in sickness and even death.
11:31-32  God's promise is that if we judge ourselves we will not be condemned with the world (v. 32).
11:33-34 The agape meal, connected to the Eucharist, was conducted with the same dignity as the Eucharist. While the Corinthian church ate before Communion and present-day Orthodox Christians fast, the spirit of their eating was the same as our fasting: preparation.
12:1 The Corinthians were ignorant not of the spiritual gifts but of how they were to be used in service to God.
It is possible to get carried away and led into error. For not all gifts are from the Holy Spirit. Demons lurk behind dumb idols (v. 2), speaking evil prophecies through the religious ecstasies of their priests (see Acts 16:16). Religious ecstasy or enthusiasm is no proof of spirituality.
The sign of the Holy Spirit speaking is when Christians say from the heart, Jesus is Lord. Every time we say the Nicene Creed sincerely at the Divine Liturgy, for example, we are gifted by the Holy Spirit to do so.
Every true gift and ministry in the Church manifests the Holy Trinity: the Spirit (v. 4), the Son, the Lord (v. 5) Jesus Christ, and the Father, God (v. 6). While the working out of our chrismation is primarily the grace of the Holy Spirit, it is the work of the Trinity as well. Note there are diversities or differences of gifts and activities; no two Christians are alike.
The purpose of spiritual gifts is the growth of the whole Church. “A charism is a gift of the Holy Spirit given for the benefit of others. But no person possesses all the gifts” (BasilG).
This list of nine gifts is not exhaustive (see 14:1–5; Rom 12:6–8; Eph 4:7–12).
Paul here moves from the gifts in the Church to the members of the one body of Christ. Note how the many members are to work as one.
12:14-18  A remarkable passage that leaves no room for a spiritual inferiority complex (see also vv. 22–24). Every member of Christ's body is important to the overall life and work of the Church.
There is no such thing as an “individual” Christian. Being “knit together in love” (Col 2:2), we are called in Christ to suffer together, be honored together, and rejoice together.
There is a hierarchy of honor in the Church of the NT as there is in the Church today. The apostolic work, that of the bishop, sets the pace for all the rest. When the oversight is in order, the rest of the Church is free to function at the optimal level. But even with all the gifts in place and operative, there is something more excellent (v. 31). It is the love of God, the true sign of the presence of the Holy Spirit.
St. Basil the Great teaches there are three reasons, all biblical and all God-given, that people follow the Lord: (1) fear (Pr 1:7); (2) obedience, a recognition that because He is God we must follow Him (Acts 5:29); and (3) love (1Jn 4:19). And while we must aim to do all things out of love, we also must not cease fearing God and obeying Him. To a church preoccupied with tongues, Paul teaches the ultimate gift: love.
Love outshines prophecy and all faith. It is of far greater value than the miraculous ability to remove mountains.
Jesus urges us to “give to the poor” (Mt 19:21) and to lay down our lives for others (Jn 15:13). But even such a selfless act done without love profits us nothing.
How do we know we are acting with love (v. 4)? This passage gives specific characteristics of love: (1) it suffers long, is patient (1Th 5:14); (2) it is kind, gentle, especially with those who hurt (Eph 4:32); (3) it does not envy, is not jealous of what others have (Pr 23:17); (4) it does not parade itself, put itself on display (Jn 3:30); (5) it is not puffed up, arrogant, proud (Gal 6:3); (6) it does not act rudely, brashly, mean-spiritedly, insulting others (Ecc 5:2); (7) it does not seek its own way, act pushy (10:24); (8) it is not provoked or angered (Pr 19:11); (9) it thinks no evil, does not keep score on others (Heb 10:17); (10) it rejoices not in iniquity, takes no pleasure when others fall into sin (Mk 3:5); (11) it rejoices in the truth, is joyful when righteousness prevails (2Jn 4); (12) it bears all things, handles the burdensome (Gal 6:2); (13) it believes all things, trusts in God no matter what (Pr 3:5); (14) it hopes all things, keeps looking up, does not despair (Php 3:13); (15) it endures all things, “puts up with everything” (JohnChr), does not wear out (Gal 6:9); (16) it never fails. The only thing love cannot do is fail (16:14).
The gifts of the Spirit, wonderful as they are, are temporary and incomplete. They are for this age, while we are “children” (v. 11). But love continues into the age to come: it is eternal, complete, and fulfilling.
The Scriptures differentiate between being dependent on God, or childlike (Mt 18:3), and being childish or immature.
We are to desire or want the gifts of the Spirit, but pursue the love of God. St. John Chrysostom notes the difference. “Chase” love, he writes. “Make every effort” to retain her. To find this love one “strains himself, and leaves not off until he lay hold of it.”
In the Orthodox Church, what about one who speaks in a tongue? Historically, God judged the builders of the Tower of Babel (Gn 11:1–9), dividing their unity by confusing their language. At Pentecost Vespers we hear, “Of old there was confusion of tongues because of the boldness of the tower builders.” Then, “God condemned the infidels.” But at Pentecost, “the Spirit of Christ illuminated the fishermen.” At Babel, there was “confusion of tongues.” At Pentecost, “the vision of tongues has been renewed.” In the Church, as in the NT, the gift of tongues is last on the list of the gifts (12:10, 28), temporary (13:8), primarily for the edification of the one who speaks (v. 4), and difficult to understand (vv. 11, 14). St. John Chrysostom concludes that tongues are “neither altogether useless, nor very profitable.”
Spiritual gifts are for all men, Christians and non-Christians. But tongues do not edify most Christians and fail to convert unbelievers (v. 22), instead repelling them and suggesting that Christians are out of their mind (v. 23).
This is a compassionate exhortation to the one who claims to possess the gift of tongues. This passage explains why the practice of tongues is not a part of the Divine Liturgy, which is to be entered into as God's living word. In worship we know God is truly among us (v. 25) because we have His prophetic word in our ears and upon our lips. Paul is here guiding a church that is severely out of balance. God is not the author of confusion (v. 33), and the truly spiritual can control themselves (v. 32). True spirituality is manifested in preparedness, propriety and order, courtesy, and control. If the Spirit is truly moving, there is peace. This is already a tradition of the Church (v. 33).
An early tradition in the Church is that women shall keep silent and not talk during the Liturgy. While they are permitted to prophesy (11:5) they are not allowed to simply converse (see also 1Ti 2:12). With the spiritual gifts (12:12–27), all are equal in Christ, while the order of the original creation remains in the new creation.
One can picture Paul as he writes thinking back over his hard sayings in chs. 12–14. He is clear: this is God's word, not man's.
Paul delivered an apostolic tradition of Christ's Resurrection which is unchanging and sufficient for salvation (v. 2). How had Paul received his gospel? By direct experience with the risen Lord (v. 8), confirmed by his interactions with the original apostles (Gal 2:2–10) and the whole Church. It is impossible to decipher what he learned where; in Paul's mind, his gospel forms a seamless whole. “To receive” designates the passing on of tradition (see 11:2, 23; Gal 1:9; Php 4:9; 1Th 2:13; 4:1).
This concise statement of the gospel is probably part of an early creed or catechism. (See Ps 16:9–12; Gal 1:4; 1Jn 2:2; 4:10.)
Paul lists those who would testify to the truth of the Resurrection, from the first witnesses to Paul himself.
What is Christianity without the resurrection—both Christ's and ours? His death does us no good without it. What use is forgiveness if we remain dead? His disciples were transformed by His Resurrection, and this they preached above all. On Easter morning Orthodox Christians sing, “Christ is risen from the dead, trampling down death by death, and upon those in the tombs bestowing life.”
15:20 As the firstfruits in the OT were consecrated to God as the representative and promise of later fruits (Ex 23:16), so the Resurrection of Jesus from the dead is the first offering of the resurrection of all who are His (v. 23).
15:22 All people share the same human nature, but Christians have two fathers: first Adam, who became the father of mortality and earthly life, and now Christ, the father of immortality and spiritual life.
The end is the consummation of the Kingdom when Christ's lordship over all will be fulfilled and He will offer creation up to God the Father (see Rom 8:19–23, 32–39). Although the Son (v. 28) shares the same divine nature and dignity as the Father, He is subject to the Father because only the Father is the source of divinity. God being all in all refers to the common lordship of the Trinity over all things, not to pantheism.
The meaning of baptized for the dead is much disputed. Many understand this as vicarious baptism of baptized Christians for deceased catechumens. St. John Chrysostom considered it a derisive comment about the practices of the Marcionite heretics. Epiphanius says it refers to a practice of the followers of Cerinthus, another gnostic teacher.
Fighting with beasts at Ephesus may refer to persecutions there (16:8, 9; Acts 19:21–31).
How will the dead rise? What is the resurrection body like? Paul's most basic contrast is that between the natural (lit. “soulish”; Gr. psychikon) and the spiritual (Gr. pneumatikon, v. 44), that is, between the present body and the deified body. Other contrasts are corruption vs. incorruption (v. 42), dishonor vs. glory (v. 43), weakness vs. power (v. 43), living “soul” (literal translation) vs. life-giving spirit (v. 45), of the earth vs. from heaven (v. 47), of dust vs. heavenly (v. 48), the mortal vs. the immortal (v. 54). This present body is only a seed (v. 38) of the body to come. The “spiritual” body is not a pale shadow of the material world we now know; the opposite is true. The resurrection body is the fulfillment of what God intends for our present body. It is the material fulfilled, not dematerialized.
Whose body is this? As our present body is Adam's, so the resurrection body is that of the last Adam, Christ.
Flesh and blood refers to human nature in its present weak and imperfect condition.
Our basic mortal condition is manifested in sin. We are born mortal; we then become sinful. Thus does death “sting” us before we die. Being a Christian is more than having one's sins forgiven or being good; it is being alive. The law is not sinful, but it exposes sin. And, since it does not provide the power to obey it, it increases sinfulness in unchanged humans (Rom 3:20; 4:15; 5:13, 20; 7:7; Gal 3:19–22).
The doctrine of the resurrection has a practical consequence: It is to move us to do the works that God would have us do, the work of the Lord.
16:1-4 See 2Co 8; 9.
These men apparently were the carriers of the letter Paul answers in chs. 7–15 (7:1). Paul's displeasure with Corinth does not affect his joy for certain Corinthians.
Aquila and Priscilla were Jews who had been among those expelled from Rome by Claudius in AD 49–50. They had resided in Corinth for a while (Acts 18:2) and then moved to Ephesus (Acts 18:26).
16:21 Paul often dictated his letters to a secretary. The proof that he composed this letter is his closing signature.
The source of afflictions is the sin of humanity. The purpose of afflictions, if we use them properly, may be our comfort and salvation, as the Father Himself preserves us through them (v. 3). The means of facing our afflictions is a hope in God that allows us to enter into the afflictions of others in actual, experiential knowledge. In this case, this means people empathizing with their apostle's trials. The communion of saints, spiritual solidarity, is to begin now in the pains of this life.
The godly suffer, in part, so that having experienced God's comfort they in turn can comfort others. Thus, Paul shows the fallacy in his opponents' idea that Christians should never suffer and should be concerned only with their own salvation.
1:8 What this trouble is for Paul is not clear—perhaps a physical malady or persecution. But whatever its nature, it makes him more aware of death and of his dependence on God (v. 9)—and more appreciative of the fellowship of other Christians and of the power of the Church’s corporate prayer (v. 11).
Paul was accused by the dissidents/schismatics in Corinth of speaking murkily, indirectly, by allusion and not by clear, direct statement.
Paul has changed his travel plans. (1) In his earlier letter, he planned to travel to Corinth, passing through Macedonia in northern Greece (1Co 16:5–7). (2) When he felt compelled to go to Corinth immediately, the “sorrowful visit,” he planned to visit Corinth twice (vv. 15, 16); but he actually came only once. (3) In the “sorrowful” letter (now lost), written after that visit, he stated his plan to travel directly from Ephesus to Corinth. Instead, he traveled up through Macedonia (2:12, 13). This was perceived as vacillation by some in Corinth.
1:19  Silvanus is Silas, Paul's longtime coworker (Acts 15:40).
Christ is Yes. He affirms and fulfills God-given promises, though His ways may at times seem strange to men. Therefore, the Church may always affirm Amen to Him—which explains the repeated use of that response in liturgical practice.
Note again the NT roots of Orthodox sacramental life. We are established in Christ (v. 21) through baptism and are anointed and sealed (v. 22) in the Spirit through chrismation.
The real reason for Paul's change in itinerary is graciousness: to spare them a confrontation. The purpose of church discipline is never for the leader to exercise dominion or harsh authority; rather it is to call for repentance, reconciliation with the Church, and renewal in the joy (v. 24) of the Spirit.
True pastoral correction brings both agony for the overseer—affliction, anguish of heart, many tears—and abundant love to the one being disciplined (see Heb 12:5, 6, 11).
Church discipline must not be too severe; that is, it must not go farther than the sin. And not to forgive and comfort (v. 7) the one who repents is itself a sin. Undue separation from the Church through excessive and prolonged discipline increases tension (too much sorrow, v. 7) and even division. This pleases Satan (v. 11), the author of strife and discord; it does not please God.
2:14-17 Our triumph in Christ (v. 14), taken in an ancient Roman context, suggests a magnificent picture of unwilling captive soldiers paraded before the victorious commander's chariot while fragrant flowers are strewn along the way in celebration. The victor is Christ; the captives are the powers of darkness; His fragrance (v. 15) is the apostolic ministry, especially its preaching (v. 17). Christians are the winning forces who triumph through the hearing of the word of God (v. 17) and lead the great procession of thanksgiving leading to life (v. 16).
The outsiders who came to Corinth as prominent apostles demanded evidence of Paul's sincerity. They themselves carried forged epistles of commendation—letters Paul could not match. They maintained Paul was not a genuine apostle.
Paul does not need a commendation in ink (v. 3), for the Corinthians have all experienced the fruit of his ministry; this fruit is of more value than any written epistle. Paul compares the difference between sterile epistles and living spiritual fruit to the difference between the Old Covenant, written on tablets of stone, and the New, written on tablets . . . of the heart. The impostors in Corinth are lifeless legalists. Paul is ministering Christ through the Spirit of God.
This passage holds great hope for the Christian ministry. “Who is sufficient for these things?” (2:16)—the one who places trust through Christ in God (v. 4). The minister gives his all in study and service, but ultimately human power is not sufficient for ministry or for salvation: we must depend utterly on God.
The Old Covenant was external, temporary, and powerless. Under it God was present, and it was glorious with the presence of God. But it was imperfect and imparted a ministry of death because men were unable to keep the Law. Israel had access to God but generally failed to apprehend it. The inner veil of the temple and the veil over the face of Moses spoke of the veil over the hearts of fallen human nature: men could neither adequately approach nor adequately see God. Many even fail to see the Godhead veiled in Jesus' flesh. By contrast, the New Covenant is internal, eternal, and powerful. Under it God is fully present as an unlimited, life-giving glory (v. 9), through the ministry of the Spirit (v. 8) and of righteousness (v. 9). Christians have bold access to God, for there is no veil to separate us (v. 16). The New Covenant is therefore more glorious (v. 8).
The Lord here is a title. In the NT Lord usually refers to the Son. The Father is sometimes called Lord (Mt 11:25; 22:44; Lk 1:32; 4:12, 18; 10:21; Acts 3:22; 4:26; Rev 11:15; 21:22), and the Spirit is referred to as Lord here (v. 17) and in the Nicene Creed: “I believe in the Holy Spirit, the Lord and giver of life.”

There is difference of opinion as to which of the Divine Persons the Lord refers to in each usage here. But Orthodox interpreters all agree that: (1) The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are in no way confused here—Paul has in mind one Person or another. The Son, for example, cannot be the Holy Spirit. (2) The Spirit is a Divine Person, not an impersonal force—though elsewhere in the NT “spirit” occasionally refers to a realm or way of existence. (3) This title here describes how God reigns in the world. It does not describe the eternal relationship of the Persons of the Trinity: the Spirit, for instance, does not proceed from the Son.

Paul is transforming the Old Covenant understanding of one God, the Lord, into Jesus' New Covenant revelation of one God in three Persons, each of whom is Lord. So when one turns to the Lord (v. 16) he turns not just to the Father but also to the incarnate Son (v. 16), in the power of the Holy Spirit (v. 17).
The work of the Holy Spirit brings liberty (v. 17), freeing us to behold God and have open access to Him. Created as the image of God, we see His uncreated image, the Son, the glory of the Lord (v. 18; see 4:4–6), in two ways: (1) through the Son's deified humanity (see 1Co 13:12; Jam 1:23–25) and (2) in the power of the Spirit. As we behold Him, we become what we were created to be. God is infinite; therefore, growing in His image and glory has no limits. We shall ever see God more clearly and ever be transformed into His likeness.
4:1 In the face of numerous onslaughts, challenges to his apostleship, and his responsibility “for all the churches” (11:28), Paul still writes, we do not lose heart (see v. 16). For he is preoccupied with the glories of the ministry of Christ and the mercy by which it is given to him.
4:3-4  The veil is not over the gospel or the apostle, but over the hearts and minds of those who will not believe.
4:5   The goal in preaching is not to glorify ourselves, but Christ.
4:7 The treasure is the light of God's glory in Christ (v. 6); earthen vessels refers to our humanity. As this light shines in and through us, people will see that the power is of God and not of man.
This is victorious, but not trouble-free, Christianity. These trials “show both the power of God and, more, disclose His Grace” (JohnChr).
The Orthodox Faith teaches that salvation in Christ includes: (1) a passage from death to life, from darkness to light (Jn 3:1–6; Col 1:13, 14), through repentance, faith, and baptism (“I have been saved”); (2) a process of spiritual growth and maturation (2Pt 1:2–8) through ongoing repentance, faith, and communion, often called deification (“I am being saved”); and (3) a promise of eternal life (5:9–11; Jn 14:1–6), calling us to perseverance and righteousness (“I shall be saved”). It is this second element, the process of our salvation, that Paul describes here, saying that our inner life is being renewed day by day.
Despite Paul's hardships (vv. 8–12), he sees God's everlasting glory and calls his trials light affliction.
As part of our inner renewal in Christ (v. 16) we gain the gift of seeing the unseen, the things which are . . . eternal.
Fear of death is overcome by hope in the resurrection, faith in the Holy Trinity (vv. 5, 7), and the love of Christ and our union with Him (v. 14). Our earthly house (v. 1) is our present mortal body. The building from God, the one which is from heaven (v. 2), is the immortal, deified body we shall have in heaven (see 1Co 15). The soul is naked (v. 3), or unclothed (v. 4), when it departs the body, that is, when one dies. Paul longs not for death but for resurrection; he knows God created us not to die, but to be transformed from mortality to life (v. 4; see v. 5). So he speaks not of the bliss of the soul without a body, but of the union of the soul with the glorified body.
5:5-8 Being always confident (v. 6) in the resurrection means we are being prepared by God the Father and the Spirit (v. 5) to join the Lord (v. 8), Jesus Christ.
Following his discourse on suffering, death, and resurrection (4:16–5:8), Paul now turns to the judgment. We must all appear, not only the unbelievers, to be judged according to what we have done. For Christians, right belief gives power and motivation for right behavior. Here again, the NT unifies faith and works.
In his gospel, Paul seeks to persuade men (v. 11) on two fronts: (1) by the terror of the Lord (v. 11), the possibility of judgment to eternal death; and (2) by the love of Christ (v. 14), the divine invitation to live for Christ (v. 15), to eternal life. The heart of Paul's gospel is baptism, where life and death meet: Christ died and rose for us that we might die and rise in Him.
Paul did not know “the historical Jesus” as He voluntarily took on our mortality, lived on earth, and was known according to the flesh (v. 16). Nobody knows Jesus that way after His Ascension, for his mortal flesh has been transformed into an immortal body. Even so, our old bodies are transformed into a new creation (v. 17) in Christ. Because God created all things through Christ, He will transform and reunite all things—material as well as spiritual—to Himself through Christ.
5:18-21 How was Christ made to be sin for us? He, the incarnate Son of God, voluntarily assumed the consequences of our sin—corruption and death—without sinning Himself. And He submitted to unjust suffering because of the sinful passions of men and of angels. This means salvation is far more than forgiveness of sins. It is new life: our reconciliation to God (vv. 18–20) and our becoming new creatures (v. 17), participants in the very righteousness of God (v. 21). This means our salvation is not just juridical (the static, legal pronouncement of a judge), but personal and relational (the dynamic, sacrificial love of a father for his child).
Here is an authentic apostle! His life demonstrates the paradox of God's strength working in human weakness, of renouncing the world in order to master it. The day of salvation is now (v. 2), always the present moment in the period before Christ's return.
This passage is the spiritual perspective of the New Covenant holiness code: Love of God and His Church requires a spurning of immorality and false religions, and a devotion to perfecting holiness in the fear of God (7:1).
6:14 One important application of this passage is that the Church calls us to marriage between those of like faith.
This verse extends an invitation from God to come out of the world and false religion.
An escape from filthiness requires more than thinking repentant thoughts. For we are enmeshed in a spiritual war zone, entrenched in patterns of sin that become habitual. Often, darkness becomes imprinted in our souls and bodies so that even our wills are bypassed and we sin automatically. To cleanse ourselves means that by the promises of God, we embark on a sustained struggle for holiness. This cleansing includes genuine sorrow for our sins, confession, and repentance. It means a willful avoidance of sin-arousing situations, reconciliation with those we have wronged, the resolute practice of Christian virtue, and cleaving to God through faith and prayer. It calls us to participation in the holy sacraments. Is this too difficult for us humans? Yes. Thus it is the Holy Spirit, who cleanses us from every stain and heals our infirmities, who empowers us to live this life of peace with God and repentance before Him.
Feeling sorry is not enough. Heartfelt, godly sorrow produces repentance and diligence (v. 11). True repentance cleanses us from sin and alienation, and diligence zealously pursues holiness and reconciliation. We hereby continue on the path of salvation to eternal life. The sorrow of the world (v. 10) is feeling sorry we were caught. It centers on ourselves, on our embarrassment over the predicament we find ourselves in. It stops short of repentance and reconciliation to God.
The subject of this passage is a collection from the churches in Asia Minor for the church in Jerusalem. Beyond the material help Jerusalem needs, for Paul this appears to be an important theological matter as well. It (1) relates to the unity of Jew and Gentile in the Church, (2) underscores the messianic age as having indeed come in Christ, and (3) demonstrates that the charismatic effects of Pentecost are continuing and maturing in the Church.

Paul had given the Corinthians the same instruction he gave to Galatia, to contribute systematically to the fund (1Co 16:1–4). Titus is to make sure they actually have begun to do so (8:6). Paul has told the Macedonians that Corinth was exemplary in giving (9:2), but he has his doubts. So he sends Titus to Corinth to be sure the Corinthians will comply (9:3–5). Some in Corinth feel pressure, saying that Paul is “crafty”; he gets his way “by cunning” (12:16). Paul encourages the Corinthians by holding up the generosity of the poorer Macedonians as an example (8:1–5). The Corinthians actually do contribute to the fund, and Paul is pleased with them (Rom 15:25–28).
8:5  Note the progression: they first gave themselves to the Lord ("They offered up themselves"—JohnChr) and then to us, to the Church, to the apostles. If our lives are an offering to God, they will be an offering to His people as well.
What was Christ's poverty? He emptied Himself (Php 2:5–8) of His heavenly glory to join our humanity to His divinity, and to suffer and die on our behalf. He did not owe this to us, but did so by His grace, that we might become rich in His salvation.
The proof of God's love for us is that He gave us His Son through His Incarnation and death (Rom 5:8). The proof of our love for God is in the giving of our gifts to Him and the churches.
Paul has stuck his neck out. The Corinthians’ “zeal” had caused many in Macedonia to give to Jerusalem (v. 2). Yet, to make sure Corinth will stay zealous, Paul has sent the brethren.
Here is Paul's landmark teaching on Christian stewardship. The metaphor is not the giving of money but the sowing of seed for a harvest. And where does the seed come from? God Himself (v. 10).
Paul replies to the charges of his opponents: far from being weak, he is extraordinarily strong. But strength in spiritual warfare sometimes appears as weakness to the world. The meekness and gentleness of Christ is sometimes communicated in a lowly or humble fashion, and sometimes boldly (see vv. 10, 11).
10:3  In the flesh refers to fallen human nature.
The battlefield of spiritual warfare includes entrenched spiritual fortresses (strongholds), human reason (arguments, v. 5), human and angelic powers (every high thing that exalts itself), ideas (thought), and the will (obedience). Our weapons include the Cross, prayer, and the Word of God. Both our thoughts (v. 5) and our actions (v. 6) are to be submissive to Christ. The Church is God's fortress, marching against the strongholds of disobedience.
Some teachers in Corinth had claimed a special knowledge of or an esoteric relationship to Christ. Paul here counters their claim by boasting somewhat more of his authority—not because he wants to boast (11:1, 16–19; 12:1, 11), but because the boastfulness of his enemies must be shown to be not only empty, but ruinous for those who believe them.
Paul's opponents had stepped into his sphere (v. 13) after he had evangelized and established the church in Corinth. They then claimed they were responsible for raising up this church and commended themselves (v. 18) for doing so.
Paul compares the reality of the New Covenant to the Garden of Eden, where Christ is Adam and the Church is Eve, and where Satan is up to his same craftiness (v. 3). Paul's desire is to present a pure Church, a chaste virgin (v. 2), to Christ at the Second Coming.
The first element of a “chaste virgin” (v. 2) is the purity of orthodox doctrine. Not human persuasiveness (v. 6) but apostolic content is important. Paul is a part of the apostolic college (v. 5), which continues in line with the original twelve apostles.
Pure doctrine is taught out of pure motives. A mark of apostolic authenticity is the refusal of excessive money. The clergy draw their living from the Church, but not to the point of getting rich (see 1Co 9:4–18; 1Ti 6:3–10; Tts 1:11). Paul's opponents dared not make this claim.
Although Satan (v. 14) imitates the Kingdom of God, telltale signs such as nonapostolic doctrine (vv. 4–6) and a lucrative ministry (vv. 7–12) reveal his sham.
The Corinthians thought they were wise (v. 19) enough to evaluate church leaders. They had become enamored with false apostles who championed themselves using the methods and values of the world, full of outward show and crafty talk. They disparaged Paul, seeing him as a weakling without credentials. As a result they were in bondage (v. 20), defrauded and even brutalized. Paul, playing the devil's advocate, takes up the methods of these false apostles to show them as fools (v. 19). He satirizes them in the hope the Corinthians will thereby see through their charade.
Using his opponents' level of argument, Paul lists his Jewish and Christian credentials. If genealogy means anything, which it does to the Jews, Paul has it (v. 22). If “Christian experience” means anything, no one can compare with him in his sufferings (vv. 23–27), his compassionate, involved concern for his people (vv. 28, 29), or even his bizarre adventures (vv. 30–33).
Paul’s opponents probably boasted of visions and revelations (v. 1), for Paul mentions one of his. Fourteen years ago would date the event before his missionary journeys. Paul employs two terms used by Jews to describe heavenly realms: the third heaven (v. 2) is the highest heaven; Paradise (v. 4), where God is surrounded by the assembly of the just, is the City of God.
Unlike his opponents, who publicly proclaimed their own greatness in their mystical experiences, Paul sees his thorn in the flesh (v. 7) as given to him precisely so he might not be exalted. What was this thorn? Perhaps a chronic physical problem, or deluded Christian leaders, or hard-hearted Israelites. Nevertheless, for Paul, his weakness (v. 9; see v. 5), not his mystical experiences (vv. 2–4), is the means of the power of Christ remaining in him.
12:11-13  By signs of an apostle (v. 12; see Rom 15:19; 1Co 2:4; 4:20; 12:28, 29; Heb 2:4) Paul seems to be referring to miracles that lead men to God and the Church, for with these signs and wonders (v. 12) the Corinthians are greatly impressed.
This is the experience through history of the godly shepherd.
Paul is more impressed with the miracle of unity and harmony than with physical miracles. He fears he may have to exercise the supreme apostolic power, that of excluding people who have not repented (v. 21) from the Church.
In this context, the test of being in Christ is a humble, virtuous life lived in communion with the Church.
The holy kiss, the kiss of peace, is an established liturgical tradition. Perhaps the final test of whether one is a Christian is whether one can give this kiss with an uncondemning conscience.
This Trinitarian blessing is also an ancient and contemporary liturgical practice.
The Judaizers invading Galatia argued that Paul was not a true apostle. Paul introduces himself with a threefold defense: (1) The source of his apostleship is God (v. 1). (2) He has witnessed the resurrected Christ (Acts 9:27), just as the eleven have. (3) His apostleship is confirmed by all the brethren (v. 2) with him. An additional proof of Paul's apostleship is that he founded the churches of Galatia (v. 2).
Paul's greeting encapsulates the true gospel, which he is defending in this epistle. Several points may be drawn from this greeting: (1) The true gospel comes from God Himself (v. 3). (2) Christ gave Himself for our sins not only in His death, but in every phase of His Incarnation, from conception to Ascension (see 2:20). (3) Christ delivers us from this present evil age (v. 4) to enter the age to come. (4) This deliverance is accomplished according to the will of our God (v. 4), the Son in His human nature cooperating with the divine will (Jn 5:30; 6:38). The Father's will is done by Jesus, and then by us, “on earth as it is in heaven” (Mt 6:10).
1:6-10 Different (Gr. heteros, v. 6) means different in kind, whereas another (Gr. allos, v. 7) means another of the same kind. Paul is saying that the teaching the Galatians are listening to is not a harmless variation of the truth, but a completely different, false gospel. This “gospel” (1) is a turning away from the grace of Christ (v. 6); (2) brings trouble to the faithful; (3) will pervert the gospel of Christ (v. 7)—it is a distortion of the truth, a mixture of truth and falsehood; (4) is accursed or anathematized by the Church (v. 8); and (5) is intended to please men (v. 10), not God.

Paul's warning about we, or an angel from heaven is not hypothetical. Angels can and have delivered the gospel to us: they announced Christ's conception (Lk 1:26–38), birth (Lk 2:9–15), Resurrection (Mt 28:5–7), and Ascension (Acts 1:9–11). But angelic messages are not necessarily true; they may come from fallen angels, who are accursed.
The true gospel is taught by true apostles, but many declare themselves to be apostles. How can we know true apostles from false?

(1) True apostles are called by God. They learn the gospel by revelation, either directly from the risen Son, as did the original apostles (1:11, 12), or by the revelation of apostolic tradition (2Ti 2:2). They are called by grace, not according to works or a “proper” background (1:13–17). A true apostle brings glory to God, not to himself (1:18–23).

(2) True apostles form one church government, holding the same doctrine and working by agreement reached in council (2:6–10).

(3) True apostles stand firm in matters of conscience and are correctable when mistaken (2:11–14). Thus, Paul rebukes Peter sharply in public for his hypocritical ethnic elitism.
Apostolic tradition is grounded in divine revelation from Jesus Christ. Just as the Twelve were called by Christ, so was Paul (v. 1). Just as the Twelve received the gospel directly from Christ, so did Paul (Acts 9:3–6; 26:13–18). Just as the Twelve stood together as one, so Paul entered their unity in consensus and mutual submission.
1:13-17  People are called by God not according to former conduct (v. 13)—good or bad—but by God's grace (v. 15). Paul, whom God called in mercy, received grace from Ananias' hands and the waters of baptism (Acts 9:10–19). Separated me from my mother's womb (v. 15) refers not to Paul's physical birth but to God's calling Paul to apostolic ministry before he was born (see Ps 138:15, 16; Is 49:1; Jer 1:5; Lk 1:35, 43, 44, 48). As with Paul, God's intentions for a person may lie hidden for years.
As a true apostle, Paul submits himself to the Church and her apostles rather than elevating himself. Paul knows his encounter with Christ, instruction in the gospel, and call to apostleship are highly unusual—in a private revelation, the only other witness is God (v. 20). But he also knows he must teach the same gospel as the other apostles.
James is James the Just, the first bishop of Jerusalem and author of the Epistle of James. Brother also means cousin or close relation (see the Introduction to the Epistle of James).
Glory goes to God, not to the apostle.
Communicated (Gr. anatithemai) means “laid before” or “submitted.” Paul submitted to the apostles James, Peter, and John (v. 9) what he had been teaching among the Gentiles so that he might not run in vain, that is, teach error. He did so privately because the Judaizers were slandering him, giving apostolic honor only to those they considered of reputation, the original apostles.
2:4-5 The false brethren are not those “of reputation” (v. 2) in the Church, but the Judaizers, whom no one had recognized as apostolic.
Seemed to be something is more correctly translated “were of reputation,” as in v. 2. To the Judaizers, only the original apostles had valid authority. But the Judaizers were wrong. Paul is not putting down the Twelve; rather he is saying that it makes no difference that all his fellow apostles were formerly “blue collar” workers, not scholars like Paul himself. God does not show personal favoritism. As for correcting Paul's gospel, they added nothing to his teaching.
Peter and Paul were each responsible to reach one segment of the population in the central part of the Roman Empire: Peter the circumcised (Jews), Paul the uncircumcised (Gentiles). The others of the Twelve also did evangelistic work, as did the Seventy (see article, “The Seventy,” at Luke 10).
One God gave one gospel through two apostles to two different ethnic groups.
The right hand of fellowship indicates consensus, not merely friendship. The apostles are united in preaching the same gospel.
Apostles are also united in caring for the poor, which in this case probably refers to the Jerusalem church (see Acts 11:27–30).
No individual apostle (or bishop or patriarch) is infallible. Even when he speaks officially (ex officio), he is correctable. Unchecked, Peter could have caused a schism.
The men who came from James were probably trying to force the culture of the Jerusalem church on the Gentiles—and they were not necessarily representing James. Jerusalem was Jewish, but to impose that culture on Gentiles was hypocrisy (v. 13). And to mistake culture—any culture—for the gospel is even worse. God had already shown that Jewish dietary laws were obsolete (Acts 10:11–16), for the law is fulfilled in Christ.
Paul recounts the speech he gave in Antioch when he confronted Peter.
Gentiles were considered sinners by the Jews.
What does it mean to be justified? See the article, “Justification by Faith,” at Romans 5. Faith in Jesus Christ is grammatically parallel to the works of the law and should be translated “the faith of Jesus Christ.” The faith of Christ is the gospel. As the source of works is the law, so the source of faith is Christ. It is the faith of Christ—His beliefs, His trust, His obedience—that justifies us, not our faith as such. Christ's faith is seen in His entire life on earth, not in just a few of His crucial works.
By Christ should be “in Christ.” Justification is not merely legal but actual—effected by our real, personal union with Christ in His glorified human nature. That we could be found sinners shows this union never takes away our free will, and explains how some defected to Judaism.
2:18 Those things which I destroyed are “the works of the law” (v. 16). Paul destroyed them in the sense of proving their ineffectiveness for salvation. The real transgressor here is one who tries to reinstitute the Jewish Law.
2:19 We die through the law, not bypassing or dishonoring it, but by recognizing that it is holy; that we deserve its consequence, death; and that we voluntarily die to the law through our death with Christ. Being crucified with Christ through baptism, we come alive to the law of the Spirit, which perfects the intention of the OT law. There is no contradiction between law and gospel. The law is “holy and just and good” (Rom 7:12). However, the law is “weak” (Rom 8:3) and “obsolete” (Heb 8:13), for it is fulfilled in the gospel, in Christ Himself.
I have been crucified with Christ means our sinful “passions and desires” (5:24) have been crucified. This is not the crucifixion of human nature, but of the flesh, the corruption into which human nature has fallen. This crucifixion must be willingly and freely accepted, just as Christ freely accepted His death. Living in the flesh (Gr. en sarki) is contrasted with living “in the faith” (Gr. en pistei), translated here by faith. Just as living in the flesh involves the whole person, body and soul, so living “in the faith” involves the whole person. Justification therefore constitutes substantial union with Christ, not just an abstract position of the believer with respect to God.

While it is no longer I who live under the dominion of sinful passions and desires, I do live a crucified life in Christ. As we are not saved by works alone, nowhere does the NT say we are saved by faith alone. We are saved by faith, but not faith alone.
Set aside the grace of God is what Peter and Barnabas had done (vv. 12, 13). The faith of Christ is not opposed to the works of the law, but it is opposed to using works to justify oneself before God. As Moses himself looked ahead to Christ (Heb 11:26), so the law is a shadow, an icon, pointing toward Christ Himself, who brings us life.
The Galatians had believed in Jesus Christ (v. 1) and received the Spirit through the hearing of faith (v. 2). But they are foolish because they have rejected ongoing life in Christ and the Spirit, teaching instead that we are made perfect by the flesh (v. 3)—circumcision. Paul argues they do not understand righteousness, nor how men have always participated in it.
Who are the sons of Abraham? Those who are of faith (v. 7)—true Christians. Jews saw Abraham as their father. Paul shows that Abraham's righteousness (v. 6) does not consist in keeping the law, but in believing God (v. 9). Righteousness is a heart-centered belief in and obedience to God, with the blessing of the Holy Spirit.

Accounted (v. 6) in our day suggests keeping the books, ledgers, CPAs. To “account” here (Gr. logizomai) refers rather to faithful participation. When God “accounted” Abraham righteous, Abraham was participating with God in the fruit of the Holy Spirit and faith (v. 5).

With believing Abraham (v. 9) is literally “in the faith of Abraham,” that which he believed and did. This shows that Jesus' words, “If you were Abraham's children, you would do the works of Abraham” (Jn 8:39), underscore the fact that separating faith from works is impossible. To justify (v. 8) means to make righteous and so to be righteous. Therefore, to be blessed (v. 9) in Abraham is to participate with him, body and soul, in communion with God and His goodness.
While the works of the law are good, those who are of the works of the law are cursed because they cannot become righteous by keeping the law. Even on their own premise they fail, for no one has kept all the law.
The law is not of faith because the law came before the true faith (v. 23). This is not to say that no one believed before Christ, or that the law cannot be obeyed out of faith. Abraham is the father of faith! But his faith was a type of the faith of Christ, for his faith is perfected in the faith of Christ.
Christ perfectly obeyed the law and accepted its curse. In Christ, we are redeemed from the curse and participate in His perfect faith and obedience.
How is God's promised blessing obtained? The Judaizers believed they were progressing toward perfection by obeying the law. Paul argues by contrast that the blessing comes through the promise of the Spirit through faith, a participation in the very life of God.
3:15-18 The Jews were blinded by the multitude of details of the law. They failed to see that their sonship was founded on God's promises (the covenant) made to Abraham (v. 16). Since a covenant that was confirmed (v. 17) cannot be added to, changed, or annulled, the law, which comes later (v. 17), cannot alter the covenant's promise (v. 15). The Jews thought they were sons of Abraham (seeds) through physical genealogy. They overlooked the fact that Seed (v. 16) is singular, referring to Christ.
3:19  Why was the law given then? Because Israel was transgressing what they knew of God's law through conscience and nature. So God put it in writing! The law was never a savior, but a tutor (v. 24) to convict Israel of transgressions and to lead her to Christ.
For Christ to be the mediator between God and man (see also 1Ti 2:5), He had to be both God and man. God is one is a reference to the one divine nature and does not deny the existence of three divine Persons. (Priests, by the way, are not seen as mediators between God and man; their role is to lead people to the Mediator.)
Faith in (v. 22) should be translated “faith of.” Two faiths are cooperating: first and foremost, Christ's faith; secondarily, the faith of those who believe. While OT people had faith, they could not participate in Christ's faith, for Christ had not yet come.
Paul directly relates saving faith (v. 26) and being baptized, connecting them as the most intimate of friends. Verse 27 is the ancient hymn perhaps already being sung at Christian baptisms during the procession of the newly regenerated into the assembly—and sung at every Orthodox baptismal service to this day.
We share one human nature in Christ. Therefore, valuing people based on opinions and ethnicity (neither Jew nor Greek), pride and social status (neither slave nor free), or gender (neither male nor female) has no place in the Church. All are one in nature, and so all are equal in dignity.
Child refers not to age but to understanding. Guardians and stewards provide the special discipline and protection required for growth. Slave refers to one under the rule of a taskmaster, in this case, the law.
The elements of the world are the philosophies and traditions developed by humanity without regard to God (Col 2:8).
Son refers to Christ as God by nature. God, then, is born of a woman, and so Mary is rightly called the mother of God (Theotokos). Since Jesus is born under the law, He can redeem those under the law. Jesus fulfilled the law as an infant by being circumcised on the eighth day and being presented in the temple forty days after His birth. Both of these events are remembered in the liturgical cycle of the Orthodox Church.

Why does God redeem those who were under the law? To fulfill His promise to Abraham. God owes no one anything—He certainly does not owe us salvation.

Whereas the Son is God by nature, we become sons of God by adoption. We cannot become members of the Godhead by nature because we are human by nature. But we do become members of His family by grace. In adoption we become everything God is, except that we do not share His nature. Because we are given new life, adoption is also called a new birth, being born again.
The ongoing growth into adoption, being an heir of God (v. 7), is called deification (see the article, “Deification,” at 2 Peter). This means we are becoming by grace what God is by nature. Each Person of the Trinity, Spirit, Son, and Father (v. 6), is involved in this process of transformation. Therefore, to become sons of God by grace, we must believe in and know the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.
The Judaizers were making their holy-day calendar an end in itself. Although God gave Israel her holy days, they point beyond themselves to Christ and His Kingdom. The OT holy days are fulfilled in the great feasts of the Church. Passover becomes Easter, while Pentecost, the celebration of the giving of the Law on Mt. Sinai, becomes the descent of the Holy Spirit—a renewed calendar for a renewed creation.
The nature of Paul's physical infirmity is not known. Perhaps it was simply the sufferings of his work for the gospel.
4:14-19 The angel of God in the OT was a pre-incarnate appearance (theophany) of the Son, whom we know as Christ Jesus. A priest in the Church is called to be a manifestation of Christ and is to be received as Christ, but he is neither identical with Christ nor a mediator between a Christian and Christ. He must both win the love of his people (v. 15) and adamantly confront bad behavior and wrong belief (vv. 16–18). A true priest seeks spiritual growth, deification, for his people (v. 19), even if his people do not want the truth (v. 16).
By saying that Abraham's two sons and related events are symbolic (v. 24, Gr. allegoreo), Paul is not implying that they are not historical. Rather he asserts that OT history is announcing something far greater than itself. Hagar and Mount Sinai symbolize earthly Jerusalem and the Jews under the law (v. 25). Sarah, the freewoman (vv. 22, 23), symbolizes the heavenly Jerusalem, that is, the Church (v. 26). The desolate are those in the Church, especially the Gentiles; she who has a husband is Israel (v. 27). Furthermore, Sarah is a type of Mary, the Mother of God, for Sarah's son was born through promise (v. 23), the promise of God.

Isaac “was the issue of bodies that were dead, and of a womb that was dead. His conception was not by the flesh, nor his birth by the seed, for the womb was dead both through age and barrenness. But the Word of God fashioned him. . . . He that was not according to the flesh was more honorable than he that was born after the flesh. Therefore let it not disturb you that you were not born after the flesh. For from the very reason that you are not so born, are you most of all Abraham's kindred” (JohnChr).
In this section, Paul gives the content of the true gospel by contrasting it with the false gospel, that of the Judaizers.

(1) The source of justification is faith, not the works of the law (2:16–21). (a) Works of the law deal with man in his fallen state, in his corruption; faith “crucifies” man's corrupt condition and deals with the new man in Christ. (b) Works of the law begin with the action of man; faith begins with the action of God. Every work of faith is the action of both God and man, a cooperation (synergy) between the divine and human wills. This faith and these actions find their source and fulfillment in God-made-Man, Christ. We experience them through our union with Christ brought about in baptism.

(2) The Holy Spirit gives us power for the ongoing life of righteousness in Christ, the life of blessing (3:1–14). (a) Father Abraham is the father of faith and of the blessing of the Spirit. (b) But Judaizers, who have based their righteousness on the works of the law, have received a curse, not the blessing of the Spirit.

(3) The status conferred by righteousness is sonship. We become children of God through union with God incarnate (3:15–4:31). (a) The source of sonship is God, not humanity; divine promise, not human deeds; faith, not works. (b) God introduced the works of the law to protect mankind until the time of divine sonship, the time when our union with the Son of God became possible. (c) The purpose of sonship is for us to become like God and to enter heaven.
The yoke of bondage is the law. It mistakes the lesser reality, its rules and regulations, its externals, for the greater reality, God, who produced the law and to whom the externals point. The law in this sense includes: (1) the initiatory requirement to be circumcised (v. 2); (2) an obligation to perfectly obey the whole law (v. 3); (3) being justified by law—trying to establish one's own righteousness under the law (v. 4); (4) continuing bondage to sin (v. 1); (5) dependence on the “flesh,” corrupt human nature; (6) alienation from Christ and from grace (v. 4), which Christ calls “labor” and being “heavy laden” (Mt 11:28).

By contrast, Christ's yoke is life in the Spirit, which includes: (1) the regeneration of baptism (3:27), the renewal of the entire human nature in Christ, the circumcision of the heart; (2) obedience to Christ and growth in perfection (Mt 5:48); (3) being justified by grace, God's righteousness which becomes ours; (4) freedom or liberty (v. 1) from the power of sin; (5) dependence upon the Spirit (v. 5) and access to the perfect and glorified human nature of Christ; (6) union with Christ and the grace of God. Christ calls this yoke “rest,” for it is “easy” and “light” (Mt 11:30).
The hope of righteousness is the Kingdom of God.
To believe in Christ involves faith working through love (v. 6). Those who stop short of love, hindered by legalism (v. 7), miss the message of the Cross (v. 11). For by His death Christ abolished the law, and by His Resurrection He granted us sonship with God. For those who trouble you (v. 12) with circumcision, Paul wishes they would cut themselves off—referring to complete castration. Why does he speak so strongly? Christ broke the bonds of the law, not that our standard might be lowered, but that it might be exalted. We who are free from the law must not return to its bondage.
The way of life in the Spirit, the way of faith and love, is expressed through service to God and one another (v. 13). We must avoid at all costs competitive comparisons of each other's deeds.
By the flesh, Paul does not mean the body. The flesh here is a general term for evil actions, the depraved will, the earthly mind, the slothful and careless soul—things that are under one's control, not part of human nature. This flesh is crucified with Christ (v. 24). It is not human nature that is mortified, but its evil deeds.
5:25 A walk in the Spirit comes from life in the Spirit.
6:1 To be able to administer correction with gentleness is a spiritual gift.
Paul admonishes us to bear one another's burdens. But moments later, he notes that “each one shall bear his own load” (v. 5). Both are true. We are called to initiate caregiving in the Church, and not to be needless burdens to others.
6:6 See Nm 31:47; 35:1–8; 1Co 9:14. The teacher and the taught form a bond, and the sharing here is in material blessings.
The legalizers choose to offend God that they may please human beings.
How does one boast ... in the cross? Throughout the history of the Church, Christians have preached the Cross, displayed the Cross in their homes and altars, venerated the Cross in the liturgy, and signed themselves with the Cross in worship of the Holy Trinity and during times of fear or temptation.
6:15  The new creation is our way of life in Christ Jesus.
6:16 Paul calls the Church Israel.
Paul is no hypocrite or coward. He has persevered through much for what he is teaching, and he bears in his body the marks to prove it.
Saints and faithful are biblical and historical references to Christian believers. Here, God (v. 2) refers to the Father, Lord (Gr. kyrios) refers to the Son. Early Christian usage of these words indicates an identity of nature but distinction of Persons between the Father and the Son.
1:3   God blesses and so is blessed. The Christian life is a response to God's initiative, especially that of the Father but also that of the Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. Spiritual blessing is primarily the work of the Spirit. The heavenly places, where the risen and ascended Christ reigns, are experienced in Christ, that is, by the life that is begun when one is joined with Christ in baptism (see Rom 6:3–5).
Everything comes from God, and everything should be drawn back to Him. God's original intent for the Incarnation was not redemption from the Fall but adoption as sons of God (v. 5), that is, deification. For when God contemplated creating the world, He planned on bringing it into union with Himself through the Incarnation of His Son, that is, through the Son's union with human nature. That is why St. Athanasius can say, “God became man that man might become god.”

The Father chose us (v. 4) in Him, the Son. Christ, who is God by nature, became Man by choice. If we choose Him, we, who are human by nature, become “gods” by grace. If we are in Christ, the Son of God, we are sons of God. Paul is not addressing individuals as such but us, the community, the Church. And he is not addressing the issue of human will in salvation but the will of God, which is that all are chosen (see Rom 11:32; 1Ti 2:4; 2Pt 3:9). But being predestined (v. 5) by God does not nullify human will: in everything, God is the originator, the initiator; we merely respond, but our response is necessary. Becoming a Christian is not so much inviting Christ into one's life as getting oneself into Christ's life. What is true of Christ must become true of one who is in Him.
The sacraments of baptism (redemption) and the Eucharist (His blood) are alluded to as the necessary foundation for drawing near to God. Redemption has a technical meaning relative to the freeing of slaves. Here, the bondage is to sins; the act of releasing is forgiveness; the price of redemption is blood—the human life of Christ given over to death for the sake of new life. This beginning of life in Christ is not merely legal, nor instantaneous, but living and dynamic.
The mystery is the plan of salvation, the gospel, the Kingdom of God, the Church. This mystery centers on Christ Himself (Col 2:2), from the Incarnation (1Ti 3:16), to the Cross (1Co 2:8), to the restoration and culmination of all things (v. 10). It is the fullness (v. 10) of all, not only for humanity but for the whole creation. Although it was announced by the prophets (Rom 16:25, 26), God revealed it through Christ, and it is made known to us through the apostles (3:1–5; 1Co 2:6, 7, 10–16; 4:1). The mystery is made manifest in history by the fact that Gentiles and Jews compose one body (3:6; Col 1:26–28). The mystery is experienced in the sacraments of the Church, which are called the “mysteries.”
The gospel unites all humanity: the Jews (vv. 11, 12) and the Gentiles (vv. 13, 14).

The Jews, especially those who trusted in Christ (v. 12)—one of whom was Paul, hence the use of we (v. 11)—were the first witnesses to the coming of the Messiah. In “the fullness of the times” (v. 10) they were joined by the Gentiles.
1:13-14 The outpouring of the Holy Spirit was an evidence that the last times, the day of the Lord, had come. Hence, Pentecost was a proof to the Jews that Jesus indeed was the Messiah. And the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the Gentiles (Acts 10:44–48) was a proof they were equal to the Jews in this final age. After baptism one is sealed with the Holy Spirit, called “chrismation.” (The word “seal” is repeated by Orthodox Christians as the priest or bishop anoints the newly baptized with oil.)

The guarantee (v. 14) is a first installment in kind, a down payment or earnest of what is later to be completed: we both are redeemed and shall be redeemed.
In the original Greek, this is all one sentence. Paul's opening theme is the preeminence of God's initiative. We say, simply, “Blessed is the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit.” Paul's doxology is more detailed: The Father has all power (vv. 3–6); the Son, all rule (vv. 7–12); the Spirit, all caretaking (vv. 13, 14).
This is a way of restating the two great commandments: love God and love man.
Understanding should be translated “heart.” The prayer that Orthodox Christians pray before the reading of the Gospel begins, “Illumine our hearts, O Master who love mankind, with the pure light of Your divine knowledge.”
Principality, power, might, and dominion (v. 21) are orders of angelic beings. Because Christ transcends all (v. 21), everything submits to Him (v. 22). Because He is intimately united with the church (v. 22) as a head to its body (v. 23), the Church has the greatest glory of all creation. The Church is God's masterpiece (v. 23). Since Christ as God is infinite, the Church never ceases becoming “full.”
This is an intercessory prayer that Paul prayed often and repetitously (v. 16). He asks that his hearers might understand the redemption he outlined in vv. 3–14. Like vv. 3–14, this section is also one long sentence in Greek.
Two unequal kingdoms are at war. Each is spiritual in nature; each stamps its image on its subjects and requires strict obedience. Yet they are opposites. The king of the lesser realm is a created being, Satan. His domain is of the air (v. 2), neither fully of earth nor of heaven. He is the author of disobedience (v. 2), rebellion. The beginning of his rule is spiritual death (v. 1). The desires of his subjects are lustful, of the flesh and of the mind (v. 3). Their deeds are trespasses and sins (v. 1). The result of his rule is wrath (v. 3), and hence eternal death.

The King of the other Kingdom is uncreated, God the Father (v. 4). His realm is the heavenly places (v. 6). He rules by mercy and love (v. 4). The beginning of His rule is redemption to eternal life (v. 5). The desires of His subjects are thankfulness and glorifying God. Their deeds are righteous, as is proper to those who reign with Christ. The result of His rule is exceeding riches and kindness (v. 7), and hence eternal life.
How can one get from the one kingdom to the other (vv. 1–7)? By the unity of grace, faith, and works (v. 9). Not that these are equal, for grace is uncreated and infinite, whereas our faith is limited and can grow; good works flow out of authentic faith. Works cannot earn us this great treasure—it is a pure gift—but those who receive this gift do good. We are not saved by good works, but for good works (v. 10).
Since salvation involves the renewal of all mankind in Christ, the old distinction between Jew and Gentile no longer exists. This ethnic distinction was based on the flesh (v. 11), the Gentiles being uncircumcised and the Jews being circumcised. While Israel was especially blessed by God (v. 12), both Jews and Gentiles had to become true Israel (see vv. 13–18).
Man's brokenness was twofold: man was separated from man, that is, Gentile from Jew (vv. 13–15); and man was separated from God (vv. 16–18). The healing is likewise twofold: the creation of a unified humanity, the Church, and the raising of this unified humanity to God. The Incarnation of the Son of God accomplished the former; His death and Resurrection did the latter. The whole Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, act together (v. 18; see v. 22).

The middle wall of separation (v. 14) probably refers to the barrier in the temple separating the Court of the Gentiles from the Court of the Jews. This barrier manifested the limitations of the Old Covenant. It did not heal humanity's self-alienation; it actually increased human hostility. Now that this wall is broken down, both Gentiles and Jews are reconciled and one in Christ.
The Church, humanity unified and renewed through union with the incarnate Son of God (vv. 11–18), is built on a foundation of Jesus Christ and the apostles and prophets (v. 20). From this foundation come the Scriptures and all doctrine. In 4:11 these gifts are implied to be a continuing reality in the Church. And the spiritual building is one: the Church is designed to be united.
How does Paul fit into the cosmic plan described in 1:3–14 and 2:1–22? God has revealed this plan to him (vv. 1–6) so that he can reveal it to all, especially to the Gentiles (vv. 7–13).
Prisoner (Paul is in prison in Rome as he writes this letter) is a title of honor and a mark of apostleship (Lk 21:12; 2Co 6:4, 5). Paul is not only an apostle (see v. 5), but one with a special role, a special dispensation (v. 2, Gr. oikonomia). All NT leaders, “apostles and prophets” (v. 5; 2:20), know the doctrine of the unity in the Church of Christ; Paul has received the special commission to extend this Church to the Gentiles (v. 8).
3:3  God’s revelation to Paul began on the road to Damascus (Acts 22:3–21). God was gracious to Paul not for his own sake but for others (see Acts 9:15, 16).
The apostolate is the special bearer of divine revelation necessary for the life of the Church in this age.
This is the content of the revelation mentioned in v. 3: that through the gospel the Gentiles should be united with the Jews, so that a united and renewed humanity is brought to God.
Why did God choose a Jew to preach to the Gentiles? Because if God can redeem Saul, the persecutor of the Church and hater of Gentiles, then God can certainly redeem the Gentiles through Saul.
Not only did men not know of God's mystery (v. 5), neither did the angels. They hear of it from men. How can this be? Because the church affects all elements of creation, from the material to the immaterial. The united, renewed humanity made possible by Christ is the basis of the reconciliation of the heavens and the earth. Therefore, the Church ascends above the angels, the principalities and powers. The basis of such an astounding work by men is Christ's Resurrection and exaltation (v. 11).
The wonder of the mystery of God, surprising even to angels, is that mere humans, earthly creatures, can have boldness and confident access to God the Father.
3:13 Paul sees that even his sufferings are a part of his apostolic work. His tribulations are for you, that is, for the Church, for us. So our sufferings can be for others.
3:14-19 Paul picks up where he left off in v. 1, beginning a prayer for his hearers. I bow my knees shows his special earnestness, since standing would have been a more common posture for prayer. The whole Trinity is involved in our deification: Father (vv. 14, 15, 19–21), Son (vv. 14, 17, 19, 21), and Holy Spirit (v. 16).
Family or clan (Gr. patria) is a group descended from one ancestor. God the Father (Gr. pater, v. 14), is the ultimate source of every living being. As there is only one uncreated Father, so the whole of creation is called to form one family under the fatherhood of God.
3:18-19  How do we comprehend (v. 18) and know (v. 19)? It is something other than a scientific fact or intellectual awareness. It is (1) a revelation, a divine gift that illumines and transforms our intellect; and (2) a reciprocal encounter, a personal bond with the personal God, who reveals Himself to us through communion with Him. This revelation and personal communion, this faith, is best known (1) with all the saints (v. 18), that is, in personal communion with the corporate Church; and (2) through an experience of the great gift of grace, the love of Christ (v. 19). Theological knowledge is first personal and experiential, and then thought out and verbalized. A theologian witnesses to what he knows through experience.
A benediction that falls in the middle of the epistle acknowledges that God's work goes far beyond what we envision, above all that we ask or think. The goal of deification, “that you may be filled with all the fullness of God” (v. 19), is accomplished by the working together, the synergism, of our faith and love with God's power and Spirit in us (v. 20).
Paul implores his hearers to realize what has been given to them and to be in practice what they are in Christ. So he turns the focus of his letter from what God does for us to what we are to do in response. How you believe must affect how you live; creed must influence conduct.
The basic characteristics of Christians are the virtues that contribute to unity: though we are many persons, we share one new nature. Though we are members of the most exalted body, the greatness is of God, not of ourselves. Even the cohesiveness of this body is God's work in the Spirit (v. 3). So there is no place for quarreling. To live in the heavenlies we are to walk in solidarity and humility on earth. Note that the one virtue listed not common to Greco-Roman philosophy is lowliness, taught in word and in deed by Jesus Himself.
4:4-6 Here is the manifold unity of the Church. Christian morality is not based on ideas but on a living reality: the life of the Holy Trinity in the Church. Paul combines the three Persons of the Trinity (one Spirit . . . one Lord . . . one God) with the Church, the sacrament of baptism (v. 5), and the theological virtues of hope (v. 4) and faith (v. 5) into one grand reality, the concrete basis for holy living. Each Person of the Trinity sanctifies, but the sanctification is one, because the baptism is one, and the grace of the sacrament is one.
While the Church is one in essence, it is diverse in gifts and function. Unity does not mean uniformity. Each member is unique before God, with gifts and roles granted by Him. Diversity in operation is (1) based on the ascent of the Son and the descent of the Spirit (vv. 8–10), (2) guided by specially gifted people (v. 11), and (3) for the sake of the maturity and stability of the body (vv. 12–16).
Paul's rabbinic way of intertwining the Ascension of Christ (He ascended) with the descent of the Spirit (gave gifts) reveals the relationship between the body of Christ and the gifts of the Spirit. The lower parts of the earth is either the earth itself, referring to the Incarnation; or burial or Hades, the place of the dead, referring to Christ's death and descent into hell (1Pt 3:19). Only Christ, as God and Man, can fill all things (v. 10), that is, reign over the unification and fulfillment of creation.
The gifts listed in v. 11 are limited to those who lead the Church. The Holy Spirit extends gifts to each person at chrismation, but the “ministry gifts” listed here form one leadership group responsible for equipping the laity for the work of ministry (v. 12).

Why is there a diversity of persons and gifting in the Church? For unity of service (vv. 12, 13), for the preservation of truth (v. 14), and for the operation of love (vv. 15, 16), the primary quality of Christian growth. The Church, in which Christian life develops, is not primarily an organization, but an organism whose parts or members receive their edifying power from Christ to grow up into Christ. Paul does not look at the Christian as an isolated individual walking toward perfection, but as a member of the body, striving to reach the perfect faith and full knowledge of the Son of God. Thus unity of faith cannot be separated from knowledge of the Son of God.
The process of Christian growth requires our free will commitment to walk in righteousness and holiness (v. 24). A child of the light can no longer act as a child of darkness. A change of lifestyle is possible because of Christ, the original new man (v. 24). So Christ must be learned (v. 20), and relationship with Him must be renewed (v. 23), a process implying intimate relationship. Further, Christ must be put on (v. 24), a clothing metaphor, an allusion to baptism and the baptismal robe. While spiritual grace makes man heavenly, righteousness is both a gift and a goal, a present reality and a promise to be striven for.
4:25 Lying hurts the entire body of the Church. It is as if the eye were to see a trap and not tell the foot, or the tongue to taste poison and not spit it out.
“If you fail to master your anger on the first day, then on the next day and even sometimes for a whole year you will still be dragging it out. . . . Anger will cause us to suspect that words spoken in one sense were meant in another. And we will even do the same with gestures and every little thing. . . . Be angry with the devil and not your own member. This is why God has armed us with anger. Not that we should thrust the sword against our own bodies, but that we should baptize the whole blade in the devil's breast” (JohnChr).
We are to work, not for personal gain and luxury, but in order to serve.
4:31-32 “Cut off clamor and you will clip the wings of anger. . . . There is but one thing in which it is useful to cry aloud—in preaching and in teaching” (JohnChr).
We cannot be content only to root out the weeds mentioned in v. 31; we must plant good fruit as well.
Walk worthy of the calling,” Paul says in 4:1 (see 2:10). Here he defines this walk:
Walk in love (v. 2); walk in light (v. 8); walk in wisdom (v. 15). Walk implies a slow, steady pace; a daily effort; a marathon, not a sprint.
“Just as clamor was the fuel of wrath, so foul talk is the fuel of lust” (JohnChr).
The way we live affects our relationship not only with God but also with each other—for in Christ we are members of one another (4:25). The moral standard for the new humanity is the life appropriate to a child of God (5:1)—of the Father (4:32–5:1), the Son (5:2), and the Holy Spirit (4:30). Such a child fulfills the two great commandments: (1) love of man, demonstrated in self-sacrificing service (given Himself for us, 5:2); and (2) love of God, manifested in worship (an offering and a sacrifice to God).

Paul especially emphasizes that Christians must avoid sexual immorality, not just the act but thinking and talking about it also (5:4); and greed, which treats things as if they were gods (5:5). Ungodly thoughts as well as behavior can keep believers out of the Kingdom.
5:6, 7 Paul's sharp contrast between the two ways, the way of darkness and the way of light, begins here. The animosity between the two ways is in thoughts, words (vv. 6–10), and actions (vv. 8–12).
We must judge what the world says is reasonable on the basis of what God says is true.
Besides separating from darkness, Christians are also to expose (v. 11) it. But we must first come out of hiding in order to be exposed ourselves. That is, we must confess our sins and repent of them (see Jn 3:19–21). Orthodox Christians do this before baptism, before the Eucharist, and also in a separate sacrament of repentance. The hymn in v. 14 is an early baptismal hymn: baptism is illumination (see Acts 26:18; 2Co 4:6; Heb 6:4; 10:32). To walk in the light is to walk in one's baptism.
The goal is not to abandon the world, but to keep oneself in Christ and salvage as much as possible from the evil world. Christians renounce the fallenness of the world, not creation itself.
Following repentance, a surge of life and joy wells forth. A distinctive spirit, a kind of elation, energizes both darkness and light. For those in darkness, this spirit is like drunkenness, artificial and temporary. For Christians, it is the Holy Spirit (v. 18), and the joy is New Covenant worship of the Holy Trinity, the Eucharist (giving thanks, v. 20): to the Father, through the Son incarnate (Lord in v. 19; Lord Jesus Christ in v. 20), in the Spirit (v. 18). He who is made drunk with wine totters and sways, but he who is inebriated with the Holy Spirit is rooted in Christ and gloriously sober.
Quoting Scripture and singing hymns are not spiritual if there is not also true humility, submission, and the fear of God (v. 21).
Verse 21 is a transition to the theme of the next section, where Paul applies the idea of mutual submission to the most basic human relationships—those in the household.
The model is Christ and the church (v. 32), which is then applied to marriage. Yet Christian marriage helps us to understand the mystery of the Church.

1. For wives, concerning headship (vv. 22–24): In both the Church and marriage, there is one who acts as head, who leads. As Man, Christ is first among equals, not superior to us in nature; yet He alone is the head of the church (v. 23). Likewise, wives are called to submit to their husbands as equals.

2. For husbands, concerning sacrificial love (vv. 25–31): Paul writes three sentences to wives, but writes at greater length to impress on husbands that they should love their wives. Just as the wife's submission is to accept the headship of the husband, the husband's submission to his wife is to sacrifice himself for her. In ancient Israel, the bride would bathe and dress and be escorted to the bridegroom by his friends. In the Church, baptism is that bathing and dressing in which we put on Christ (v. 26), and the groom Himself, Christ, escorts us (v. 27). In the Church, the baptized are one humanity, one flesh with Christ; in marriage, husband and wife are one flesh with each other.
Children are expected to obey and respect their parents. The meaning of the Greek word for obey (hupakouo) begins with the idea of listening attentively. The caution regarding the fathers puts a restraint and a requirement of godly instruction on the parent.
As with marriage, Paul does not seek to alter the existing social structure. But he does insist that both marriage and the master-slave relationship (nowadays, employer-employee) are different when Christians are involved. The expectations for the slave are similar to those for a wife and for children: sincere obedience. Paul, however, unlike the culture around him, insists that, in God's eyes, the good done by a slave is the same as that done by a free man. Before Christ they are equal.
Masters are curtly warned against intimidation. They must remember their own Master, who is not biased in their favor just because they are earthly masters.
All who stand for good must wage a constant battle with the forces of evil. For the demons still have power in the world (v. 12) until Christ comes again in glory. This is clearly acknowledged in the prayers at the conclusion of Orthodox baptism. Christians fight back with God's arms, that is, His uncreated divine energy, given to us (1:19–23; 3:16–21) and actively used by us. The Christian has “put on” (4:24) at baptism all the qualities listed as armor in vv. 14–17. These qualities must be exercised in the conflict of growth: no struggle, no deification.
Just as important as spiritual armor is a Christian's readiness and alertness: diligent prayer and watchfulness in submission to the Holy Spirit (see 1:16; 3:14–21; 5:20). Those on the “front lines,” apostles and evangelists in this case, require the backup power of a praying Church.
6:21-22  Tychicus presumably was the bearer of the letter.
This final benediction parallels the greeting (1:3–14).
This is the only epistle in which St. Paul includes the clergy, the bishops and deacons, in his address. St. John Chrysostom says this is because it was the clergy in Philippi who collected the funds Paul so badly needed, and sent them to him by Epaphroditus. Bishops are the leading presbyters. By the time this letter was written, around AD 63, not only were bishops present in Philippi, but James was presiding over the church in Jerusalem (Acts 15:13) and tradition reveals that Peter was bishop in Antioch—and later in Rome. (Tradition sometimes refers to the men Peter designated his successors in those places as the “first” bishops, affirming the difference between the apostles and the overseers they appointed.) Paul's pastoral epistles outline the qualifications for the office of bishop (1Ti 3:1–7; Tts 1:7–9).
Fellowship, the Greek word koinonia, is central to this epistle and to Orthodox Christianity in general. It implies true communion, a more fundamental community of life and worship than is usually conveyed by the word “fellowship.”
And this I pray: This prayer of Paul shows his love and pastoral care for the Philippians. Their behavior makes him confident that God will continue to perfect them—and those who follow in their footsteps.
Our witness for Christ goes beyond the words of our mouths to the way we live and the way we die: the totality of what we are and do. St. Paul expects deliverance (v. 19), though not necessarily for his body (v. 20). His expectation and hope (v. 20) is of eternal life.
To suffer for His sake is a repeated theme in this epistle. Suffering not only bears witness to others, as Paul's chains have done (see vv. 7, 13), but also can serve to increase our faith. Suffering is a gift from Christ, as is faith: it is a participation in His grace.
Conceit, or vainglory, is a common and fatal vice. It hinders spiritual growth, for conceit causes us to despise those who have a different way of life, thinking we are better than they. “The spirit of despair exults at the sight of mounting vice, the spirit of vainglory at the sight of the growing treasures of virtue” (JohnCli). To be conceited is a form of idolatry. It captures those who say they want to please God, but secretly wish to please other people more.
This passage is a hymn already in use in the Church, quoted here by St. Paul because it calls us to ponder the humility of Christ, a truth necessary for suffering Christians to understand and live out. The passage has been incorporated into many hymns of the Orthodox Church. Christ is He who, being in the form of God, is also in the form of a bondservant (v. 7), in our likeness (see Gn 1:26), and is voluntarily subject to death. He who has died, God has exalted and given the name Lord (v. 11), a name God the Son shares with God the Father from all eternity.
The form (Gr. morphe) of God, a concept parallel with “the image [Gr. eikon] of God” (Col 1:15), refers to the Son's sharing in full the divine nature. Robbery (Gr. harpagmon, lit. “prize” or “booty”) refers to an object stolen and tightly clutched. Christ has equality with God not by seizure but by nature, and with absolute security. There is, therefore, no threat, loss, or any change in the divine nature of the Son of God when He takes our humanity to Himself and offers us salvation.
Made Himself of no reputation (v. 7; lit. “emptied Himself”) deals with the Son's will, not His nature. He emptied Himself not by laying down His divine nature or setting it aside, but by voluntarily taking on our human nature. To human beings He looks just like another human being, for being truly incarnate, He is fully man by nature. He took the form of a bondservant, voluntarily sharing our human condition except for one thing: sin. In His humanity, He showed the fullness of humility by His obedience to the death that has enslaved humanity. To die on a cross, the death of a criminal, was repulsive to the Romans and considered a curse by the Jews. But His death brings life to all who are joined to Him.
Therefore, because of Christ's sacrifice, we are to take hold of what God offers, accepting His grace and working toward becoming mature in Christ. Note the cooperation: we work out our own salvation (v. 12) while it is God who works in us to do His will (v. 13).
Service is literally “liturgy.” St. Paul sees himself being poured out as an offering, a participation in Christ's sacrifice, for he also participates in Christ's sufferings. In all this, we see the attitude that prevailed throughout the entire early Church: there is no separation between worship and life. They are one. To worship Christ is to live for Him and in Him.
These verses portray the leadership and the laity in the primitive Church working together. Paul is confident of his authority to send Timothy (v. 19) to Philippi, which demonstrates Paul's apostolic or episcopal role. Timothy is an apostle as well, sent to care for this church. Epaphroditus is a fellow worker and fellow soldier (v. 25) who earns high praise. Early tradition tells us Epaphroditus later became bishop of Philippi and died a martyr.
The Judaizers were teaching that Christians needed to submit themselves to the Law of Moses, especially emphasizing the rite of circumcision (v. 3). Paul boldly tags them with the name they gave to Gentiles—dogs (v. 2)—and compares their circumcision to the self-inflicted mutilation (v. 3) of some pagan cults. True Israel, the Church, does not rely on outward observance of the law. She is the mystical body of Christ Jesus, composed of those who worship God in the Spirit (v. 3).
3:4-6 Though Paul could boast concerning his ancestry, his circumcision, his keeping of the law (v. 5)—he is a more zealous Jew than they are—he knows this is not true righteousness.
True righteousness is the knowledge of Christ Jesus (v. 8). He is the “pearl of great price” and eternal life (Jn 17:3). A faith that obeys Christ is the very content and meaning of life, and it is for this that we suffer the loss of all things (v. 8) and deny ourselves. Everything about us must be subordinated to Christ and His Kingdom (see Mt 6:19–34; 24:36–25:46).
Faith is the name of the relationship that gives us full participation in the life of Christ and in His resurrection (v. 10). Faith includes our assent to articles of belief, but it is also our openness to God's action in our lives. The meaning of our suffering comes in sharing in Christ's suffering and death, becoming like Him. Why? So that we may be with Him in glory.
3:12-16 What is the goal (v. 14) of the maturing Christian? For Paul it is that we be engaged in the struggle of faith, confident that Christ has made us His own, but knowing we are not yet perfected. Thus, we are zealous to press on (v. 12) toward the completion of our salvation, the prize of the upward call of God (v. 14)—the resurrection to eternal life.
Because St. Paul and other saints set an example for us, a pattern for us to follow, we do follow in their steps (tradition) and honor them in the process (veneration).
3:18-21  The enemies of the cross of Christ (v. 18) is a reference to those made captive to dietary laws, circumcision, and discipline. Christian spirituality, by contrast, is based in the age to come, knowing we have no glory in this age. The passage from humiliation to exaltation that Christ experienced (2:5–11) is promised to those Christians who follow Him in perseverance. Transform our lowly body (v. 21) implies a change not in substance but to His glorious body, a change from corruption to incorruption.
4:2 Euodia and Syntyche are two women who assisted Paul in his ministry in Philippi.
It is most likely this Clement, a disciple of Paul, who later became the bishop of Rome. A long letter, still in existence, to the Corinthian church is attributed to him.
Paul often uses the word always in relation to prayer. Rejoicing always is a fruit of perseverance in daily prayers (see 1Th 5:16–18).
How do we handle the daily pressures of life? By (1) faith that the Lord is at hand, present with us (v. 5); (2) refusing to worry, being anxious for nothing (v. 6); (3) prayer (v. 6); (4) thanksgiving . . . to God (v. 6); (5) meditation on that which is virtuous (v. 8); and (6) imitating the godly (v. 9).
Here is the secret of contentment.
Giving thanks for the church in Colosse, Paul commends them with his faith, hope, love trilogy (vv. 4, 5). Note the gospel is the same in Colosse as in all the world (v. 6), indicating the catholic (universal) nature of the faith in the first century. Elements of this gospel include: (1) faith in Christ Jesus alone, no other (v. 4); (2) love for all the saints (v. 4); (3) hope in the Kingdom of heaven (v. 5); (4) true preaching (v. 6); and (5) godly ministry, as established by Epaphras (vv. 7, 8).
A summary of progress in a truly spiritual life: from discernment of God's will (v. 9) to doing God's will (v. 10) with divine energy and virtue (v. 11), within the Church, the baptized and eucharistic assembly. In the apostolic tradition, this life is open to all the saints, not just to a few.
1:12-13  Being a Christian goes beyond changing masters from Satan to God, to a change of kingdoms as well—from that of darkness to the kingdom of the Son.
No clear distinction is made between Christ as God and Christ as Man, but the point of the verse is obvious. As God, Christ is eternally and consubstantially (of one essence) the image (Gr. eikon, “icon”) of the Father. As Man, Christ is the image in which man was made and toward which man is moving. In both natures, He fully represents and manifests the Father. As God, Christ is the firstborn over all creation in that the Father created everything through Him, as the Only Begotten Son of God. As Man, Christ is the firstborn over all creation in that He has authority over creation. In either case, creation is fully subject to Him. Contrary to the Colossian heresy, in which He was considered one of the created mediators, Christ is the only Mediator and Lord of all.
Thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers are ranks of angels. Christ is not only the source (through Him) of creation—of all things, on earth and in heaven—but also its goal (for Him; see Eph 1:10).
1:18 The head and the body have one and the same nature. In this case the body comes from, submits to, and continues to exist in the head, so the one nature is the glorified humanity of Christ. As Christ has supreme and life-giving authority (the firstborn) over the original creation, where life is temporary, so He has supreme and life-giving authority over the new creation, where life is eternal. But now He is Head through the body, the church. The Church, then, is the source of the restoration and fulfillment of creation in Christ.
The fullness was a term used by the gnostic heretics to describe all the spiritual beings and forces they saw as intervening between man and God. Of these, Jesus was seen as but one mediator in one level of existence with one force. Paul differs, saying Christ is Himself the fullness. Jesus is everything, God in all fullness; and in His human nature, resurrected and ascended, He is the created and glorified Head of all creation. Jesus Christ ends the alienation between God and creation, bringing creation as a sacrament into a living union with God.
1:15-20 This passage is an ancient christological hymn, perhaps expanded upon by Paul, in two stanzas: (1) Christ the Head of creation (vv. 15–17) and (2) Christ the Head of the new creation (vv. 18–20). This hymn may have been part of the early baptismal liturgy; if so, Paul could be using it to bring the Colossians back to their original profession.
The body of His flesh is the mortal (capable of dying) humanity of Christ before His Resurrection. The heretics' angels cannot save us because they have not become one of us. We cannot be saved unless we become one with Christ by being united with Him in His death. Through His death, we die with Him.
Christ and the Church are so intimately united that, as we suffer and die with Him (beginning at baptism), so Christ suffers with us in our work of reconciliation. (See Mt 25:40; Lk 10:16; Jn 15:18–21; Acts 9:1, 4, 5; Rom 8:17; 2Co 1:5; 4:10; Php 1:20; 3:10.)
The Colossian church is bound not only to its confession of faith (vv. 15–20) but also to its divinely appointed apostle.
Mystery: See Eph 1:9, 10 and note; see also Glossary.
For those who seek the secrets of the universe, a desire the Colossian heretics fed upon, Paul assures us Christ knows everything. Most of this is hidden to us, so we must seek Christ alone, who is God's Wisdom. In the Incarnation He became for us a Servant, taking on our weak and mortal existence, but He always remains Lord of all.
The basic principles of the world include (1) the basic elements of matter; (2) the laws that regulate the universe, including those conditioning fallen human life, such as death, sin, the flesh, and the Mosaic Law; (3) the spirits who use these conditions to oppose Christ and are at the core of the pagan cults and systems of knowledge; and (4) human traditions opposed to God's tradition.
See Jn 1:14. Do we need to rise through manifold levels of being to get to God? No! The incarnate Christ is fully God and fully Man—He fulfills human nature, and all levels of being submit to Him. Do we need to rise slowly through a humanly conceived spiritual bureaucracy to God? No! We go directly through Christ, for He is the sovereign power, the head over angelic beings.
Do we need to perform manmade rituals and works in order to gain a hearing before the Redeemer? No! We come through God's work, Holy baptism, to be joined to Christ. For Jesus Christ triumphs over the conditions of fallen existence—sin, death, the flesh, the law, and evil spirits—by His death and Resurrection. In the OT rite of circumcision only a small piece of flesh is removed; in the circumcision of Christ, our baptism, we die to the flesh and live to God.
Don't the dark powers still have the ability to take power over us? No! All of these created principalities and powers, the angels who are the hidden powers behind fallen human existence, are defeated by the Resurrection. Even the law has been fulfilled and thus transcended (v. 14). Christ triumphs, and He rides in triumphal procession, leading out the prisoners of war in chains before Him, while He follows behind in His glorious shining victor's chariot, the Cross.
Here Paul speaks against false worship (vv. 16, 17), false mysticism (vv. 18, 19), and false asceticism (vv. 20–23). He says, let no one judge you (v. 16) and do not submit to the basic principles of the world (v. 20; see v. 8 and note). For man does not live by shadow, the law, but by the substance (lit. “body”) that produces the shadow (v. 17), which is the body of Christ, the Church. Man-centered superstitious ritualism is deadly. The fulfilling liturgy is that of the body of Christ, culminating in the Eucharist. (For Paul on liturgical worship, see 1Co 11–14.) Mystical experiences are not wrong in themselves, but we must beware of deception, pride, schism, and a mind controlled by passions and the body. (For Paul on mystical experiences, see 2Co 12; Eph 1; 3.) Ascetic practices—prayer, fasting, almsgiving—are taught by God (Mt 6), but enemies lie along that path as well. Submitting to created realities, heeding human traditions, the deception of feeding the flesh when you think you are denying it, are false asceticism and condemned as pride. (For Paul on asceticism, see 1Co 9; 1Ti 6:12; 2Ti 2:3–6).
Using baptism as his backdrop, Paul counters the practices of the heretics in Colosse (2:16–23) with the practices of the apostolic Church: true mysticism (vv. 1–4), true asceticism (vv. 5–14), and true liturgical experience (vv. 15–17).
True mysticism: Christians both have received Christ's exalted resurrection life in baptism, and need to keep on seeking the ultimate and spiritual glories of the age to come. Remember your baptism! Live according to His Resurrection! Seek your true life in Christ, awaiting the heavenly and glorious final revelation!
True asceticism: As baptized Christians, we are becoming in practice what we are already in spirit. As we died with Christ, so we must will to experience death daily by “killing” old sinful and disintegrating passions (vv. 5–9). As we were raised with Christ, so we must will to experience life daily by the virtuous and unifying desires of the new man we all are in the body of Christ (vv. 10–14).
The new man grows from one stage of perfection to another, becoming the image of Jesus Christ and throughout eternity remaining the image of Him who created him.
True liturgical experience: Note how the liturgy of worship can be experienced as divine through the unity and holiness of the Church—the one New Man in Christ. Worship is experienced in the word of Christ, including the Scriptures and their exposition; the hymns and spiritual songs; the Eucharist (giving thanks to God).
Life in the home is in the Lord; the family is a little church and is to live in the baptismal and eucharistic life of the Church. Duties are reciprocal, everyone having the same standing before the same Master. All authority is for the sake of loving service (all authority is humbling) and all submission is to God (all submission is glorious).
Paul expects the church to be at corporate prayer often. Not only are the apostles to speak the mystery of Christ, but every member of the church is to have speech... with grace so as to answer those seeking the true faith.
4:7–9  Tychicus is the courier for this letter as well as for those to the Ephesians (Eph 6:21) and to Philemon.
Paul expected his letters to be read aloud to the churches and at least sometimes to be sent on to neighboring churches. (Colosse and Laodicea are less than 15 miles apart.) Paul's letter coming from Laodicea probably is the one we know as Ephesians.
As with all of Paul's epistles, 1 Timothy begins with the traditional Greco-Roman format of greeting—addressed not to a church, but to a true son in the faith, Timothy. (The disciple of a rabbi was called his “son.”) This relationship supports Paul's title “father” (1Co 4:15) and, by application, the use of “Father” for priests.

God the Father is called Savior (see 2:3; 4:10; Tts 1:3; 2:10; 3:4), for every work of the Trinity is the work of all three Persons in which each Person participates.
Paul's faithful are plagued by Jewish fables and endless genealogies, energetic disputation over myth and human tradition for argument's sake. “The Jews wasted their whole course on these unprofitable points [for] historical knowledge and research” (JohnChr).
The law is the Old Covenant Mosaic Law, not the commandments of Christ in the Gospels or the canons of the Church.
The law is good because God gave it (Rom 7:16). It was a schoolmaster for God's chosen people, to confront and control their sin until the Incarnation of His Son fulfills it; and a guide to lead all people to Christ.
Paul, as a former rebel toward God and persecutor of the Church (Acts 9:1–3), gives glory to God for his calling as an apostle. Throughout the OT and NT and church history, the greatest sinners have often become most notable saints (Moses, Rahab, David, Photini—the woman at the well, Matthew, Paul, St. Mary of Egypt).
Used in Orthodox liturgical prayer and said by all approaching the chalice for Holy Communion.
1:20 If Paul is a recipient of God's grace, here are two who rejected this grace and stand as a warning to all.
Intercessory prayers are to be offered for all without partiality, but special attention is given to prayer for those in authority. Thus, Orthodox Christians repeatedly pray for “all civil authorities.”
The religions of the Greek world were pluralistic and elite. In contrast, Paul teaches that there is one Savior, one God and one Mediator (v. 5). And God offers salvation equally to all, for He created us to share in His goodness, and for this end He became a Man like us.
Some who are opposed to the established Church use this verse to claim that “all you need is Jesus—not the Church, her clergy, and her sacraments.” But the Son became the one Mediator by becoming Man through the Holy Spirit and a virgin—that is, through God and men. He “built” His humanity not from Himself alone but from another, the Virgin Mary. Likewise, as the Mediator He says, “I will build My church” (Mt 16:18); He establishes her leaders and her worship. As Mary gives us Christ in His humanity, the Church introduces us to Him, who alone is our Mediator.
Regarding ancient slaves, a ransom did not so much purchase them as free them from their bondage to experience liberty.
Prayer must be united with quiet and godly behavior. Does this contradict praying secretly, not to be seen by men (Mt 6:5, 6)? No. The warning is against spiritual showmanship, not congregational prayer. The secret “room” (Mt 6:6) is a person's innermost being, perfectly consistent with praying everywhere. In contrast to the Jewish emphasis on one primary earthly place for prayer (the temple in Jerusalem), Christians experience the fullness of prayer wherever they may be.
The Church's greatest saint is a woman, the Virgin Mary, Mother of God. Some women, including Mary Magdalene, are called “Equal to the Apostles,” others serve as deacons (Rom 16:1). While sharing full equality in Christ, women are not ordained to the offices of bishop and presbyter.
If salvation is holistic, involving all of one's life, then women who have children are saved, in part, by motherhood, if they persevere in godliness. Our God-given role in life is the place of our salvation.
St. John Chrysostom on blameless: “Every virtue is implied in this word. [The bishop's] life should be unspotted so that all should look up to him, and make his life the model of their own.” In the early Church, a bishop could be married. Today married men may be ordained to the Orthodox priesthood. The Sixth Ecumenical Council (681) sanctioned celibate bishops, but only as a special dispensation relative to the feeling that it was not acceptable for a bishop to live with a woman. Married bishops are in accordance with the general teaching of Orthodox canon law.
For qualifications for the first deacons, see Acts 6:1–6.
Wives: Or perhaps “women,” referring to deaconesses.
While the Scriptures are the inspired truth of God in human words (2Ti 3:15–17), the Church is the pillar and ground of that truth.
Paul quotes an ancient Christian creed or hymn that is especially clear about the divinity of Jesus Christ. Another such creed is found in 2Ti 2:11–13. (See also 6:15, 16; Eph 1:3–14; 5:14; Php 2:6–11; Col 1:15–20.) Thus, when the early Councils met and issued creeds, they were well within the mark of biblical precedent.
A conscience seared with a hot iron describes the reality that repeated willful sin blunts our sensitivity to good and evil. A grim warning to all Christians to reject evil in all forms and thereby maintain a softness of heart toward God.
Whereas sexual abstinence and fasting are important factors in spiritual discipline, we control our passions not because the material world is evil, but because we are corrupt and tend to sin. Sex and food are not unclean, but willful disobedience, an unthankful disposition, and uncontrolled desires are. The Church is here to bring the whole world back to God.
The word (Gr. logos) of God is the Son (Jn 1:1; Heb 4:12; 1Pt 1:23; 1Jn 1:1; Rev 19:13). A word of God in the NT can be God's creative will (2Pt 3:5, 7), the OT (Mk 7:13), a blessing using God's name (as here), the gospel itself (Acts 4:31; 6:7; 13:5, 26; 15:7, 36; 1Th 2:13), or a special message from God. The Son is the ultimate reference for every other word of God. Sometimes it is difficult to tell whether “word” refers to Christ Himself or words about Him (Col 1:25). To spread the word of God is to spread Christ Himself. (The Greek rema is identically translated as “word” whether it refers to the gospel [Heb 6:5; 1Pt 1:25], a message from God [1Pt 1:25], or an act of God [Heb 11:3].) Words of faith (v. 6) means speech consonant with the gospel. Doctrine, or “teaching,” is the content of the gospel. Thus, the rich and manifold speech concerning salvation serves our communion with Christ, the Word of God. He is the reason these words are vital and powerful. Using words without the Word is vain.
4:7-8 Paul is no stranger to physical exercise and its benefits (see 1Co 9:24–27), but he prefers spiritual exercise, for it leads to life eternal.
Give attention to reading, whether personal reading or the public reading of Scripture during worship, is tied with exhortation (preaching) and doctrine (teaching). The early Christians had a liturgical worship structure—including the reading of Scripture and the homily—the roots of which were in the synagogue.
This refers to Timothy's ordination as presbyter (priest), which was conferred by the apostles, as it is by the bishop today (2Ti 1:6; see Acts 6:6). In 5:22 Paul gives Timothy instructions for ordination. In continuity with the NT, Orthodox ordination to the diaconate and priesthood comes through the laying on of hands by the bishop.
Specific advice on caring for widows. If there are no family members to do this, care belongs to the parish, for a widow has God as her guardian (Dt 10:18; Ps 67:6; Ps 145:9). A “real” widow (vv. 3, 5, 16), however, in turn cares for the parish through prayer (v. 5) and works of compassion (v. 10) while maintaining a pure and holy life (vv. 6, 7, 11–16). Special qualifications are given for those who are on the register of widows (vv. 9, 10); perhaps this was an “order” for charitable service. Widows have from the start constituted a definable group within the Church (Acts 6:1; 9:39, 41).
The laborer is worthy of his wages (Mt 10:10; Lk 10:7) may be the first use of the Gospels as Scripture.
Timothy's physical problems—perhaps from strict water-fasts—are not miraculously overcome, and Paul does not suggest breaking the fasts, only decreasing their rigor.
6:11 The beginning of repentance is to flee from sin and to abstain from passions.
6:12 Confessed the good confession is a reference to Timothy's words at his baptism or ordination.
6:11-16 A remarkable challenge for all who serve God, especially the ordained clergy.
The faith and worship of the Church is a sacred trust, to be preserved intact, without personal-preference changes and without personal gain.
The gift of God is the grace of the Holy Spirit, or charism, given Timothy at his ordination. This grace fills up what is lacking and gives authenticity to the priesthood. But it is not automatic. We must stir up and rekindle it.
While any Christian may be persecuted (Jn 15:20; see Mt 5:11, 12 and note), we reject feelings of fear or timidity. We do not “quench the Spirit” (1Th 5:19), but act with power and courage (2:12; see Mt 10:33; Lk 9:26).
Our salvation and calling are based on His grace and love, not on anything we have done to merit God's favor (Eph 2:8–10; Tts 3:5, 6).
“He submitted [to suffering] so that he might break the power of Death and demonstrate the resurrection from the dead—thus it was necessary for him to be manifested in flesh. Also [he submitted] so that he might fulfill the promise to the fathers and, while he was preparing the new people for himself and while he was still on earth, to prove that after he has brought about the resurrection he will judge” (Barn 5:6, 7).
1:13-14 The pattern of sound words (v. 13) is oral apostolic tradition which you have heard. It holds the same weight as written apostolic tradition (see 2:2; 2Th 2:5). Oral or written, this Holy Tradition is rooted in Christ Jesus (v. 13) and kept by the Holy Spirit who dwells in us (v. 14).
Perhaps Onesiphorus is dead. The Church has never hesitated to pray for her departed that they may find mercy from God on the Day of the Lord. (The first Lord in the verse refers to the Son, the second to the Father.)
2:2 Paul establishes a clear chain of witnesses to oral tradition. Christian tradition is for all believers; it is “catholic,” belonging to the whole Church, and needs to be passed down to others unhindered. This stands in clear contrast to the elitism of the major religions of the first-century Roman world, including gnosticism and the various mystery religions.
Faithful ministry requires discipline: obedience, self-denial, and struggle. Our icons (examples) here are the soldier (vv. 3, 4), the athlete (v. 5), and the farmer (v. 6).
Verses 11–13 may be an early baptismal hymn. Ministry is based on union with Christ and immovable loyalty to Him. The end, for the minister and his hearers, is life with Christ in the eternal Kingdom.
The last phrase of this verse is quoted in an Orthodox liturgical prayer for the bishops.
Profane and idle babblings (like nonsense syllables) is an apt description of heresy.
What is the heresy of Hymenaeus and Philetus? Perhaps a superspiritual interpretation of the resurrection (v. 18) as affecting only the soul and not the whole person (Greek philosophy thought bodily resurrection absurd); thus resurrection is thought to be already past, having occurred at baptism. They use the language of baptism but in a non-Orthodox way. Let us not be naive: this sort of novel doctrine can spread through the community like cancer (v. 17).
Heresy corrupts: bad theology leads to bad behavior. The Church on earth is a mixture of wheat and tares sown together (vv. 19–21). Membership in the Church guarantees nothing—even the baptismal confession (quoted in v. 19) acknowledges the necessity of struggle.
Good theology helps us along the path to good behavior. Although the truth stands firm and unalterable and cannot tolerate the false (see 1Co 5:1–13; 2Co 6:14–18), it instills a reasonable patience and gentleness toward all, especially toward false teachers—while not losing sight of the fact that they are enemies and to be avoided (3:5).
While technically we have been in the last days since Christ walked the earth, the Church has seen this and other warnings as a reference to the days just before His coming again. A great decay in morals (see Mt 24; Mk 13; 2Th 2; 2Pt 2; compare Rom 1:28–32) will even infiltrate the Church (v. 5; see Mt 7:15–27; 1Co 5:1–5; 1Ti 4:1–11). Like the prominent men of Cain's city (Gn 4:16–24), these offenders willfully reject law and morals out of love of self and love of pleasure.
The form and power of godliness are intended to be inseparable. We normally do not have the power of godliness without the form. Charismatic power, however, can be twisted for evil and greed (Acts 8:9–20). Outward forms, even of liturgical worship, can be carried on without power or conviction (see Mt 7:15; 24:4, 5, 24). As faith without works is a form without substance (Jam 2:26), so is religion without power. This is a stern warning to those of us committed to proper form.
3:8 In Jewish tradition, Jannes and Jambres are the Egyptian magicians who opposed Moses in Ex 7.
Paul's life exhibits what the Lord taught: In this world, godliness elicits persecution (see Jn 15:20).
Having exhorted Timothy with the example of his own steadfastness (vv. 10–13), Paul now issues a reminder of the depth of Timothy's training, which combined both oral and written instruction (see Mt 28:16–20; 1Co 11:2; 2Th 2:15; 3:6). A part of this tradition is Scripture. Paul, of course, speaks of the OT, since the NT did not yet exist.
A drink offering is a wine, water, or oil offering poured over animal or grain sacrifices at the conclusion of both Jewish and pagan rites.
The race is the life and work that God gave Paul. The comparison of the spiritual life to an athletic contest (see 1Co 9:24–27) is common in the writings of the ascetic Fathers.
Demas provides a sobering footnote to Paul's ministry. He was Paul's companion in Rome, his co-laborer in apostleship, and a close friend of Luke (Col 4:14; Phm 24). Yet Demas—after these great and glorious years of service with the Apostle—forsook Paul, having loved this present world. It is in the face of tragedies such as this that the Scriptures, the Fathers, the prayers and hymns of the Church together call us repeatedly to a life of humility and repentance—that we should not think of ourselves more highly than we ought.
4:11 Paul is now reconciled with (John) Mark (see Acts 15:37–40). The sharp contention between Barnabas and Paul is forgotten, and the true love of Christ reigns.
“The blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, having founded and established the Church of Rome, handed over the office of bishop to Linus—of whom Paul makes mention in his second letter to Timothy” (Iren). Eusebius, writing in the fourth century, says the same.
In the Roman world, a bondservant (Gr. doulos) was in an unenviable position: he had no name, rights, will, or even time of his own. But in the world of the OT, a bondservant was often the king's right-hand man—one of the most honored titles. Moses and other OT prophets were the bondservants of the Lord. Paul, of course, knew of both usages. An apostle, “one sent out,” was a New Covenant equivalent to a bondservant.

Acknowledgment (Gr. epignosis) is deeper than mental knowledge; it is experiential, not theoretical. Knowledge (the truth) and action (godliness) are a unity; knowledge that does not change one's life does not save.
When Paul evangelized an area, he did not leave it unattended (1Co 3:6–10; Col 1:7).
All Christians are priests in Christ. Candidates for eldership, that is, for the special priesthood inside the general priesthood of all, should exhibit a wholesome and united family life (v. 6), control over passions and emotions (v. 7), loving and righteous relations with others (v. 8), and careful adherence to tradition (v. 9; see also 1Ti 3:1–16; 5:21; 2Ti 2:2).
False leaders also exhibit certain characteristics. They upset rather than reconcile (v. 11), have an eye for personal profit (v. 11), lack discipline and integrity (vv. 12, 13), misjudge reality—here setting up external laws when the uncleanness is internal (vv. 14, 15), and are immoral. Bad theology leads to bad behavior (v. 16).
Good theology helps lead us to good behavior. Various classes, distinguished here primarily by age and sex, have characteristic problems and responsibilities.
Note the opportunity for older women in the Church to be role models and teachers for young wives and mothers.
While Christian ethical teaching often appears similar to other systems—Paul uses both Roman and Jewish ethical terms—the basis of Christian ethics is unique. Christians are good not merely out of obedience to law or harmony with nature, or in order to gain immortal bliss for the soul. Rather, they are righteous in anticipation of the age to come, the eschaton, the age of the fullness of creation in the incarnate Son of God. Grace (v. 11) is the uncreated energy of God, the gift of the Holy Spirit, through which He gives His gifts to man in tender mercy and good will. It is a formative power, the rule of life of the eschaton, requiring our determined participation. To belong to God is to become like God. To be ransomed, or “owned,” by God (v. 14) is not simply legal and static, but means to live in solidarity with Him: a blessed, victorious struggle.
The Church Fathers regard our great God and Savior Jesus Christ as a landmark statement of the divinity of Christ (see Rom 9:5; 2Pt 1:1). In Paul's thought, “God” refers usually to the Person of the Father, not to the divine nature.

As Paul grew older, it seems his sense of the difference between this age and the age to come deepened. In his earlier letters, he emphasized the present realization of God's power; now he speaks more of our future transfiguration.
The washing of regeneration, baptism, and renewing of the Holy Spirit, chrismation, form a unity in our salvation, clear throughout the NT. Jesus taught we are born from above through “water and the Spirit” (Jn 3:5); Peter preached salvation in Christ through being “baptized” and receiving “the gift of the Holy Spirit” (Acts 2:38). Now Paul calls us to the washing of the water and the renewing of the Holy Spirit.
While Paul is painfully aware we are awaiting the consummation of the age to come (2:13), he knows we already participate in the eschatological community. Baptism and chrismation are the beginning, the rite of passage toward a progressive life of renewal in Christ (see 2Co 3:16–18).
3:10-11 A divisive person is one who “picks” or “chooses from” the whole truth. A sect is a group that follows its own choices, independent of holy tradition. Incomplete or erroneous beliefs result in immoral behavior.
It is not known whether Philemon was yet ordained as a presbyter/bishop; he is recognized for his kindness, hospitality, and gracious spirit.
Love and faith go together. As true faith includes works, so true faith includes love. We cannot believe in God without loving others.
Faith unites a person not only to Christ but to all who are in Him—including those who have greatly wronged us, as Onesimus had wronged Philemon.
1:1-7 Paul's apostolic spirit is manifest in his affection, benevolence, and regular intercessions for his fellow laborers.
Paul appeals not to his own apostolic authority (v. 8; see 2 Corinthians). Instead he appeals to his age, to his being a prisoner of Jesus Christ (v. 9)—for whom we should be quick to do all that we can, and to Philemon's Christian conscience (see v. 14).
Paul became Onesimus's spiritual father by convincing him of the truth of Christ (see 1Co 4:15; Gal 4:19).
Paul sees to it that Onesimus fulfills his legal responsibilities by returning him to his master, concerns about the justice of slavery notwithstanding.
1:14-17 While the master-slave relationship continues, it is transcended by brotherhood in Christ.
Onesimus stole from or otherwise wronged Philemon when he ran away. Put that on my account is reminiscent of how Christ has taken away our sins that we might go free (2Co 5:21; 8:9).
Paul had also brought Philemon to Christ.
Perhaps Paul hopes Philemon will not only receive Onesimus with forgiveness, but will also free him and return him to Paul.
1:1-4 These verses provide an introductory summary to 1:1–10:18. The new covenant is superior to the old, for the old is incomplete and preparatory whereas the new is complete and final. In the new man enters into the heavenly realm through Christ and is glorified (see Php 2:5–11 for a close parallel).
1:2-3 Through whom also He made the worlds (v. 2; see Jn 1:3) and upholding all things by the word of His power (v. 3; see Col 1:16, 17): These two phrases reveal the Son as God acting in the world. The Lord Jesus Christ is (1) the One who created the universe, together with the Father and the Holy Spirit, and is therefore (2) the One who sustains the Creation and has absolute authority over it. It is natural, then, that the Son, as both God and Man, is heir of all things (v. 2). If the sons of Abraham hoped to be heirs of the promised land, the sons of Christ can hope to be heirs of the whole universe.

The first half of v. 3 is quoted verbatim in the Liturgy of St. Basil the Great. The brightness of His glory expresses the Son's nature, His origin from and identity of nature with the Father. He is the Father's brightness because He is begotten from the Father beyond time and without change. Thus, the Nicene Creed speaks of “Light of Light.” As the sun does not exist without radiating light, so the Father does not exist without His Son.

Thus, the Son reflects His Father's glory in this world. The unapproachable light of divinity, the divine energy (1Ti 6:16; 1Pt 2:9; 1Jn 1:7), is approachable only in the incarnate Christ (Jn 12:36). God's brightness, though it had been experienced at the burning bush (Ex 3:2–4), known by Israel (Ex 10:23; 13:21), and spoken of by the prophets (Ps 35:10; 103:2; Is 9:1; 10:17; Hab 3:4), is especially revealed in Christ's birth (Lk 1:79; 2:32; Jn 1:4–9), the Transfiguration (Mt 17:2) and the Resurrection.

The express image of His person (Gr. hypostasis) expresses the Son's Person as being distinct from the Father. The Son is the perfect and eternal “icon” of the Father. Thus, the personal distinction of God as Trinity is known only through Him (see Jn 14:9). No one knows the Father but through the Son.

Having conquered sin and death, the Son sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, a reference to the Father, showing Christ's exaltation as Man.
In time past and to the fathers (v. 1) are contrasted with in these last days and to us (v. 2). In OT times God spoke constantly through the Holy Spirit in the Law and the prophets, leading His people into greater truth. Now He speaks directly, through His own incarnate Son. The fathers are the leaders of Israel and representative of all the spiritual ancestors of New Israel.
1:4 Having become so much better than the angels, with regard to their role in the old covenant, refers to Christ's human nature, not to His divine nature. The name inherited is an open declaration that this Man is the Son of God. In Hebrews this name is “Son”; in Php 2:11 it is “Lord.”
Christ is superior to the angels. They are, in some Judaic thought, only “the sons of God,” whereas Christ is the Son of God. (The LXX at Dt 32:43, which Hebrews paraphrases in v. 6, literally reads “sons of God,” not “angels of God.”) While Christ is recognized as God's eternal Son at His Baptism and the Transfiguration, it is His enthronement in heaven that settles the matter (v. 4; see Rom 1:4). Begotten is a reference to the Son in His divine, eternal nature. The Nicene Creed states He is “begotten, not made, begotten from the Father before all time.” Today is eternity. There never was a time when God the Son did not exist.
Christ is the firstborn (1) of God, in that He is His one and only eternal Son; (2) of all creation, in that He is the image (icon) by which creation was made and toward which creation is to move; and (3) of man, in that Christ incarnate is the model for man's creation and the goal of man's existence. The angels . . . worship Him because He is God.
Ps 44 (quoted in 1:8, 9) celebrates a royal enthronement and wedding. The groom is a king who has conquered for righteousness and is called “god” (Elohim), though the king is distinct from God. This celebration is fulfilled with the messianic enthronement and wedding in the Kingdom of God. The OT gives the title “god” to Moses, Samuel, descendants of David, and angels, but it is primarily the Messiah who embodies this title. Here, God the Father calls the Son “God.”
In this quotation from Ps 101:26–28, God the Father (v. 9) is addressing Another as “Lord,” that is, as God.
The role of angels is to minister for those who will inherit salvation. During the NT era, many Jews believed angels mediated the old covenant. Certainly they served the Angel of the Lord, the Son of God. In the new covenant, they serve Him in His humanity. Instead of ruling over man, angels are partners in service with us, our guardian angels.
Much of first-century Judaism believed angels were present at creation and had mediated the old covenant. By using the rabbinic method of demonstration, Hebrews proves to lovers of Judaism that even the OT argues for the superiority of the Son.
An admonition against willful negligence and carelessness by a slow process, a drift (v. 1), of attrition. If (v. 2) and how (v. 3) suggest a conditional statement or question. If Israel was expected to obey the words of created angels or suffer punishment, how much more must we heed what God Incarnate has said through His apostles—especially when the word has been confirmed (v. 3) by many miracles (v. 4) of the Spirit, proof that the Kingdom has come upon us? When we ask in the liturgy for “pardon and remission of our sins and transgressions” and a “good defense before the dread judgment seat of Christ,” we affirm there is a just reward (v. 2) or retribution, a very real judgment.
The Jews expected the Messiah to be an earthly, conquering king—a political success story, not a failure. They would naturally ask, if Jesus is superior to the angels—indeed, a divine Being, as portrayed in ch. 1—why did He die, especially in such a degrading way? Hebrews answers that Christ's humiliation is only temporary (v. 9), it is the only means of redeeming mortal man (vv. 14–16), and it reestablishes man's God-intended dominion over all creation, including the angels (vv. 5–8).
Hebrews applies the discussion in Ps 8 about man to Jesus Christ, the perfect man.
See especially Php 2:5–11. Made a little lower than the angels refers to the Incarnation, the Son becoming Man. Christ's suffering and death have highly exalted Him. The Cross, which should have brought shame and reproach, has brought Christ glory and honor. All of this is not something God has owed to man; it is by the grace of God, His gift. Taste death means to experience it fully, to know it intimately. Christ's death was a real death. He died for everyone, for the whole world, not for the faithful only.
To make . . . perfect through sufferings does not suggest there was imperfection in Christ before the cross. Rather He voluntarily took on human nature (all of one nature, v. 11), which can be saved and perfected only by the suffering of death.
Christ is the pioneering captain of the narrow path to God in His suffering for sin, death, descent into hell, Resurrection, and Ascension. In salvation we take on Christ's way of sufferings. Our perfection requires a growth that is manifested in suffering.
2:14 In the Incarnation, God did not come in appearance only; He truly assumed flesh and blood from the Virgin Mary, Mother of God, and became the same as we are so that He could truly enter death and bring us salvation. Christ destroyed the devil's power by using the devil's strongest weapon—death itself.
2:15 There is a relationship between sin and death: each one leads to the other. Sin causes death, and the fear of death leads one to sin and thus to bondage (Rom 5:12). Christ sets us free from this bondage of sin and death.
In all things He had to be made like His brethren—Christ was even tempted—for what is not assumed is not healed, and what is united to God is saved. The Son is like us in His human nature; we do not become like Him in His divine nature. Hebrews moves without transition from Christ as sacrifice to Christ as High Priest, for He is the Offering and Offerer. He is merciful in behalf of those He serves and faithful in His ministry to God.
Christians are holy brethren; to be in Christ is a heavenly calling, one that separates those in Christ from those who have not heeded His call. As Apostle and High Priest, Christ is both God's representative to man and man's mediator before God. In Him the offices of prophet and priest—of Moses and Aaron—are combined.
The glory of the building goes to the architect rather than to the structure itself. Thus, Moses (v. 5) glorifies Christ, and the Church is consecrated to the glory of God, whose house we are (v. 6).
This reference is to the rebellion of those who left Egypt during the Exodus. Due to their unbelief, the whole generation (v. 10) was forbidden to enter into Canaan, the promised land, and thus could not enter God's rest (v. 11). Rest (Gr. sabbatismos) literally means a Sabbath rest or Sabbath observance.

There are three types of God's rest known to the Jews: (1) the Sabbath rest, the day on which God rested from His works (Gn 2:2, 3); (2) the rest from Egyptian bondage, which the Israelites coming out of Egypt experienced in Canaan; (3) the rest in the kingdom, the ultimate Sabbath rest in heaven established by Messiah. Hebrews uses this OT quote (Ps 94:7–11) concerning Canaan to refer to the rest in the Kingdom of heaven. Significantly, we experience this rest now as we ascend to God in worship (4:4–11).
Those in Christ are not immune to turning away from God. There is a temporary attractiveness in sin, which leads to a hardened heart and ultimately apostasy. We must take constant daily care not to be deceived and thus fall away (see Mk 4:5, 6, 16, 17).
3:14 Union with Christ belongs to those who persevere in their faith to the end, not to those who stop with a one-time profession of faith.
3:16-19 The five questions in this text demonstrate the consequences of Israel's disobedience and her failure to believe God in the wilderness. Once again, faith (v. 19) and works (v. 18) are distinguished but not separated. As the fundamental component of entering God's rest (v. 18) is faith, so the primary cause of failing to enter (v. 19) is unbelief.
4:1 Fear: Keep constant watch.
Faith (3:19) and obedience are inseparable. Lack of one is lack of the other. Lack of either bars entrance to rest.
Joshua and Caleb were the only two men who left Egypt and entered into Canaan (Nm 14:28–32; Dt 1:34–40). They had not participated in the disobedience of Egypt. The possession of Canaan under Joshua, though, was not the promised rest. Otherwise, David would not have spoken centuries later of a rest still remaining for us.
Rest here is a reference to the third type of rest (see note on 3:11), the perfect, final rest of the Kingdom of heaven.
4:11 Man must labor to enter the rest of God, for rest implies prior work.
4:12-13  The word of God and the sword here are living and powerful. The phrase His sight (v. 13) tells us this reference is not to the written word, Holy Scripture, but to the Word of God Himself, our Lord Jesus Christ (see Jn 1:1–18). Nothing is able to escape the discernment of Christ, the Word of God.
Passed through the heavens refers to the Ascension of Christ. It is seen in the context of the Son sitting “at the right hand of the Majesty on high” (1:3). Christ has accomplished His work on earth and has entered into His Sabbath rest.
Christ's empathy with sinners rests on His being tempted in every way we are.
Christ, enthroned at the right hand of the Father, sits on a throne of grace rather than of judgment, granting mercy and grace to help in time of need. The normal position for a priest is standing, not sitting. There is significant power in our enthroned Priest, for He has accomplished and fulfilled the sacrificial offering.
To qualify as priest in the OT one must (1) be taken from among men (v. 1), i.e., be fully human; (2) be appointed for men (v. 1), specifically for liturgical service; (3) offer sacrifices (v. 1); (4) have compassion (v. 2); and (5) be called by God (v. 4). In the Aaronic priesthood a priest identified himself with humanity and had sympathy for his fellow men because he sinned as other men sinned. The sacrifices were vicarious offerings of animals.
5:5-11 Christ assumes and fulfills the OT priesthood (see 5:1–4): Like Melchizedek (v. 6; see 7:1–21; Gn 14:18–20), Jesus is both Priest and King. He does not sin; His sacrifice is the human sacrifice of Himself, and His perfect priesthood continues in the Church to this day.
Cries and tears is likely a reference to our Lord's agonizing prayer in the Garden of Gethsemane (Mt 26:36–46; Mk 14:32–42; Lk 22:39–46).
5:8-9 Christ learned obedience in His human will, which continually and freely submitted to the divine will. In the agony of injustice and in physical pain He submits to the will of the Father. This perfecting of human activity in communion with God shows Christ alone to be the Savior (v. 9).
5:11-20  How can one understand and enter into the message of the Book of Hebrews? By (1) repenting of laziness (5:11; 6:12); (2) exercising one's spiritual senses, especially in doctrinal matters (5:12–6:8); (3) diligently doing good in all things, especially in loving service to others (6:9–12); and (4) firmly believing in Christ and the access He provides to God (6:13–20).
When Christians are not growing spiritually, doctrine is difficult to explain to them. Let us repent of being dull of hearing (v. 11)—a constant criticism Christ and the prophets had of God's people—and habitually and vigorously exercise ourselves in spiritual matters. The primary spiritual exercise is the study and knowledge of the Scriptures (JohnChr).
Perfection is Christian maturity, the result of spiritual growth. Dead works are done without God's grace and without faith. Works of the Law are dead to those who know the new covenant. Good works are done in faith toward God.
Baptisms are all the rites of washing, including those of the OT and of John the Baptist, fulfilled by Christ in the sacrament of holy baptism. Laying on of hands has several uses in the NT, such as for healing, prophetic commission, ordination, and reception of the Holy Spirit (chrismation).
The basic sacraments are crucial to salvation: One is once enlightened in baptism, which is unrepeatable and called the sacrament of illumination (see Eph 5:14). Tasted the heavenly gift (see 1Pt 2:3) may refer to the grace of baptism—Chrysostom says this gift is especially the forgiveness of sin experienced in baptism—and it most certainly refers to the Eucharist. Become partakers of the Holy Spirit refers to the fruit of chrismation, the experience of knowing the Holy Spirit.
A glimpse at some features of oral apostolic tradition.
Besides the sacraments (v. 4), belief and life experience are also essential: tasted the good word of God refers to the message of the gospel and the true doctrine of the Church, especially the confession of faith. The powers of the age to come are manifold: incorruption and eternal life, the presence of the future Kingdom here and now, and also miracles and spiritual gifts (Mt 7:22, 23; 12:28).
Those who revert to Judaism crucify Christ again—they become like those who hung Christ on the Cross, who denied His deity and His saving power. They put themselves in a position of needing to be baptized again, which is impossible, for baptism is death and the dead cannot be put to death. To deny one's baptism is to mock Christ's death. Such may not be renewed again to repentance.
This refers to those who have apostatized, that is, those who, after being baptized, have rejected Christ and His saving power. Historically, these verses have been used extensively in discussions of repentance. For example, Tertullian, the Montanists and other ancient schismatics used these verses to argue there is no repentance from apostasy. The Church holds that those who apostatize may repent and be brought back into the Church after a period of repentance (see Canons VIII, X, and XIV of I Nicea, Canon II of St. Gregory of Nyssa, and the Canons of the Council of Ancyra (AD 314). Nevertheless, such “second conversions” are difficult and rare—thus this sober warning.
These verses are reminiscent of John the Baptist's and Jesus' images and parables of trees and their fruit (Mt 3:8–10; 7:16–20; 12:33; 21:19).
To minister is to serve someone else's will. It has a liturgical dimension. In part, ministry flows out of liturgical worship (see 2Co 9:12, where “the administration of this service” is more literally translated “the service of this worship”). Prayer leads to action: the supreme NT example is the collection for the church in Jerusalem (Rom 15:25, 31; 2Co 8:4).
For examples, see vv. 13–15 and ch. 11.
6:13-15  The promise made to Abraham was a son, an heir through whom God would greatly multiply (v. 14) him.
The two immutable things are God's promise and God's oath (v. 17).
6:19  Behind the veil (see the note on 9:1–5) is heaven.
6:20  Melchizedek: The author picks up the argument from 5:10.
Persecuted Christians are encouraged not to apostatize to Judaism because the founding father of Christ's priesthood, Melchizedek, is superior to the OT priesthood of Levi.

Note the importance of the tithe: The desire to enter into the ministrations of a priesthood is fulfilled when such a liturgical offering is made. Throughout the OT, Israelites showed their continuing desire for God's priesthood by continuing to give a tenth of all they received.
Not only is the founder of the new covenant priesthood superior to that of the old covenant, the rules of the new covenant's priestly order are also superior. Priesthood is so intertwined with a covenant that if the priesthood is changed, so is the covenant (vv. 11–15).
Majesty is a biblical name for God the Father. A high priest sitting on the right hand of majesty would have to be both human and divine. Seated: No one but an equal sits in the presence of a king—much less in the presence of God.
Christ's covenant solves the problems that Moses' could not. Both covenants come from God's grace and require man's willed response. However, Moses' covenant (1) is external to man and cannot solve the root of man's problem, sin and death; (2) cannot reunite and reintegrate man's soul; (3) is learned by teaching; (4) is heeded with fearful compliance; and (5) gives imperfect forgiveness. Christ's covenant (1) is internal—it heals our nature; (2) unifies the inner man—heart and mind are joined in union with God; (3) is therefore grasped intuitively; (4) is heeded with willing cooperation (synergy); and (5) gives perfect forgiveness, even of those sins the old covenant was powerless to deal with.
A most important detail in Hebrews is the inner veil, the second veil. It separates the holy place (v. 2, the sanctuary) from the most holy place (v. 3, the Holiest of All), which contains the ark of the covenant and into which only the high priest can enter and only once a year.

The inner veil forms the locus of the liturgical practice of the old covenant (vv. 6–10) and reveals its imperfection. The people could not draw near to God (see especially v. 8). At His death, Christ solved this alienation (Mt 27:51).
The ark of the covenant contained the relics, as it were, of Israel: the pot of manna, Aaron's rod, and the tablets of the Law.
God is enthroned upon the cherubim; hence, God's throne in Israel's midst, the mercy seat, has a cherub on each side (the Orthodox Christian altar is flanked by cherubim). These representations, along with the pictures of cherubim on the inner veil (Ex 26:31) and the beauty and detailed workmanship of everything made for the tabernacle, serve as the icons of the OT. This, and numerous other passages, held put to rest the fear that the Second Commandment (Ex 20:4–6) prohibits all imagery. God cannot be represented because divine nature is unknowable and hence cannot be depicted. However, when the Son becomes Man, the human nature of God the Son can be, and is, imaged.
While priests entered the holy place daily, only the high priest could enter the most holy place and only once a year, on the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur). He entered with the animal blood of the atonement sacrifice, which was offered first for his own sins and then for the sins of the people. This annual sacrifice reveals the imperfect, temporary status of the old covenant, for (1) only one man can enter God's presence; (2) that man cannot enter continually; (3) he must enter occasionally to repeat the sacrifice for sins, a sacrifice good only for a limited time; (4) this sacrifice deals entirely with materials from this age, which are imperfect and impermanent—it cannot begin a participation in the age to come (v. 10, the time of reformation); (5) it deals mainly with the outer man—it is superficial and cannot purify man's heart and mind, let alone restore fallen human nature.
Christ, in contrast to the OT high priest (see note on 9:6–10), is high priest of the new covenant. He enters the heavenly sanctuary once for all (v. 12)—Christ's one sacrifice covers all sins by all people for all time—with the blood of Christ (v. 14), His own human blood, which heals our corrupt humanity (v. 13, the flesh), restores us to our proper relationship to God, pure (v. 14, cleanse your conscience) and holy, and draws us near to God in liturgical worship (v. 14, serve the living God). Dead works (see 6:1) are human activity in and of this age, participating in mortality and corruption (and normally even in sin). Liturgically, dead works are the actions of old covenant worship.
9:14  Eternal Spirit: Proof the Holy Spirit is fully God.
Hebrews contrasts the Day of Atonement (once every year for forgiveness) with the covenant ceremony (once at the beginning to establish the covenant). In Christ's one sacrificial offering, He effects what all the sacrifices of the old covenant did not. He even covers those saints departed under the old covenant, that they might enter God's presence as they had been promised.

The Greek word diatheke means both covenant (vv. 15, 18–20) and last will and testament (vv. 16, 17). As with a testament, a death (vv. 16, 17) is required to initiate its conditions. This death is a death to sinning; the new condition initiated by the testament is that of the resurrection, the reformation of our nature. As with a covenant, sprinkling with blood (v. 21) is necessary to consecrate all dedicated things into the covenantal reality. The locus of life is blood (Lv 17:11). So blood, our mortal life, is offered to God, who is life, and establishes us in a new relationship with Him (vv. 19–21).
9:21-23 Why was the earthly sanctuary sprinkled with consecrated blood? Because it had to be cleansed, being of this mortal and corrupt realm, and it needed to be consecrated to God. The heavenly sanctuary, of course, never was unclean, but it did need worship to be inaugurated there.
Hebrews moves back to the sacrificial act of the Day of Atonement (from vv. 11–14). The blood sprinkled here brings the life of the covenantal people into God's presence: it reconciles God and man. The final reconciliation, the eternal one, is the presentation of Christ's sacrificial blood (12:24) to God in heaven.
Worship in shadow has no power because it has no substance of its own and does not participate directly in the spiritual reality. Orthodox worship, however, is the very image (Gr. eikon—from which “icon” is derived) of the things. It is united with eternal realities and participates in the Kingdom to come. It does so by participating in the voluntary Passion and exaltation of the incarnate Son (v. 10), the only release from our mortal and corrupt existence.
Although OT sacrifices prefigured Christ's sacrifice, they were powerless in themselves. An effective sacrifice requires a body . . . prepared (v. 5), a righteous human being who voluntarily obeys the Father (v. 7).
A common prophetic theme throughout the OT (see 1Kg 15:22; Ps 50:8–15; Is 1:10–17; Jer 7:21–26; Hos 6:6). This is not in opposition to liturgical, sacramental worship, but a statement of priority: obedience comes before praise. Sacrifice pleasing to God requires voluntary human sacrifice, not the slaughter of dumb animals. The primary instance of this is Christ, who did God's will in a liturgical, sacramental act (v. 10).
A priest stands; a king sits. Christ is both. OT priests stand daily and vainly repeat ineffectual sacrifices. Christ offers His one perfect sacrifice (v. 12) and sits. His work is completed. The Church repeatedly does certain things, but she does not repeat Christ's sacrifices; she participates in Christ's once-for-all sacrifice.
The completeness of Christ's sacrifice establishes the prophesied new covenant:

Sacrifice for sin is complete, sanctification is perfect.
Full assurance of faith: With no doubts or second thoughts. Sprinkled . . . washed: A reference to a single action in the past, to baptism.
Love and good works go hand in hand, as attitude and action. They are almost synonymous.
Assembling: The assembly in the OT (Heb. koheleth) is translated ekklesia in Greek, which we translate as “church.” God instructs the faithful not to forsake assembling as the church. Corporate worship on a daily basis, such as morning prayers or Matins, increases our expectation of the Day, the coming of the Kingdom.
While many sins are willful, to sin willfully is defiant sin or a deliberate repudiation of God (see 5:2; 6:4–6). Christ is the offering for all sin—voluntary and involuntary—which demonstrates God's incomparable grace toward us. But if we deliberately and with full knowledge reject the sacrifice of Christ—which is all-encompassing and final—then where can we possibly turn to obtain forgiveness?
Illuminated: Illumination, or enlightenment, refers to baptism (see 6:4; Rom 6:4; Eph 5:14).
This is not so much a definition of faith as it is a description of how faith works, especially during hard times. It encourages Jewish Christians discouraged by persecution. Things hoped for and not seen, a vision of the future, have encouraged the people of God throughout history: the invisible is often more real than the visible. In the past, mighty works of faith were done by those whose faith was unfulfilled. How much more should those persevere who have inherited the promise, knowing God under the new covenant (vv. 39, 40)?
Faith is simple, but it becomes many-splendored in our lives. For Abraham and Sarah it became a venturesome action (v. 8); obedience (v. 8); patience (vv. 9, 10); trust (v. 11); and confidence (v. 11). Faith moves from the impermanence and discomfort of living in tents made by man (v. 9) to the permanence and solace of the city built by God (v. 10).
Jacob prefigured the Cross when he venerated the top of the staff of Joseph (Gn 47:31) and when he blessed Joseph's sons with his hands crossed (Gn 48:14).
Sawn in two: Some traditions say that Isaiah was killed in this manner by Manasseh. (See the pseudepigraphal Martyrdom of Isaiah; see also 2Ch 24:20–22; Jer 33:20–23; 2Mc 6:18–31; Mt 23:29–36.)
See 9:15. Christ's Incarnation and all that He accomplished for us in the flesh redeems the OT saints, who by faith participate in His Resurrection and His Kingdom.
12:1 The cloud of witnesses includes not only the OT saints mentioned in ch. 11, but also the saints and martyrs of the Lord in all ages. If they made it, so can we. We persevere by getting rid of sin, the weight which keeps us from heeding the truth; setting as our destination the heavenly city, running the race of faith; and keeping our attention focused on Jesus Christ our Lord and King (12:2). This race is not a sprint but a marathon of endurance: it does not end until we fully enter the age to come (see 1Co 9:24–27).
Christ is both the author, that is, the initiator, and the finisher, that is, the perfecter of faith. His joy was to do God's will. He endured the cross in that He voluntarily accepted humiliation and death. We are to imitate His determination and perseverance.
Unpleasant circumstances, which tempt us to complain, may be the chastening of the Lord (v. 5). If the loving discipline of our human fathers brought us to respect them, how much more deserving of respect is the discipline of the Father of spirits (v. 9), our Creator, whose breath gives us life (Gn 1:26; 2:7)?
12:13  Straight paths is a theme found throughout both the OT and the NT. See especially Is 40:3; Mt 7:13, 14.
An especially heavy “weight” (v. 1) is bitterness, a spirit of habitual complaining. Bitterness refuses God's chastening and defiles us before God. Esau became bitter about Jacob's easy, favored life in contrast to his own life of difficulty. Bitterness blinded him to what is truly valuable. It cut off his endurance, so he traded his family honor, his birthright, for one small meal (Gn 25:27–34). For this Esau is called a fornicator (v. 16), being unfaithful to God and uniting his spirit to this temporary age. Later, when he changed his mind, his father Isaac would not change his. Esau missed his blessing (Gn 27:30–40). Thus, our two clear choices for life are bitterness or blessing.
The mountain (v. 18) of the new covenant, Mt. Zion, is the fulfillment of the mountain of the old covenant, Mt. Sinai. Sinai is remembered as the place where God first called Israel to meet Him (Ex 19:9–23; 20:18–21; Dt 4:11, 12; 5:22–26). It was a place of fear, a place not to be approached and touched, out in the desert where Israel could not live permanently. Israel met God, and God spoke, but Israel could not fully enter into God's holiness.
We are encouraged to approach and touch the heavenly mountain, for we already participate in the Kingdom and dwell there. It is more like Mount Zion and Jerusalem (v. 22) than like Sinai (popular Jewish images at that time), for Jerusalem was a habitable place and Zion a place of God's holy presence. This Kingdom is not earthly but heavenly, inhabited by angels (v. 22) as well as men. There is an unending assembly (v. 23), the divinely instituted gathering of God's people of all ages, in which they know themselves as church. There everyone is firstborn (v. 23) and has inherited all. There blood (v. 24) cries not for vengeance and further death—as did Abel's (see 11:4; Gn 4:10)—but for mercy, forgiveness, atonement, and unending life. This is the blood of Christ given to us in the Eucharist.

Heaven is not a place of the separation of the soul from the body. There, soul and body together are transformed into a better (v. 24) reality. For the spirits of just men are made perfect (v. 23; see 11:40) in unity with their bodies: glorified, divinely energized, without the limitations we now experience. This passage is quoted in hymns for both the Trisagion and funeral services of the Orthodox Church. The blood of sprinkling (v. 24) is that of Christ, which effects the new covenant—real blood, effective for the physical people.
What can be shaken (v. 27) is that which is created: temporal, impermanent, imperfect—except for the final consummation of the kingdom (v. 28), which is unshakable. There, life is a eucharistic liturgy. Grace (v. 28) is gratefulness that leads to serving God and worshiping Him in an acceptable way, with proper reverence and godly fear.
This entire passage (beginning with 10:19) is a progressive discourse imploring us to seek God's Kingdom first. Under the new covenant, we can ascend to this heavenly place in worship and in prayer. Christians experience this heavenly dimension fundamentally in the Divine Liturgy. We ascend to that place where we are surrounded by a great . . . cloud of witnesses (v. 1) This is not a physical place (v. 18) but a spiritual place, Mount Zion and the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem (v. 22), inhabited by God, the angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect (v. 23). Here, communion of the saints is established in the NT.

In 9:11, 12 we saw Christ come to the greater and more perfect tabernacle, obtaining eternal redemption for us. In 12:22 this tabernacle is that same spiritual place, showing that we enter the holy place with Christ by virtue of our union with Him (10:19, 20). This is done fundamentally in corporate worship (10:25), by faith (11:1–3), and in order to show gratitude to God (12:28, 29). The content of this worship includes remembering the departed righteous (11:4–40; see also Ps 111:1–6; Pr 10:8).
Practical brotherly love is to be shown toward all Christians, but especially for the lowly, the powerless, and the victims of injustice. Strangers (v. 2) are travelers in need of hospitality. Abraham's hospitality is recalled (Gn 18:1–8; also 19:1–3). Prisoners (v. 3) are to be prayed for and aided if possible, for all those in the body of Christ, the Church, are members of one another (1Co 12:12–27).
13:7 Those who rule are especially the leaders of the sacraments (bishops and priests). These Christian leaders are not only to be prayed for (see v. 3) but followed as models of Christian life as well. The faith of Christian leaders is that faith they both teach and live by.
13:8 Such a faith does not disappoint. Since Christ is God and does not change, His gospel does not change. If Christians in the past attained the eternal Kingdom through faith, so can we. Thus, the Church strives to keep her doctrine pure and without change.
Strange doctrines are “foreign” ones, those not coming from the One, Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic Church. In this case, the outside teaching is Jewish and legalistic. Kosher laws dealing with food do no spiritual good if grace is not at the heart of one's actions. Such has always been the teaching of the Church with regard to fasting (see 9:9, 10).
In the OT, priests were given part of most sacrifices for food, but lay people had no right to eat this food. Under the new covenant, all Christians may eat the food of the altar.
On the only day of the year when the holy of holies could be entered, the Day of Atonement, only the high priest could come in, and then only with the blood of sin offerings. The bodies of these animals were not eaten but burned outside the camp. Christ identified with this supreme sacrifice of the OT in that He suffered and died outside the gate (v. 12). His blood was not carried into the temple in Jerusalem by another human, however. Rather, He carried His own blood into the heavenly most holy place in the eternal “today.” This great entrance of Christ shows the Divine Liturgy is eternal and for all under the new covenant. We being members of our High Priest, Jesus Christ, may always enter in.
The camp here is the old covenant, Israel and all its institutions and worship. The city (v. 14) is the earthly Jerusalem as the temple city of the Jews (see 11:10, 13–16; 12:22). One cannot follow both the new covenant and the old covenant. The early Church in Jerusalem (AD 30–70) retained its Jewish customs, even the religious traditions, but it was under only the new covenant and so bore the ire of Jews still under the old covenant. Likewise, every Christian must be prepared to bear men's scorn and see himself as in exile in this life. The heavenly city we seek is the one to which we have already come (12:22): such a tension is no problem for the author of Hebrews.
A summarizing exhortation: (1) We experience the heavenly city and the heavenly most holy place when we sacrifice our whole being, body and soul, in the Divine Liturgy—a mystery in which our part is that of praise consistent with true doctrine (vv. 15, 9–14). (2) Good works and life in community (to share, Gr. koinonias) must be united with worship (vv. 16, 1–6). (3) Priests and spiritual leaders must be respected and obeyed (vv. 17, 7, 8), a reference to “spiritual fatherhood” in the Church. They will give account of their ministry at the judgment. The author sees himself among the leaders and asks for prayer that he may live an exemplary life (see v. 7).
13:20-21 The benediction notes: (1) The sufficiency of the blood of Christ is realized in His Resurrection as Christ offers His blood in the eternal sanctuary and thereby inaugurates a new, everlasting covenant. (2) The everlasting covenant makes us complete as we cooperate with God (synergy) in all things and progress toward sainthood.
James establishes his authority—not as a brother of Christ or bishop of Jerusalem—but as a bondservant (self-indentured slave) of God. For the Jews, God is the only ruler, and true honor comes from Him. God refers to the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ to the Son of God incarnate. Scattered abroad (Gr. diaspora) refers to Jews in exile, but James applies it to the Church—Jewish and Gentile Christians alike—on pilgrimage.
Trials, the world's oppression, take place by God's permission. The issue is not trials but our response to them. Properly received, trials reveal where our hearts are. They are food for faith, which must grow or die. The godly reaction to trials is joy and perseverance (Mt 5:11, 12; Acts 5:41; Rom 5:2, 3; 8:18; Heb 12:11; 1Pt 2:19). Though unkind circumstances are from the evil one, to get angry at circumstances is to get angry at God, who permits them.
Wisdom, the practical and spiritual knowledge required for skilled living, comes to those who ask of God, who pray to Him. While James loves God's law, for him faith is not found in rules, as with the Pharisees, but in a relationship with God.
Prayer as petition is effective when it is done in faith, with no doubting (v. 6). We need an unquestioning loyalty to God along with the confidence that comes from a life stable in all its ways (v. 8). While James teaches the necessity of works, for him works demonstrate a living faith. By contrast, doubting (v. 6) means questioning God. Double-mindedness (v. 8) speaks of one who has two loyalties, love of the world competing with love for God (see Mt 6:24). Such unstable life deadens our conscience and turns us aside from the truth.
Note the reversal of the order of the world. The lowly (v. 9), those who have the least here, will have the most in the Kingdom of heaven (see 2:5; Mt 5:3; Lk 1:52), but they are tempted to be bitter and envious. The rich (v. 10) may perceive their goods as passing, but they are tempted to be greedy and arrogant and may thereby lose true wealth (see 5:1–12).
1:12 We are to rejoice even in temptations. They reveal whether or not we are prepared for heaven (see 1Co 9:25).
James has discussed outward trials (vv. 1–11). He now turns to inward temptations, which deceive us and lead us into sin. God tries us, but He never tempts us.
The immediate origin of a temptation is our own sinful passions, which the devil energizes. Temptation begins with desires or lusts, then progresses to being conceived, a fixation on or delight in sinful desires, and ends as birth to sin, a consent to or acting out of sinful desires. We fall to temptation because we allow ourselves to do so. Neither God nor circumstances force us to yield.
1:17 As Father of lights, God reigns over both the visible and invisible creation. He is Creator of all and the giver of spiritual gifts. The first part of this verse is used in the Divine Liturgy, in the prayer before Christ's icon.
1:18 God provides our salvation of His own will, not of necessity. Brought us forth: He “begot” us, a reference to baptism, by which we become children of God by grace. The word of truth is the Gospel, the precious, unchanging doctrines of the faith. We are the firstfruits of His creatures: In salvation we benefit not by taking on the essence or nature of God, but by putting on a new humanity consecrated to God (as with firstfruits in the OT). Humanity is preeminent over all creation, and through our salvation all creation is likewise being changed. The first half of this verse appears in the Divine Liturgy in the prayer of thanksgiving after the faithful receive Communion.
The wrath of man is unjust, ungracious, and severe. It proceeds from uncontrolled anger, not from God's judgment. For us to discern the righteousness of God requires patience, graciousness, and controlled passions.
While the word was implanted in baptism, Christians continue to receive Him throughout their lives.
James takes the Jewish notion of freedom—obedience to the Law—and applies it to Christ's law, His commandment to love others as He loved us. James uses the OT form in 2:8.
Here are three examples of the relationship between faith and works. (1) Mastery over speech: What proceeds out of the mouth flows from the heart, for sooner or later our tongue will reveal the quality of our faith in God. (2) Ministry to the needy: Faithful Christians must be the guardians of the poor, especially of those orphans and widows who have lost their natural guardians. “Do not let the widows be neglected; after the Lord, you must be their guardian” (IgnAnt). (3) Moral purity in thought and deed: A traditional indicator of a working faith. “Let us make haste to wash away through fasting the filth of our transgressions, and through acts of mercy and compassion to the needy let us enter into the bridal chamber of the Bridegroom Christ, who grants to us great mercy” (Vespers, week before Lent).
Unjustly judging others is an example of fainthearted faith being manifested in unjust works. Favoring the rich over the poor is contrary to true faith. A person's dignity and worth come from God, not from fellow humans. So we must not judge others by the earthly standards of rank, wealth, attainments, and appearance.
2:5-7 God is not partial to anyone. The poor are more likely to repent and renounce this world for the sake of the kingdom, for they more easily see the emptiness of earthly things. The rich (v. 6), on the other hand, tend to prize earthly things, desire material things, and even hurt others to gain them (see Lk 6:21–25; 1Co 1:26–28). They may mock Christians for the name by which (v. 7) they are called, the name invoked at baptism.
The corrective standard of judgment is perfect faith manifested in perfect works. The royal law (v. 8), the law of liberty (v. 12; 1:25), is the second great commandment of Christ: love for neighbor (Jn 13:34). The standard by which we judge is that by which we will be judged; the mercy we give will be the mercy we receive. "God has shown mercy to us. Let us in our turn show mercy: let us feed the poor, and with the divine water of fasting let us wash the defilement from our souls. . . . O heavenly angels, entreat the Giver of good to accept in His infinite mercy our poor and mean repentance" (Matins, Friday before Lent).
The faith that saves is a complete faith, not just the mind and the tongue but the whole man trusting in the living God. This means our faith and our relationship with God—our justification—are dynamic and living. Our faith grows and affects our actions, or it dies. “Faith alone” (by itself, v. 17), static faith, does not save. We must nurture our faith in God and love for Him through our works. “Do not say you are the temple of the Lord, writes Jeremiah [see Jer 7:3]; nor should you say that faith alone in our Lord Jesus Christ can save you, for this is impossible unless you acquire love for Him through your works. As for faith by itself, ‘the devils also believe, and tremble’” (MaxCon).
The faith of Abraham is living and active.

(1) In Gn 12:1–3, when Abraham is 75 years old, he receives a call to forsake all and follow God.

(2) In Gn 15:6, when Abraham is almost 85, after he has proven his faith through years of renouncing his land, family, property, and privileges, God promises him that he will ultimately regain everything he has given up. Abraham's faith in God's promise is “accounted to him for righteousness.” God fulfills Abraham's faith by making a covenant with him, an OT liturgical and sacramental act.

(3) In Gn 22:1–19, Abraham is at least 110. He has been tested for years concerning God's promise of a son. Now, after the covenant sacrament of initiation (circumcision) has been given in Gn 17, comes Abraham's supreme test: the sacrifice of Isaac, his son of promise (Gn 15:6).

James reveals that Gn 15:6 is fulfilled in Gn 22. This is a crucial lesson for us in our understanding of justification by faith. Neither Abraham's faith nor his justification is merely momentary, static, or once-and-for-all. It is dynamic, a growth process that finds its natural and normal realization in good works. Far from being just point-in-time, Abraham's justification covered at least 25 years after God first declared him just. It is living and active faith that saves!
This summary of the organic relationship of faith and works (see Mt 7:21; 25:31–46; Jn 14:15; Gal 5:6) shows that only God can save.
What we say reveals what we are. If we can control what we say, we can control what we do (vv. 2–8). For James, this is a prime example of the relationship between faith and works, and a major locus of spiritual warfare. James even warns against becoming a Christian teacher (v. 1) and expresses astonishment at how hypocritical and contradictory our speech can be (vv. 9–12).
James is also leery about us counseling others, for what is offered as wisdom can be based on pride and other sinful passions. Self-centered faith will manifest itself in self-centered works, in this case “helping” others. True wisdom comes from God and proves itself by action (v. 13). Sensual (v. 15; Gr. psychike) means unspiritual, not possessing the spirit of God.
Wars and fights in the Church are another example of the result of faith without works. Such disputes come from desires for pleasure that war in our members, passions that bring disruption in the body of Christ. These passions are fragmenting (v. 1), self-centered (v. 3), of this world (v. 4), energized by Satan (v. 7), and therefore at enmity with God (v. 4). God does not answer prayers for our selfish desires (v. 3).

Adulterers and adulteresses: The image of unfaithfulness in marriage is common throughout the OT for the faithlessness of God's people.

How do we conquer arrogant pleasure-seeking? (1) Stop praying for self-centered pleasures (vv. 2, 3). (2) Renounce the world and build a friendship with God (v. 4). (3) Yield to the Holy Spirit who dwells in us through chrismation (v. 5). In seeking the Holy Spirit we gain the Holy Trinity! (4) Be humble, recognizing that God resists the proud (v. 6). (5) Resist (be insubordinate to) Satan and submit to God (v. 7). (6) Approach God in worship (draw near). Take special care to cleanse your hands and purify your hearts through repentance in preparation for worship (vv. 8, 9). Never laugh off God's call to mourn for sin.

“The rewards for the toils of virtue are dispassion and spiritual knowledge. For these are the mediators of the kingdom of heaven, just as passions and ignorance are the mediators of eternal punishment. It is because of this that he who seeks these rewards for the sake of human glory and not for their intrinsic goodness is rebuked by the words of Scripture: ‘You ask, and do not receive, because you ask wrongly’” (MaxCon).
Belittling criticism of others is another case of pride coming out in what we say. It is a lack of faith united with evil works, an offense both to the person criticized and to God. God's will is to love others (2:8) with humility and mercy, even if they are in the wrong (see 3:13–18).
True faith depends completely on God and seeks ways to do good works. But to plan as if we knew exactly what will happen is arrogance.
The terrible fate of the unjust rich is that their wealth will condemn them.
The _early and latter rain_ (v. 7) refers to the pattern of rainfall—at planting time and just before harvest—in Palestine. We are to put away grumbling at each other, and we must not demand that life be “fair.” Patience, forbearance, and a right vision of the ultimate Judge are true works of living faith.
5:10-11 The faithful prophets, true saints of God, are models or examples to us in how to practice suffering and patience. Consequently, Christians from the NT era even till today have honored or venerated the prophets—indeed, all the saints—counting them blessed.
A polemic against a bad custom stemming from bad faith: the common practice of swearing by God or something that signifies God (as if swearing were a proof of truthfulness). We may swear when required to, but the solution to lack of trust is good faith—our integrity, truthfulness between a person and God. See Mt 5:33–37.
The sick person is to call for the elders (presbyters) for prayer. Salvation deals with the whole person, for each human being is a unity, body and soul. Hence, this sacrament has a double purpose: not only for healing but for forgiveness also. The presbyter (shortened form: priest) is given certain gifts of the ministry at ordination, the laying on of hands (see 1Ti 4:14). Prayer is combined with olive oil—not only the primary medicine of ancient times, but also a symbol of the Holy Spirit in the Church—in a single sacrament that effects a healing for the whole person. Thus, the elements of the sacrament of healing include (1) the presbyter or priest (v. 13); (2) the prayer of (the) faith that will save (v. 15), connected with (3) the work of Christ Himself, for the Lord will raise us up, and (4) the Holy Spirit, manifested in the oil; and (5) confession of sins just prior to the anointing with oil, which explains why James writes if he has committed sins, he will be forgiven (v. 15). In the Orthodox Church, this sacrament is granted anyone who is sick, whether in danger of dying or not.
5:16-18  Some allege that confessing sins to God before a priest is not biblical. The ancient Christian custom was to confess your trespasses to one another (v. 16). When a Christian was guilty of sin, the matter was confessed before the whole Church as an act of repentance. As the Church grew, and those not part of the community came to observe, the pressure in such public confession became so great that the priest, instead of the entire community, heard the confession, representing the people. What is not taught in Scripture is a private confession only to God, which refuses to acknowledge sin to the community (1Jn 1:8, 10). Thus, the Church has effected healing through such works of faith as confession of sins and the power of intercessory prayer.
5:19-20  The work of faith in restoring the apostate.
Pilgrims, or “sojourners,” are aliens, those who stay for a while in a strange place with no intention of permanently residing there. This is said of God's people in this world (see 2:11; Gn 23:4; Ps 38:13; Heb 11:13), for they are citizens of the heavenly world to come (Php 3:20).
Note the apostle's clear reference to all three divine Persons of the Holy Trinity.

God's foreknowledge does not preclude or bind human will. Rather, it has to do with His Providence, His sovereign control of history. Sanctification: See Glossary. The sprinkling of the blood connects OT sacramental rites with Christ and the New Testament. Through the blood sprinkled on the doorposts of their homes, the people of Israel escaped the power of Satan and death in Egypt (Ex 12:13). When the covenant between God and the Israelites was made at Sinai, Moses sprinkled the blood of the covenant upon the people, thereby empowering Israel to participate in the life of God (Ex 24:8). On the Day of Atonement, the blood of a goat was sprinkled on the mercy seat of the tabernacle (Lv 16:15). As people of the New Covenant, we enter into God's life more intimately: “Unless you . . . drink His blood, you have no life in you” (Jn 6:53). Through Christ's blood communicated to us in the Holy Eucharist (1Co 11:25), we are united with Him in His incorrupt human nature.

We are to be in obedience to Jesus Christ because of the obedience of Jesus Christ. In contrast to the disobedience of the first Adam, the second Adam, Christ, fulfilled the Law completely and performed all righteousness. Through His obedience, corrupt human nature will be transformed into incorrupt human nature.
We are begotten . . . again to a living hope in baptism. As Jesus told Nicodemus, we enter the Kingdom of God by being “born of water and the Spirit” (Jn 3:5). This new birth in baptism unites us with Christ and His resurrection (Rom 6:3). The words and actions of Peter also confirm this sacramental reality (see Acts 2:37, 38, 41; 10:43, 47, 48; see also the “washing of regeneration” in Tts 3:5, where baptism and God's mercy are coupled). Here the sacrament of baptism (vv. 3–6) is the power by which we suffer faithfully (vv. 7–9). Being regenerated, given new life in Christ, we have a hope by which to live. This grace of God sustains us in the trials of life. (Verses 3–12 in the original constitute one long sentence.)
1:4 Note the home for which we yearn, our inheritance, is also described in the context of baptism (1:3).
The incorruptible inheritance is reserved for those who have true faith, the faith that by God's grace perseveres to the end.
1:6, 7 To reach the joy and blessing of eternal life in Christ, we first experience the sadness of the passing world, along with the afflictions we must face here (see also Jam 1:1–12). To the watching world, the perseverance of the faithful during affliction appears foolish and even contemptible. But Peter shows that faith under trial is precious indeed, bearing more glory and honor as it continues to stand under trial (see Mt 25:31–46; 1Co 3:10–15).
Peter knew by experience the failure to perceive the truth until he saw it with his eyes (see Lk 24:8–12; Acts 10:39–43). Here he addresses those who believe Him whom they have not seen. This is the faith of baptism and the faith of eternal life.
The prophets had supernatural knowledge of the events to come—even so far as the glories that would follow the sufferings of Christ, His Resurrection, Ascension, and Second Coming.
1:12 Even the angels desire to deepen their vision both of the uncreated glory and of what God has in store for creation (see 1Co 2:8). The angels beheld and worshipped Christ in His divine nature; what is new and amazing to them is His human nature.
The Israelites ate the original Passover with loins girded, that is, with their long outer garments tucked into their belts so as to free their legs for movement. Similarly, Christians are to live always in the spirit of Passover, prepared for the journey of obedience and virtue.
1:17 Why should we pray in fear? Because the Father we serve will judge us according to each one's work. While being certain of God's mercy, we conduct ourselves with care.
Our salvation has been purchased by the infinitely precious blood of Christ (v. 19). We are not our own and are to conduct ourselves in a manner worthy of the price paid for our redemption (see 1Co 6:19, 20).
This passage from Is 40:6–8 sets in sharp contrast the difference between human and divine seed. Our present human condition will have an end, of course, as witnessed by the ever-presence of corruption, and will meet that end in death. But in the glorified, incarnate Son, the word of the Lord (v. 25), we gain incorrupt and immortal humanity, both in body and in soul.
The duty, the necessity, for Christians to be holy in their conduct is the issue pursued in this passage. The apostle Paul has written that new (indeed, all!) Christians are to put off the old manner of life, corrupted by evil and deception (Eph 4:22). Similarly, those addressed here are to turn from the same.
The pure milk of the word is apostolic doctrine (Acts 2:42), the basic teaching of the Church—both written (1:10–12) and spoken (1:25). These lead us to the meat of the word (1Co 3:2), the sacraments of the Church, and continual growth in the Christian life. We have tasted that the Lord is gracious and should long for this spiritual nourishment.
Peter likens the growth of the Church to the OT temple with its attending priesthood and its sacrifice and worship, Christ Himself being the fulfillment of this imagery. Thus, in Christ we become living stones, a spiritual house, a royal priesthood (v. 5; see Ex 19:5, 6), the people of God who have obtained mercy (v. 10; see Eph 2:19–22; 1Co 3:16, 17; 2Co 6:16). This is salvation in all its fullness.
In the true temple, one sacrifice is offered, the unrepeatable sacrifice of Christ. But in Him, in baptism, we also are sacrificed, “a living sacrifice” (Rom 12:1) acceptable to God. Our whole life is to be lived in this baptism as an offering to Christ our life. This is the spiritual offering of the Church in the Eucharist, the offering by which she lives.
In the true Temple there is one offerer, one priest, who, again, is Christ. In baptism we all are anointed with grace as priests in the Kingdom of God; for the spiritual Kingdom is also the spiritual priesthood. Moreover, as the body of Christ, we have a priestly ministry to the world, fulfilling the very priesthood and intercession of the Lord Himself, so that to the whole universe we may proclaim the praises of Him who called us out of darkness into His marvelous light.
To this point Peter has been addressing the whole of the Church, describing the benefits and challenges of salvation. Now he speaks to various groups of Christians—citizens, servants, wives, husbands, pastors—exhorting all to forsake sinful passions and to live as true sojourners and pilgrims in the world.
Peter urges his readers to be obedient to civil government. While Christians serve a higher authority, God Himself, it is God who calls us to submit to earthly leaders for the Lord's sake (v. 13). This is not a call to “separate” Church from state, but rather a call to cooperate with and enhance the state—realizing that at times Church and state have been at great odds. When ultimate loyalty and obedience to Christ and His gospel are at stake, Peter's actions show that we are to obey God rather than man, even to the point of prison or death (Acts 4:19, 20).
This advice to servants is applicable to all who are employed by another. Christ is our example for service and for our response to mistreatment. He is shown to be the Suffering Servant, offering Himself on our behalf, by whose stripes you were healed (v. 24; see Is 53).
2:22 No washing away of sins was necessary for Christ, who did no sin. His washing was done for us, who do sin. We should live, then, for Him who did not spare His own Son, that in His body He might crucify our passions. For Christ died for us that we might live in His renewed body.
Peter—according to tradition the first bishop of Antioch, the guiding church of the mission to the Eastern Mediterranean, and later of Rome, the leading church of the mission to the Western Mediterranean—the one charged by Christ to tend His sheep (Jn 20:16), sees all of us as sheep under the care of Christ, our universal Shepherd and Overseer (lit., “bishop”). Peter calls himself “a fellow elder” in 5:1, for bishops and priests are not two different orders in the NT.
3:1-7 A stunning call to contentment in Christian marriage, whether we live in the first century or the twenty-first. The dignity and modesty of a woman—and her good conduct—have the power to call her husband to faith and devotion. Husbands are not to take advantage of this superior conduct on the part of their wives, but are to reciprocate, indeed to give honor. Peter's image of marriage is one of sacramental union, not merely of legal contract. Contrary to the inheritance customs of the time, husband and wife are heirs together of the grace of life (v. 7). Failure to live with understanding with one's spouse even affects one's relationship with God (see Eph 5:22–33).
3:8-12 Our behavior today has consequences for the future. The Church as a corporate priesthood is to express God's graciousness to the entire world. As we have been blessed, so must we bless (see Mt 7:12).
As the royal priesthood follows Christ in His obedience and His mercifulness, so it follows Him in His suffering.
3:15 A challenge to all—clergy and laity alike—to answer when asked about our hope in Christ with meekness and fear.
Not all our suffering comes about because we have been righteous.
As Noah preached righteousness, suffered unjustly, and rescued those who were with him, so also does Christ. Christ descended to those in darkness and death that light might shine on them and He might deliver them from death. As Christ fearlessly faced His tormentors, death, and hell, so we through Him can confidently face mockers and tormentors—and, yes, bring His light to them.
3:21-22 The Flood is an OT mystery of salvation of the human race. Noah was saved from a godless society—not so much saved from the water, as through the water from evil. For through the water of baptism the resurrected Christ, having taken His place in heaven itself, gives us a clean conscience.
Though Peter refers here to specific activities and vices prevalent in that day in Asia Minor—where excessive drinking along with unspeakable practices took place in connection with the worship of various deities—there can be no doubt of the direct application of this passage to our own day and the condition from which many of us have come into the Kingdom.
The dead are most likely those preached to “in prison” in Hades (3:19).
4:7-11 Whatever gifts God has given to His people are to be used for the glory of God and in a spirit of love (see Rom 12:4–10; 1Co 12–14).
The fiery trial is the suffering of tribulations that tempt us to unfaithfulness, to the ruin of our faith. God's people have always suffered unjustly, but in baptism the sufferings in which we partake are those of Christ Himself, which will ultimately bring great joy (v. 13).
Slander and persecution purify the Church for judgment, but persecutors and the ungodly (v. 18) are heaping up condemnation for themselves. The severity of the present judgment of the righteous is evidence that the ungodly face a fearsome fate. Christians who suffer can always be confident that God is faithful (v. 19) and good.
5:1-4  (See Jn 21:15–17.) From Christ Himself and throughout the history of the Church, these words have been delivered in exhortation to the shepherds or leaders of the flock (v. 2). Pastoral work is to be undertaken willingly and cheerfully, with neither financial gain nor power in mind. For faithful service is rendered on behalf of Christ, the Chief Shepherd (v. 4), and awaits an eternal crown of glory.
5:3 (See Mk 10:42–45; 2Co 4:5.) Those entrusted to you (Gr. kleron) means those who have “the inheritance”; the word is the source of the English “clergy.” In the OT the Levites were the kleros; their inheritance was the Lord. In the NT all are kleros, a royal priesthood, equally inheriting the Lord. While there are “orders” of clergy in the Church—bishops, presbyters, deacons—a separation or isolation between priests and laity is unknown in the NT.
Humility is the foundation of virtue; it is learned through submission and obedience to godly elders. In submitting to one another, we humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God (see 1Th 5:12, 13; Heb 13:7, 17).
The devil and his angels do explore us individually, looking for our weaknesses. The enemy offers appealing visions to our eyes, music to our ears, to each of our senses setting forth whatever might tempt us to sin. He arouses our tongues to speaking evil about others and urges our hands to injure them. He sets forth profits to be earned by shady and immoral means and holds out earthly honors and false values to be preferred to heavenly ones. When he is unable to tempt us, he brings forth a threat of persecution so that fear may cause us to betray the faith. Thus we are always alert for his many-faceted attacks, ready to resist him at every turn.
Babylon here is almost certainly a reference to ancient Rome, like the more ancient Babylon (itself of no significance in the days of the early Church) a source of confusion and tribulation for the people of God. Peter himself was martyred in Rome.
The kiss of love, or of peace, is here already a liturgical practice. In St. John Chrysostom's liturgy, the kiss of peace occurs between the Great Entrance and the Creed; historically the entire Church took part in it. This embrace signifies forgiveness, reconciliation, and banishment of every remembrance of injury. It recalls the command of Christ, “If you bring your gift to the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you, leave your gift there before the altar, and go your way. First be reconciled to your brother, and then come and offer your gift” (Mt 5:23, 24).
Whereas, 1 Peter introduces the author simply as “Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ,” Peter adds Simon, the pre-Christian name of Peter, and a bondservant. God refers to Jesus Christ (as in Titus 2:13). What Peter teaches in this letter is apostolic consensus: like precious faith with us. He reminds and exhorts his hearers to full Christian belief and virtue.
Gnostics, who were infiltrating the church, taught they had access to a special knowledge, unknown by ordinary people. Peter teaches the true knowledge of God, and it is in the Church this knowledge is found.
Peter assures us we have no need for anything other than what we have received. For God has given us His energy (life) and His personal presence (godliness, or piety, devotion), both of which we may grow in. Virtue (Gr. arete) may also be translated as “excellence” or “power.” It is spiritual and moral excellence attained by vigorous and courageous faith.
Being renewed by God's power, we become partakers of the divine nature. This does not mean we become divine by nature. If we participated in God's essence, the distinction between God and man would be abolished. What this does mean is that we participate in God's energy, described by a number of terms in scripture, such as glory, life, love, virtue, and power. We are to become like God by His grace, and truly His adopted children, but never become God by nature. According to some church fathers, this especially occurs through the Eucharist, for when Christ's Body and Blood become one with ours, we become Christ-bearers and partakers of the divine nature.

“We that are made worthy to participate in Him [the Holy Spirit] through faith in Christ are brought to perfection as participants of the divine nature, and are said to be born of God, and on that account are given the title gods, not flying up to the glory above us by grace alone, but as already having God indwelling and taking lodging in us, according to what is set forth in the Prophet, ‘I shall dwell among them and walk about in their midst’ (Lv 26:12; 2Co 6:16)” (CyrAl).
1:5-7 How do we who know Christ grow in our participation in the divine nature through grace? By the cultivation of a progression of spiritual realities. As in v. 3, virtue refers to the vigor and courage behind attaining moral excellence. Love (v. 7) is adjoined to brotherly kindness (affection among Christians), for love of God cannot be perfected except through love of one's neighbor (see 1Jn 4:20).
1:8  This knowledge (Gr. epignosis, as also in v. 1) is not primarily mental but spiritual and personal. It is experienced as we have faith and bear good fruit in the Lord Jesus Christ.
Gnostics claimed to know God without becoming godlike. Peter makes it plain this is not Christian, for we reach participation with God through the increase of spiritual virtues, not the absence of them. Here, as with all eschatological warnings in the NT, admittance to God's Kingdom is conditioned by a faith that exhibits perseverance and holiness.
The primary truth with which Peter is dealing (which he has only indirectly touched upon to this point) is the second coming of Christ and His everlasting kingdom.
People live in a tent when on a journey or at war. As long as we are in this body, we live in “tents,” which bear witness to the long journey of life and to the ongoing battle against enemy forces of darkness.
Peter has been an eyewitness to the majesty of Christ in many ways—and here reminds us especially that he was one of those present with the Lord on the Mount of Transfiguration (Mt 17:1–8). What Peter is going to repeat about the second coming is the common apostolic tradition, which is buttressed by the eyewitness testimony of the apostles. It is not an elaborate scheme of fables, such as the Gnostics propounded. In all the Gospel accounts, the Transfiguration is a proof and foretaste of the coming of Christ in glory.
The testimony of the apostles both confirms prophetic word (v. 19) concerning the second coming and shows us how to interpret prophecy. Just as Scripture (v. 20) was not written by the mere volition of men but by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit (v. 21), so Scripture is to be interpreted by holy men guided by the Holy Spirit. Heretics (ch. 2) and unstable Christians (3:16) interpret incorrectly. The apostles (the we of v. 19) are guided by the Holy Spirit, trusting in the promise of true interpretation (Jn 16:13). The Church, founded by the apostles, likewise receives the Holy Spirit. “For the apostles, like a rich man in a bank, deposited with her [the Church] most copiously everything which pertains to the truth. And everyone who wishes, draws from her the drink of life. For she is the entrance to life, while all the rest are thieves and robbers. That is why it is surely necessary to avoid them, while cherishing with the utmost diligence the things pertaining to the church, and to lay hold of the tradition of truth” (Iren).
2:1-3  Peter now reaches his main concern: false teachers who are unholy and communicate heresy. They are arrogant, sensual, and greedy (he deals with them in much the same way as does Jude) but they deny accountability in their lives. Isolating themselves from apostolic doctrine concerning Christ, they hold their own “private interpretations,” misconstruing doctrines about the second coming and the ultimate authority of Christ over us. But as deceivers, they teach as though they possess true apostolicity.
God's past judgments indicate what awaits the heretics: He will divide the holy from the unholy in the life to come. We already have the example of the angels who sinned (v. 4), imprisoned in the lowest part of hell (Gr. tartarus) while awaiting the final judgment. Verse 10 repeats the two main sins of heretics: (1) immorality, (2) disdain for authority, especially that of Christ.

Noah is a preacher of righteousness (v. 5), in part because by doing righteous deeds he showed to all who saw him how life ought to be lived (see Heb 11:7).
False teachers are condemned for both their words and their actions. Those who are natural cannot understand spiritual things (1Co 2:14) and will be destroyed, as false prophets have been in the past. For the story of Balaam (v. 15), see Nm 22:1–25:9; 31:8, 16; Dt 23:4, 5; Jos 13:22; Jude 11.
A common misunderstanding of liberty or freedom is to see it as standing apart from all moral restraints, to say there is no such thing as sin. But this results in slavery of the worst kind, bondage to egotistic and sensual passions. True Christian freedom begins with freedom from sin, freedom from immoral activity. A Christian is called to live in purity in an impure world.
“It is clear to all who love His coming that the mind must be controlled rather moderately in this conjecture. We must surmise neither that the aforesaid day of the Lord is near and will come quite quickly, nor again that it is coming too slowly. But we should be diligent in seeing to this alone: that whether it comes sooner or later, it may find us ready when it does come” (Bede).
These words are not just for the false teachers, but for us all. We are granted more time primarily to grant us fuller repentance. (See v. 15; 2Co 7:9, 10.)
Because this world will pass away, we ought to be holy (v. 11) and godly, living as citizens of the new heaven and earth. Christians can actually hasten the coming of that day. How? Through evangelism (Mt 24:14; Mk 13:10), prayer (especially the Lord's Prayer, “Thy Kingdom come”), holy living (1Pt 2:12), and repentance and obedience (Acts 3:19–21).
3:13 Not other heavens and earth, but the same ones transfigured for the better. For a beautiful prophetic description of the new heaven and earth, see Rev 21–22 and Is 65:17–25.
Longsuffering can be salvation only if our salvation in Christ includes a lifelong process of maturing.
3:16 The author knows of a collection of Paul's letters and regards it as equal in authority to Scripture, that is, to the OT. This is the first indication of the collection of an NT canon.
3:17-18 The danger of deception is high for everyone. The defense against deception is to stay connected to the true apostles (v. 17) and to their doctrines, which encourage our growth in the knowledge of our Lord . . . Jesus Christ (v. 18).
We means the apostles. Their testimony is true, not that of the false apostles. While John makes a distinction between divine revelation (which was from the beginning, the Word of life) and human sensory perception (heard, seen, looked upon, handled), he has no problem connecting them. Note John's clarity of teaching on Christ's two natures: divine (from the beginning, the Word of life) and human (heard, seen, handled) (see Lk 24:39; Jn 1:14; 20:27, 28).

“When [John] says: ‘which was from the beginning,’ he touches upon the generation without beginning of the Son, who is coexistent with the Father. ‘Was,’ therefore, indicates eternity without beginning, just as the Word Himself, the Son, being one with the Father in regard to equality of substance, is eternal and uncreated. That the Word always existed is signified by the words: ‘In the beginning was the Word [Jn 1:1]” (ClemA).
The divinity of Jesus was manifested in His life, especially His teaching and His miracles (see Jn 2:11).
Koinonia (Gr.) is far more than fellowship. It is our personal participation with other believers in the life of Christ. Fellowship with us refers to communion—especially eucharistic communion—within the apostolic Church. It is inconceivable to John that the Church not be one and united (see Jn 17:11, 20, 21) or that fellowship not be founded on doctrine (the theological implication of with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ) and on sacrament (the liturgical implication of koinonia).
Contrary to heretics, who claim communion (koinonia) directly with God through “spiritual” (non-material) means, John teaches communion with God through the Incarnate Son. Especially in view here is the Eucharist, where the physicality of Christ is repulsive to the heretics.
For John, light is divine energy manifested as truth (true doctrine), virtue and holiness (true behavior), and communion with God in the Church (true spirituality). The strongest of all weapons against darkness is our love for God, a strong, vibrant relationship with Him.
John addresses three false gnostic teachings on light. Their intertwined errors are that (1) union with God is indifferent to sin (vv. 6, 7); (2) sin does not exist (vv. 8, 9); and (3) one in union with God cannot sin (1:10–2:2).

John answers: (1) Faith must be evidenced by works, that is, must produce purity (practice the truth, v. 6, where truth is a right relationship with God manifested in a holy and righteous life). And faith must seek forgiveness and cleansing for sin (the blood of Jesus Christ ... cleanses us from all sin, v. 7). (2) Sin does exist, and the practice of confession is the established basis for growth toward righteousness (v. 9). (3) Though we do sin, we should strive not to. Salvation in Christ is a process, in part toward not sinning (v. 7).
The ancient gnostics held two false teachings on God's light: knowledge of God requires neither (1) obedience (vv. 3–8) nor (2) love of others (vv. 9–11). John answers:

(1) To know God is to obey Him. His commandments (vv. 3, 4) are not a legal code but life in Christ, the way of love (vv. 5, 6). Those outside of Christ will not become partakers of His life unless they, by God's grace, practice what He says. “In vain do we applaud Him whose commandments we do not keep” (Bede; see also Lk 9:23; Jam 2:19). The new commandment is Christ's (v. 7), that we love as Christ loved (Jn 13:34; 15:12, 17).

(2) To love God (to be in the light, vv. 9, 10) is also to love each other. “Anyone who comes hating his brother to the font of life where he is to be reborn, to the cup of that precious blood whereby he is to be redeemed, even though he may think he is enlightened by the Lord, is still in darkness. He cannot in any way have put off the darkness of his sins when he did not take care to put on the fundamentals of love” (Bede).
In this poem of comfort and encouragement, John addresses three stages of Christian growth. (1) Little children are the newly converted (see Lk 10:21), who see clearly that their sins are forgiven (v. 12) and who know the Father (v. 13). (2) Fathers, the mature in understanding, have known Him who is from the beginning (vv. 13, 14). (3) Young men are those who war against the devil (vv. 13, 14), who are strong (v. 14) and who have the word of God (v. 14) living in them.
The world here is creation after the fall and under the dominion of Satan. It is creation no longer oriented toward God, but temporary and dominated by inordinate passions (see Mt 6:24; Lk 16:13; 1Co 7:29–31).
The world distorts every realm of God's good creation (see Jam 1:13, 14). There are (1) sensual pleasures of the flesh (physical passions), (2) intellectual attainments and capacities of the eyes (the soul's passions), and (3) inordinate possessions, power, and honors of life (the pride of human spirit). Biblical ascetic practices—prayer, fasting, almsgiving (see Mt 6:1–18)—help us overcome these distortions and live lives of virtue.
The last hour is the era of the New Covenant, the “eleventh hour” (Mt 20:6). The deceptions at hand, not a specific prediction of the end of the world, are in view. Many antichrists are the heretics, through whom the Antichrist of the end times (see 2Th 2) is doing his spadework.

Very early in the second century, on his way to martyrdom in Rome, Ignatius of Antioch wrote, “These are the last times [see 1Co 7:29]. Let us then be ashamed and fear God's patience so that it may not become condemnation for us. We should either fear the wrath to come or love the grace which is present, one of the two, just so that we may be found in Christ Jesus for true life [see Acts 17:30; 1Th 1:10]. Nothing should seem fitting to you apart from him in whom I bear my bonds as spiritual pearls. May I rise again in them by your prayer, in which I may always participate so that I may be found in the lot apportioned to the Ephesian Christians, who have always agreed with the apostles by the power of Jesus Christ.”
Being on the roll of the Church, even receiving the sacraments, is not enough. We must continue in our belief and manifest the fruit of faith.
Anointing (Gr. criso, hence “chrismation”) recalls the coronation of kings and the ordinations of priests and prophets in the OT, which activated the spiritual gifts and energies needed for their offices. The NT anointing is the ongoing reality of the presence of the Holy Spirit, who works in every member of the Church to preserve her in the truth (Jn 14:26; 16:13–15). You is plural. Anointing is not for independent action but for the one holy Church.
Theologically, the issues are: (1) Does God the Father have a consubstantial Son? (2) Is the Man Jesus the same Person as God the Son? These, of course, are the two basic issues of Christology: that Jesus Christ is one divine Person in two natures.
To abide in Christ involves not only mental assent to the doctrine of the Incarnation. It is a sacramental union with Him, effected in baptism and nourished in the Eucharist (Jn 6:53–59; 15:1–8). For John, apostolic teaching and writing (vv. 24–26) is identical with being taught of God (v. 27). Without both the work of the Spirit and apostolic doctrine, we would remain in darkness.
Bede says that at the Judgment, the people of the world “will say to one another, groaning and repenting, ‘These are they whom we once held in derision and, as it were, a byword for taunts; witless we judged their life madness and their end without honor. How have they been numbered among the children of God, and is their lot among the saints?’” Christians, of course, are children of God by grace while remaining human by nature.
Made in God’s image and likeness, we are fulfilled by becoming like Him, a process called sanctification or deification. Being “partakers of the divine nature” (2Pt 1:4), we are “transformed into the same image from glory to glory” (2Co 3:18). When we see Him as He is, in the fullness of His glory at the last day, this process will be supremely magnified. John had seen the foretaste of this glory on the Mount of Transfiguration (Mt 17:1–9; Mk 9:2–9; Lk 9:28–36).

How shall we see Him? Through our likeness to Him; our human nature will be glorified with the glorified humanity of the Son (see Col 3:3, 4) and through a knowledge of all three Persons of the Trinity. (Note Paul's expressions, “face to face” and “with unveiled face” in 1Co 13:12; 2Co 3:18).
John is talking in general terms, contrasting this world with the world to come. The Christian, though sinful, does not sin (v. 9; lit., “does not keep on sinning”) as the world does. The Church lives under God's influence; the world, under Satan's lawlessness (v. 4), is living without law, in a hardened enmity to God. The devil (v. 8; lit., “slanderer” or “opposer”) is a creature, a fallen archangel. From the beginning (v. 8) refers to Satan's ceaseless sinning since his fall.
3:12 We are to give our attention to deeds, not just to words. Abel showed himself righteous, a child of faith and love; Cain showed himself evil, self-centered and envious (see Gn 4:4, 8; Heb 11:4; 12:24).
If then we wish to receive the Lord's blessings we should restrain not only the outward expression of anger, but also angry thoughts. More beneficial than controlling our tongue in a moment of anger and refraining from angry words is purifying our heart from rancor and not harboring malicious thoughts against our brethren. The Gospel teaches us to cut off the roots of our sins and not merely their fruits. When we have dug the root of anger out of our heart, we will no longer act with hatred or envy. ‘Whoever hates his brother is a murderer’ (3:15), for he kills him with the hatred in his mind. The blood of a man who has been slain by the sword can be seen by men, but blood shed by the hatred in the mind is seen by God, who rewards each man with punishment or a crown not only for his acts but for his thoughts and intentions as well. As God Himself says through the Prophet: ‘Behold, I am coming to reward them according to their actions and their thoughts’ [cf. WSir 11:24]; and the Apostle says: ‘And their thoughts accuse or else excuse them in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men’ [Rom 2:15, 16]. The Lord Himself teaches us to put aside all anger when He says: ‘Whoever is angry with his brother shall be in danger of judgment’ [Mt 5:22]. This is the text of the best manuscripts; for it is clear from the purpose of Scripture in this context that the words ‘without a cause’ were added later. The Lord's intention is that we should remove the root of anger, its spark, so to speak, in whatever way we can, and not keep even a single pretext for anger in our hearts. Otherwise we will be stirred to anger initially for what appears to be a good reason and then find that our incensive power is totally out of control” (JohnCas).
Antichrist is anyone who does not confess that the Son of God became man while remaining God.
We is the apostles and their followers.
God is love (v. 8) is not a definition of who God is, but rather describes His relationship to us as our Father. As the only begotten Son (v. 9) sacrificially gave Himself that we might live through Him (v. 9), so we are to give ourselves to Him and one another (v. 11).
4:10  What a statement of God's mercy and grace! (See also 4:19.)
4:12-16 How can we know God lives in us? John gives a fourfold answer: (1) if we love one another (v. 12); (2) if we have been given His Spirit (v. 13); (3) if we can confess Jesus is the Son of God (v. 15); and (4) if we abide in the love of God (v. 16).
Who is it that truly believes that Jesus is the Christ? Those who live in the way Christ commanded, who love others.
How is it that God's commandments are not burdensome? We live these commandments by faith and in God's love, which makes them light on our fallen nature. They are hard and rough only to those who are living a sinful life. That the Kingdom of heaven belongs to those who suffer makes even suffering sweet.
By water and blood (v. 6) is a reference both to the constancy of the Incarnate Son throughout His life and to the mingled water and blood that poured from Jesus' side (Jn 19:34), which is a type of baptism. Similarly the Spirit, the water, and the blood (v. 8) refers to the unity of the basic sacraments: chrismation, baptism, and the Eucharist.
5:13 When we know we have been given the gift of eternal life, we are to continue to believe and follow the Son of God.
5:16 What about those Christians who are not living righteously? Sin leading to death is willful, continual disbelief in the grace of the Holy Spirit toward us. (See Mt 12:28, 31, 32; Heb 6:4–6; 10:26–31.)
5:21 Idols are either false gods or things that turn us away from God (Col 3:5).
John calls himself the elder, or presbyter, which confirms that in the NT there is not always a distinction between bishops and presbyters. He is confident those who stand against the apostolic Church are in the minority. He assumes the Church is one, a true, concrete unity, and that it follows one rule of faith, whereas the unorthodox agree mainly in their rejection of this common Faith.
Calling Christ the Son of the Father strongly refutes the deceivers and gnostics. Jesus is the Son; the Son is by nature what His Father is, and He does what His Father does (see Jn 5:19).

False teachers were introducing new, nontraditional practices and breaking the covenant of unity based on God’s love—the heart of new covenant life.
The heretics here deny either Jesus' full humanity or His full divinity (or the full divinity of the Holy Spirit). The Jews were denying Jesus is the Christ, the Messiah. All these deny Jesus is our Archpriest in His human nature, and that He will come in His glorified human body to judge the dead and the living.
The Orthodox doctrine of the Incarnation (the doctrine of Christ) is, according to John, necessary for knowledge and communion with God. God is synonymous with the Father, but, according to the doctrine of Christ, the Son, Christ, is also God.
It is reported that one day John went into a public bathhouse and found there the well-known gnostic heretic, Cerinthus. The apostle ran out, crying, “Let us get out of here, for fear the place falls in, now that Cerinthus, the enemy of the truth, is inside.” (See Tts 3:10, 11.)
1:13  The children of your elect sister most likely refers to the church from which John is writing, namely Ephesus.
This is probably not the same Gaius mentioned in Rom 16:23 and 1Co 1:14, 15.
Truth for John here is not doctrine or thought, but the Christian's manner of life. Like all good fathers, John finds his greatest pleasure in seeing his children walk in truth.
Strangers are probably the missionaries sent by John.
The missionaries went forth for the specific purpose of preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.
One way we may participate in ministry is by giving material help to those with spiritual gifts. The donor becomes a coworker in spiritual things (see Mt 10:41).
Diotrephes means “nursed or nourished by Zeus.” Early Christians kept their original name after their baptism. Diotrephes loved being preeminent—not the first among equals but peerless, with a passion for personal aggrandizement. This sin results in insubordination: Diotrephes slanders John, the last of the twelve apostles, by refusing to accept him as either an apostle or a presbyter. By rejecting John's missionaries he rejects John himself. And he disdains the apostolic, catholic ways of the Church, setting himself up as a petty tyrant.
1:12 Demetrius is either a member of Diotrephes' church, one of the emissaries already sent by John, or yet another emissary from John—perhaps the carrier of this letter.
Preserved in Jesus Christ is a promise of God to all faithful. But not all are so faithful, as Jude will relate in this letter (see Jn 10:27–30; 2Ti 1:12; Heb 12:2).
Jude had intended to write a more general letter on salvation, but the danger of false teachers caused him to write a polemic instead. There is one salvation which is the same for all the elect, our common salvation. And this salvation is set in apostolic tradition once for all delivered to the saints; it cannot be changed.
This condemnation involves body and soul (see Jn 5:29). Only Lord God is better translated “only Sovereign” (Gr. despotes).
The recipients of this letter once knew this (v. 5), the mysteries of the faith, because the totality of that faith had already been delivered to them (v. 3). Jude gives three arresting examples of the danger of departing from truth and righteousness:

(1) In the Exodus from Egypt (v. 5), all were saved through the baptism of the Red Sea, but not all responded to their deliverance with ongoing deeds of repentance and godliness (Nm 14:26–37; see 1Co 10:1–13). The lesson for us as Christians is to keep walking in our union with Christ.

(2) The proper domain of the angels is in their likeness and proximity to God. Their own abode is heaven, though they may serve elsewhere. Those who left their proper place are confined far from God, having become bound to spiritual darkness. They await the judgment (see 2Pt 2:4), when bonds with God will be demolished forever. The lesson for Christians is that their proper domain is in being children of God by grace, and their own abode is in the one holy Church.

(3) The men in the plains around Sodom and Gomorrah lusted after angels because of their sin of immorality and homosexuality (Gn 19:1–29). The lesson for Christians is to live under God's call to a chaste and pure life.
Authority (lit., “lordships”; also translated “domicion”; see Eph 1:21; Col 1:16) and dignitaries (lit., “glories”) refer to angels, perhaps in this case to fallen angels (see the parallel in 2Pt 2:10). Although, they are hostile to God, they are nonetheless to be treated dispassionately.
Apparently from the apocryphal book The Assumption of Moses (see Dt 34:5, 6 for the possibility of the assumption of Moses; also Zec 3:1, 2). The people of God are defended by holy angels. This is also a gracious warning to believers concerning vehement accusations against God's enemies: Let God judge. The archangel Michael showed this restraint (Zec 3:2) even though he was dealing with the devil himself.
1:10 Know naturally: That is, they know by their own natural instincts, apart from any specific revelation of the Holy Spirit. God has given all persons a measure of “common sense.”
A threefold woe or warning of great sorrow, using a triad of Israel's most famous offenders: (1) Cain (Gn 4:3–24) sinned by faithlessness and envy, especially over an honor given to another. His sin led to murder (Gn 4:16–24). (2) Balaam (Nm 22–24) sinned by greed, which led to lying and an all-out assault upon the truth, which he knew as well. (3) Korah (Nm 16:1–35) sinned by ambition, pride, and arrogance, grasping for leadership against God's will. His sin led to blatant rebellion against God.
Jude has a gift for using graphic word pictures. Spots should be rendered “hidden reefs,” those razor-sharp underwater growths that can damage and sink great ships. The love feast, or “agape,” was a liturgical banquet tied to the Eucharist. Designed to be a peaceful, joyful meal, it was sabotaged by the false teachers, the hidden reefs in this peaceful ocean of loving friendship. Clouds without water are spiritually dry teachers who do not possess what they claim to have. Carried about by the winds is the effect of listening to the suggestions of invisible spirits and obeying their own passions. Twice dead means they were dead before they believed and dead a second time after they turned their backs on Christ.

If barrenness is worthy of being cast into the fire (Mt 3:10), how much worse is bearing rotten fruit (Mt 7:17–19). In contrast to the saints, who are firmly rooted in Christ (Eph 3:17; Col 2:7), the false teachers are pulled up by the roots and so cannot remain with Christ or in His Church (Mt 13:24–30; Jn 15:6).
Raging waves are perverse teachers—restless, dark, bitter, destructive, and persistent (Is 57:20, 21)—who are casting up as foam as they hit the breakwater of the Church. The higher they raise themselves, the more disorderly and dissipated they become: they crash and perish. In astronomy a wandering star is either (1) a planet that never rises or sets in the same place or (2) a “shooting star,” an asteroid, which shines brilliantly but only briefly and then burns out in darkness. These are likely fallen angels, for in the Book of Enoch and other late Jewish apocalyptic literature, “star” often means “angel.”
1:14-15 Thus, has God always judged the wicked who dwell among the righteous.
Those who are consistently grumblers and complainers are often telegraphing a deeper problem, that is, walking according to one's own lusts. The more a person truly desires the fullness of life in Christ, the easier it becomes to renounce those things that are contrary to godliness.
Sensual (Gr. psychikoi) means operating by the powers of the human soul alone without the indwelling power of the Spirit, that which makes one “spiritual” (see 1Co 2:13–15; 15:44–46). Cause divisions: Having separated themselves from the way of the righteous and the life of the Spirit, the divisive “do not have the glue of charity” (Bede).
Our chief safeguards against heresy are (1) growing in the faith of the Church—vital dependence upon God the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit; and (2) maintaining faith by praying.
Revelation or Apocalypse (Gr. apokalypsis) means literally to unconceal, unveil, or reveal. It was used anciently of a coded message that must get through without falling into the wrong hands. God Himself is the ultimate source of all revelation (see Dan 2:28, 29, 45), but it is the Son, Jesus Christ—who revealed Himself to the prophets of the OT before He became flesh and now is made flesh—who mediates this unveiling (see Jn 1:18; 4:19–23; 7:16; 8:26, 40; 12:49; 15:15; 17:8). This revelation concerns not only the age to come, but certain things from the past and from this present age as well. Things which must tells us this is not a haphazard presentation. Shortly take place indicates God's time, which is always imminent. It may take a lot of earth's time.
The word of God refers to the Son of God. Testimony of Jesus means a witness concerning Jesus. It is John testifying of Christ (see 4:21), not Jesus testifying of Himself. Bore witness (from Gr. martyrreo, a verb) and testimony (from Gr. martyrria, a noun) are forms of the word from which we obtain “martyr.” Persecution is the consequence of witnessing. The martyrs (see Heb 12:1) are those who testify or bear witness, sealing it with their blood in death.
A blessing is promised to those who read and hear (see Lk 11:28). This is the first of the seven beatitudes of the Revelation, found also in 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7, 14. Blessed here are both the reader and the hearers (the assembled faithful), provided they heed what is read—for faith and works are inseparable. Time (Gr. kairos) means here an eschatological decisive moment—a time of judgment, a critical moment, the time when all is fulfilled.
Church tradition maintains St. John dwelt and was bishop in Ephesus, in an area where the seven churches were located along a major roadway. The number seven signifies fullness, suggesting the entire Church is also in view.

The doxology is Trinitarian, involving the Father (vv. 4, 6), the Spirit (v. 4), and the Son (vv. 5, 6). This initial greeting (lit., “the Existing, the Was, and the Coming”) may express the Father, the one who is (Ex 3:14); the Son, who was (Jn 1:1); and the Holy Spirit, who is to come (Acts 2) at Pentecost and shall always be present. Or it may denote the character of the Holy One, who is eternally present and exercises lordship throughout history (see Heb 13:8). God reveals the meaning of the present in light of the past and the age to come. This title may be a paraphrase of the Tetragrammaton, YHWH (“I Am”), of Ex 3:14.

Seven is the number of fullness or completion. The seven Spirits of God most likely refers to the Holy Spirit and His several gifts, as this phrase is included in the blessing with the Father and the Son. Alternately the term could refer to the seven archangels who, according to Jewish tradition, stand before the throne of God (Tb 12:15; see also 1En 20:1–8; 90:21, 22; TLev 8:2).
Jesus Christ is presented as the Risen Savior, Lord of all (see Zec 12:10), giving hope to the early Christians that the Church will not always be dominated by a cruel state. Instead of washed, many Greek texts read “freed.” The term witness (Gr. martys), used only here and in 3:14 in the entire NT, refers to Christ, the authentic witness of all divine revelation; all that God has revealed is summed up in His life, witness, Passion, Resurrection, and exaltation. He has inaugurated the new age, for He is firstborn from the dead in His humanity and has achieved a universal sovereignty by His death, Resurrection, and revelation of His Kingdom for the world's salvation.
Those joined to the body of Christ in baptism comprise the messianic royal priesthood promised of old (see Ex 19:5, 6; Is 61:6; 1Pt 2:9; and the Anaphora of the Liturgy of St. Basil). This priestly ministry is to offer the world back to God in a sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving—eucharistically—as in the Orthodox Church's Divine Liturgy. The universe itself thus becomes hallowed, transfigured, and sacramental. Amen is Semitic. It signifies ratification: an acknowledgment of something trustworthy.
Alpha and Omega, the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, along with Beginning and End signify the eternality of God, who is the origin and destiny of all things. Its attribution to the Son proves His divinity. History—in fact, all of creation—begins and is completed in the Creator (Is 44:6). Almighty (Gr. Pantocrator) is used throughout the OT and is found ten times in the NT—nine of which are in Revelation. The inscription that adorns the central dome of a properly appointed Orthodox temple bears the words of this verse; the fresco depicts the Lord Jesus, since He is the One who shows us the Father, and since He has used the title “Alpha and Omega” for Himself (22:13).
In the Spirit may mean John received the revelation in a visionary ecstasy (see Ezk 3:12), but more probably that he was in the worship (“in Spirit and in truth”) of the Lord. The Lord's Day is the earliest reference to the Christian name for Sunday. The Didache and St. Ignatius of Antioch show this name was used very early for the day when Christians gathered to celebrate the Resurrection in the Holy Eucharist. As a fulfillment of the first day of the week of the old creation, Sunday becomes the “eighth day,” the “first day of the new creation.” The term “eighth day” is seen in 2En 33:1 and inaugurates the first day of the timeless age to come. The loud voice, as of a trumpet is a traditional, eschatological, apocalyptic introduction describing an appearance of the Lord (see Ex 19:16, 19; Mt 24:31; 1Co 15:52; 1Th 4:16).
1:11-12 The glorified Christ introduces himself as the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last, thus identifying Himself with God the Father (v. 8; 22:13). His position amidst the seven lampstands signifies His presence in the Church (see Mt 5:14). The seven golden lampstands, a fusion of the great menorah of the temple with its seven lamps (see Ex 25:31–37; Zec 4:2; Heb 9:2) and the golden lampstands of Solomon's temple (3Kg 7:35), represent the fullness of God's presence. Also symbolized are the seven Asian churches that receive the letters of chs. 2; 3. This reference prompts some scholars to suggest John was in the church in a liturgical setting during the Revelation.
One like the Son of Man recalls Daniel's messianic figure (Dan 7:13—repeated by Stephen at his martyrdom, Acts 7:56). Christ called Himself Son of Man (see especially Mt 24:30ff.), for He is the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy. Additional parallels may be seen in both the Old and New Testaments (Dan 10:6; Mt 17:2; Eph 6:17; Heb 4:12). We also see Him vested in high-priestly garments (see Ex 28:4; 29:5; Lv 16:4; WSol 18:24; Zec 3:4, 5). The gold with which He is girded is both royal (1Mc 10:89) and priestly.
Further, Christ is here described as God, His hair (v. 14) being that of Daniel's vision of God as the “Ancient of Days” (7:9; see also 1En 46:1). His eyes signify knowledge; His feet (v. 15), permanence and stability; His voice, authority or teaching; His right hand (v. 16), power; His two-edged sword, complete discernment. This imagery continues throughout Revelation to affirm the preexistence and eternal divinity of the Son of Man (see also Jn 1:1–18). Thus, in Christ man (v. 14) and God (vv. 15, 16) are united.
Dan 2:31–44 indicates this mysterious metal foundation not only provides stability but has the ability to forcibly crush all opposition as well. These images are contrasted with the feet of clay found in Dan 2:33, 43: the kingdoms of this world are not permanent, nor ultimately triumphant.
The Lord holds the stars that represent the seven churches (1:20), and hence, the Church. For Christ is Lord of the Church. In His just judgment, the sword He wields is the Word of God, which cuts effortlessly to the very marrow and heart of humanity (see 2:16; 18:15; Is 11:4; 49:2; WSol 18:15; Eph 6:17; 2Th 2:9; Heb 4:12). The brilliance of His face recalls the Uncreated Light John saw radiating from the Savior at the Transfiguration on Mount Tabor.
Mortal humanity cannot bear the revelation of divine glory, a frequent biblical theme (see Ex 19:21; 33:20; Is 6:5). Just as he fell prostrate at Mount Tabor (Mt 17:6), so also does John here, in the presence of the glorified Savior (see Ezk 1:27; Dan 10:7–9; see also 1En 14:24). Do not be afraid is a revelatory formula from the OT. As a signal for the theophany, it was carried over into the NT (see the Annunciation, Lk 1:30; Jesus walking upon the water, Mt 14:27—“Fear not, I AM”; the Transfiguration, Mt 17:7). In the OT God was called “the first and the last” (Is 44:6; 48:12), and so, too, is the Messiah. Some early heresies (e.g. Docetism) held that Jesus only seemed to die. But the Lord Himself testified, I . . . was dead, affirming the authenticity of His death; alive forevermore, His Resurrection—the power of which effects His lordship over death and its realm. The Orthodox icon of the resurrected Christ depicts Him with these keys (v. 18) in hand, standing triumphantly on the open gates of Hades.
John's visions have to do with both the present (things which are) and the future.
The angels of the seven churches have been variously interpreted as being (1) the guardian angels of the church communities; (2) the pastoral leadership of these local churches; (3) a personification of the prevailing spirit of the given congregations; or (4) simply the messengers responsible for delivering the letters. The term “angel” (heavenly or earthly messenger) is used over 60 times in Revelation.
The letters to the seven churches all follow a standard format: (1) John is commanded to write to the angel of the church. (2) A short introduction of Christ with a descriptive title follows. (3) The state of the church is summarized, beginning with Jesus' saying, “I know,” followed by praise or rebuke. (4) Exhortations are given. (5) The message concludes with, “He who has ears to hear, let him hear,” and a special promise to him who “overcomes.”

Ephesus, the provincial Roman capital for Asia Minor, was a populous, prosperous city located on important trade routes. Besides the official cults of Artemis (Diana) and the emperor, various occult practices flourished there (see Acts 19). The church had been founded by Paul about AD 53–56, and according to tradition, both John the Apostle and the Virgin Mary (whom Christ committed to John's care at His crucifixion) lived in Ephesus.
The Ephesian church had persevered in orthodox faith and moral uprightness, but had left its first love (v. 4), presumably for God and each other. False apostles were a serious problem in the early Church (see 2Co 11:13–23), and Paul warned they would ravage the church of Ephesus (Acts 20:29). However, in the early second century, St. Ignatius of Antioch praised the Ephesians for their continuing resistance to heresy. The lampstand (v. 5) is probably the Ephesian church's honor as the metropolitan church of Asia.
Most scholars believe the Nicolaitans to be an early gnostic sect that tolerated idolatry and encouraged fornication. Some of the church fathers held the founder of this sect to be an apostate Nicholas, one of the original seven deacons (Acts 6:5).
The message of the Spirit to the churches is explicitly a message to all Christians. In Hebrew, “conquering” and “saving” are synonymous: Salvation is victory. He who overcomes does so by participating in Christ's victory, which is salvation. In contrast to the false Nicolaitan sect, “overcomers” remain faithful to Christ until the end, in spite of all obstacles. Further, they fulfill the original destiny of man by partaking of the tree of life (Gn 2:9). To eat of this tree is to receive eternal life (vv. 11, 17, 26; 3:5, 12, 21; 21:7; Jn 16:33; 2Co 4:7–18). The fruit of the tree is the spiritual food of 1Co 10:3, the “medicine of immortality.” Tree of life is also an allusion to the Cross, upon which all Christians must be co-crucified with Christ (Gal 2:20), partaking in the death of Christ in order to participate in His Resurrection. The Paradise of God is heaven (Lk 23:43; 2Co 12:2–4); the city of God, the New Jerusalem (see 21:1–22:5), contrasted to the original earthly paradise.
Smyrna (Izmir in modern Turkey) was, like Ephesus, a beautiful and prosperous city, maintaining a strong allegiance to Rome. A large and influential Jewish population actively opposed Christianity there. St. Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, was one of the first of the early hierarchs to be martyred: he was burned to death on a pyre, confessing he had served Christ faithfully “for 86 years.” Polycarp was probably a youth in Smyrna when John addressed the letter to the church there. St. Ignatius of Antioch also wrote to the Smyrnans—and to Polycarp, as well.
The Smyrnian church was poor, perhaps because of the persecution, but spiritually rich, the opposite of Laodicea. The Jews of the synagogue of Satan may be either Jews in name only (see Rom 2:28, 29) who were insincere in their profession of Judaism and compromising in their beliefs (Jn 8:31–47); or Jews who refused to embrace the Messiah and His Church (Rom 2:28; Gal 6:15).
The persecution will be completed in ten days, a limited time likely not meant to be taken literally, and some may undergo martyrdom. Christ encourages faithfulness to the end. The crown of life, an allusion to the wreath awarded to a victor in an arena (Php 3:14; 2Ti 2:5; 1Pt 5:4), is the reward of eternal life granted to those who conquer in Christ. The second death (v. 11) indicates eternal damnation, the “lake of fire,” wherein sinners will receive their reward of final and lasting estrangement from God (20:6, 14, 15; 21:8).
Pergamos (modern Bergama), northeast of Smyrna, was a distinguished city built on top of a thousand-foot-high hill 10 miles inland from the Aegean Sea. It boasted an outstanding library (the word “parchment” is derived from its name). Four important pagan cults were centered there, and emperor worship was popular. The sharp two-edged sword is the Lord's two-edged message of terror to some and joy to others, the just judgment of God (see note on 19:1–3).
Satan's throne refers to the city as a seat for idol worship: Pergamos was the first city in Asia to build a temple dedicated to the worship of a living emperor. Hence, Satan's throne, where he holds court, can also indicate the altar where Caesar was worshiped as lord, and/or where the Roman governor sat in his judgment seat, dealing out capital punishment by the “law of the sword.” According to tradition, the early martyr Antipas was bishop of Pergamos and was martyred in AD 92 by being burned to death in a heated bronze bull, having witnessed before the Roman governor that Jesus is Lord.
A group in this church holds the doctrine of Balaam. Balaam is the biblical prototype of all corrupt teachers and religious compromisers. He encouraged immorality, idolatrous feasting, and infidelity against the Lord (Nm 22–24; 25:1–3; 31:16; 2Pt 2:15; Jude 11).
2:16  The sword of My mouth is simply the Word of the Lord, the very articulation of which is just and righteous judgment.
Hidden manna is an allusion to the bread of heaven (or the bread of angels), the bread of the Almighty (Ex 16:4; Ps 77:24, 25; Jn 6:31–35, 48–51). To eat it is to partake of the messianic banquet in the Kingdom (Lk 22:28–30), the Eucharist of the age to come. In sharp contrast to communion with the pagan cult, it restores our original communion with God. The white stone on which a new name is inscribed indicates a new identity with Christ. Unlike pagan amulets inscribed with mysterious formulae, the new name of Christ is received by His faithful at their baptismal rebirth.
Thyatira lay southeast of Pergamos and was a commercial city known for its trade guilds (Acts 16:14). Guild meetings frequently included cultic meals in their patronal temples, a problem for Christian tradesmen, for the meetings involved idol worship and sexual debauchery. Christ’s eyes and feet allude to the vision of the Son of Man in Dan 10.
The false prophetess is called Jezebel after Ahab's queen, who vigorously promoted idolatry in Israel (3Kg 18; 4Kg 9). The church in Thyatira has allowed a new Jezebel (a member of the Nicolaitan sect) to exert an influential “prophetic” leadership in the community, leading many of the faithful astray.
Those who commit adultery (v. 22) are those who accept the teaching of the false prophetess; her children (v. 23) are her followers.
The depths of Satan: The infidels claimed to know deep spiritual things, but Christ labels their claims satanic delusion.
The morning star is none other than Christ (22:16). He is the Daylight from on high (Lk 1:78; see 2Pt 1:19), the true Light which enlightens all who come into the world (Jn 1:9). The phrase may also refer to eternal life and a share in the reign of Christ.
Sardis, 30 miles southeast of Thyatira, was known for its wealth and unassailable fortifications. It was an ancient city, once very powerful, fallen into decline. The church there was also in decline, not falling into heresy or immorality, but into death. For the church in Sardis had so completely compromised with the surrounding pagan world that although it appeared to be alive, it was spiritually dead (Mt 21:19). There is irony in Christ's accusation. Sardis boasted of a venerable temple to the Asiatic mother-goddess Cybele, purportedly able to restore the dead to life. In the letter to Ephesus (2:1–7), the seven stars represented the angels that guided the churches. The seven Spirits of God is either an expression indicating the fullness of God's powerful presence in the Church, or an allusion to the sevenfold operation of the Spirit of God spoken of by Isaiah (11:2), a connection proposed by St. Justin. The earliest recorded interpreter of Revelation, St. Melito, was bishop of Sardis c. 190.
Christ's exhortation to vigilance would be especially relevant to the citizens of Sardis. Though its fortress was considered impregnable, the city was overconfident and had twice fallen because of its guards' failure to be watchful.
3:4-5 White garments: Basic vestment for priests, a symbol of the resurrected body. They allude to spiritual purity, victory, and love; immersion or baptism into new life in Christ; immortality; a glorified body; and a place at the messianic wedding banquet (Mt 22:11–14).
The Book of Life (13:8; 17:8; 20:12, 15; Ex 32:32; Ps 68:29; Dan 12:1; Lk 10:20; see also 1En 47:3) is God's register naming all who will inherit eternal life. By the fourth century, at the beginning of Lent the names of the catechumens were enrolled in a church record book termed “The Heavenly Book,” or “The Book of the Church” (see TheoMop, JohnChr and GrgNy). The Son speaks of His Father and His angels but He also calls them His own angels (Mt 13:41; 24:31), showing His equality with the Father.
Philadelphia (modern Alashehier) was a smaller and newer city than the other six, situated 30 miles southeast of Sardis. The key of David (Is 22:22, Hebrew text) is a messianic reference to the One who may judge in God's Name and admit or exclude from the City of David, the New Jerusalem (see Eph 1:22). St. Ignatius calls Christ the Door to the Father.
The Philadelphians had probably been excommunicated from the local synagogue, hence Christ's assurance of an open door to His Kingdom.
Worship is better translated “bow down.” Jesus will force the unbelieving Jews to humble themselves before the Philadelphian Christians, not literally to worship them.
3:10 To those faithful to Him, the Lord Jesus will in turn be faithful during the hour of trial that will come to the whole world by preserving them during that trial (see Jn 17:15) and protecting them from demonic assaults. Although the faithful will not be rescued from sufferings, persecution, and martyrdom, they will be sustained and supported so as to persevere in their faithfulness. The hour of trial is an apocalyptic image (Dan 12:1; Mt 6:13; Mk 13:4; Jn 17:6, 15; 2Th 2:1–12), referring to the testing and tribulation (chs. 8; 9; 16) preceding the manifestation of the eternal Kingdom of God. Those who dwell on the earth is a commonly used term for the ungodly.
The coming down of the New Jerusalem represents the union of heaven and earth and the liberation of all creation from bondage. Pillar indicates permanence; the new name is Christ's full revelation at His second and glorious coming.
Laodicea (modern Eski-hisar) was 40 miles southeast of Philadelphia on the same road. It was the most prosperous city of the area, boasting a special type of wool, a large banking industry, and a famous medical school. Many Jews lived there. Paul wrote a letter to Laodicea (which no longer exists, unless it was identical to what we know as Ephesians) to be exchanged with the Colossians (see Col 4:16).

Amen is a divine title applied here to Christ, who is the final ratification and accomplishment of the promise of God (2Co 1:19, 20). It affirms His sureness and steadfastness, amplified by Faithful and True Witness. The word beginning (Gr. arche) has been seized upon by ancient Arians and modern Jehovah's Witnesses, who attempt to prove Christ is created, thus denying His eternal existence. However, the term is more accurately translated as “source” or “origin,” signifying He is the Master of all. Christ the Beginning is the principle, the source of God's creation (see Pr 8:23; Jn 1:3; 1Co 8:6; Col 1:16, 17; Heb 1:2), the creative Word and Wisdom of God.
Six miles from Laodicea, hot springs at Hierapolis gave forth water that became lukewarm (v. 16) by the time it reached Laodicea. It was contaminated with many minerals, impossible to drink and nauseating. The Laodiceans were lukewarm in spiritual fervor and good works; their lack of commitment is revolting to the Lord, who would have them go one way or the other.
3:17-18 Preoccupation with material wealth and comfort have deadened the fervor of the Laodiceans, who have fallen into a complacent self-satisfaction denounced by the Physician of our souls and bodies. Christ counsels them to seek spiritual wealth, forgiveness and resurrection life, and enlightenment, offering a loving chastisement that can bring about true healing, true and lasting riches. Gold, white garments, and eye salve (v. 18) correspond to the three leading Laodicean industries.
I will . . . dine with him if there is cooperation, the synergy of an open door. God does not force anyone to cooperate with Him. He keeps knocking, awaiting a response. This promise looks toward both the messianic banquet, the wedding supper of the Lamb of God (19:9; Lk 22:30), and the Holy Eucharist, which is a foretaste of the heavenly feast. Faithful disciples are promised they will eat and drink at table with Him (Lk 22:28–30) in the ultimate reality of the Kingdom of heaven. Note the parallels with the parable of the bridegroom (Mt 25:1–13) and with the teaching about those who will shut themselves out of the feast of the Kingdom (Lk 13:25–30).
The one who cooperates with God overcomes, or conquers. Those who heed God's rebuke and chastening (v. 19) conquer lukewarmness and become “hot” in their spiritual lives (vv. 15, 16). Those who share Christ's trials will share His table and His throne in His Kingdom (4:4; 20:4–6; 22:3–5; Lk 22:30; 2Ti 2:12).
After this does not refer to a chronological order within the text of chs. 1–4, but instead connects this next sequence with the initial vision, a vision that beholds past, present, and future as one whole. St. John writes, as it were, from inside the eye of an apocalyptic tornado, recording glimpses of the eschatological events that whirl by. The single open door through the vaulted firmament (see Gn 1:7, 8) allows vision into the depths of all mysteries, the celestial throne. Since earthly events have their origin in heaven, true insight into history can be attained only from that vantage point (see Gn 28:17; Ezk 1:1; Mk 1:10; Acts 7:56; see also 1En 14:14; TLev 5:1). Come up, reminiscent of Moses' invitation from God to ascend Mt. Sinai (Ex 19:24), is a command with liturgical overtones: to enter God's sanctuary, His “high place.”
God is seen in biblical visions as sitting on a throne, a symbol of His sovereign lordship (3Kg 22:19; Ps 46:9; Is 6:1; Ezek 1:25–27; Dan 7:9; Mt 5:34; 23:22; see also 1En 14:18, 19). The image of this throne occurs over 40 times in Revelation and is further described as “a great white throne” (20:11), a throne of judgment. But here His throne is surrounded by a rainbow (v. 3), the sign of God's everlasting covenant according to which He will not judge man again as He did at the Flood (Gn 9:12–17). Mercy triumphs over judgment (Mt 9:13). Thus, in the Orthodox Church, the altar table is sometimes called “the throne.”
The twenty-four elders are usually interpreted to be elders of the old and new covenants: the twelve sons of Jacob and the twelve apostles, the fullness of both covenants. They are the foundation of the people of God in both covenants (7:4; Mt 19:28). These elders continually fall down before God in worship (5:14; 11:16; 19:4), in adoration and praise (4:11; 5:9, 10; 11:17, 18; 19:4).
The sea of glass (Ezk 1:22–26) surrounds God's throne, for God is approached by fallen men only through waters of death that produce life. As Israel journeyed through the Red Sea as if on hard ground, so Christians pass through the waters of baptism, entering into Christ's death and Resurrection. If the sea is not of glass, there is death, not new life. Also, God is vast and overpowering, as a sea of light would be. The hosts of angels surround Him (Dan 7:10) as a sea of purity.

The four living creatures are angelic beings adapted from Ezekiel 1:4–20 and Isaiah 6:2. Their number is that of the whole world, the cosmos, and thus they portray creation, beasts, men, and angels as the Kingdom of God. Traditional iconography depicts them as symbols for the four evangelists. Their worship of God is unceasing, an ideal inspiring the round-the-clock services of Orthodox monastic communities.
The six wings (Is 6:2; Ezek 1:6) may symbolize the swiftness with which God's will is enacted in His world. Full of eyes around and within (see the wheels of Ezek 1:18) indicates the absolute vigilance of these creatures. They do not rest day or night suggests the essence of their ceaseless activity: to praise God (the very liturgy which the whole cosmos is called to serve) and to pray without ceasing (Ps 102:20–22; 148; 150; 1Th 25:17).

Their hymn, “Holy, holy, holy,” like that of Isaiah's seraphim (Is 6:3), praises God, who is Lord of history and fills heaven and earth with His glory. Isaiah's doxology was part of synagogue worship and was incorporated into the worship of the Church (1Clem 34:6). Another form of this hymn, the Trisagion (“Holy God, Holy Mighty, Holy Immortal, have mercy on us!”) reverberates throughout the services of the Orthodox Church. Ambrose wrote a similar hymn, the “Te Deum.” The eucharistic prayer of the Divine Liturgies of Ss. John Chrysostom, Basil, and James refers to the perpetual thrice-holy hymn of the “cherubim and the seraphim,” thus blending the visions of Ezekiel, Isaiah, and St. John, and underscoring that the Divine Liturgy on earth is one with the heavenly liturgy of the angels and glorified saints.
The elders participate in the heavenly worship by the physical acts of prostration (see 3Kg 18:42) and casting their crowns. Prostration, a significant feature of historic Christian worship, is based in Scripture and signifies humility before God. The casting of crowns shows that the honor and glory of the saints derives from and belongs to God.
This doxology (glorification of God) is typical of many in the Apocalypse. It is offered to the Father and to Christ. Doxologies are a prominent aspect of Orthodox liturgy, ascribing glory, honor, and power to God.
The scroll contains the secret decrees of God concerning the judgment and salvation of humanity (see Ezek 2:9, 10; Ps 138:16; see also 1En 81:1, 2). Included is the greatest of all mysteries, God's will concerning the events marking the end times (see Dan 10:21), sealed up and hidden in profound security (with seven seals) until the time it will be revealed and implemented. In the twenty-three references to scrolls in Revelation there are five types: (1) the unsealed letters to the churches of Asia; (2) the unsealed Book of Life (13:8ff.); (3) the unsealed books of judgment (20:12); (4) the little open scroll that is eaten (10:8–10); and (5) the present sealed scroll.
Who can know the mysteries of the scroll and the seals? Who but Christ, the Son of God Himself, can understand the greatest of all mysteries and how God deals with man in history? The Lion . . . of Judah and Root of David are messianic titles with parallels in the OT and apocryphal books (see Gn 49:9, 10; Is 11:1–10). The One who has conquered Satan decisively, once and for all, in His self-sacrifice on the Cross and in His Resurrection, is alone worthy to open the scroll of destiny, reveal its message, and carry out its words.
Jesus is called the Lamb of God in Jn 1:29. Isaiah compares the Messiah's voluntary self-sacrifice to a lamb being led to slaughter (Is 53). The central theme of Revelation is victory through sacrifice. This Lamb stands between the throne, the four living creatures, and the elders. St. Ignatius refers to the bishop standing at the center of his flock as an image of both the Father and the Son. In the development of episcopal vesture, the bishop's outer garment was for a time woven of wool. Seven horns and seven eyes represent the fullness of Christ's power and knowledge; through Him also the Holy Spirit (the seven Spirits of God) is sent on His mission to the world. Intertestamental Jewish apocalyptic literature portrayed the Messiah as a horned lamb who would fight for His people and conquer the forces of evil. The Jews, however, never expected this warrior-lamb to suffer and die, and did not consider Him to be God. The warrior-lamb is both with God (in the midst of the throne) and with man (in the midst of the elders), for He is the union of God and man without the merging of the two natures.
The four angelic beings, the four living creatures, and the glorified saints of all ages represented by the twenty-four elders worship Jesus, thus recognizing His deity, by elevated thanksgiving (each having a harp). And by elevated prayer (golden bowls full of incense) they present to God the prayers of the saints still on earth, manifested in the incense (8:3, 4; see Ps 140:2; Tb 12:15). In the ancient world, incense was used in both secular and liturgical life. God, people, and objects were censed as a sign of honor and dedication. And in the services of the Church, incense is also a symbol of prayer.
Three doxologies are sung by ever-increasing choruses. (1) The elders with the most eminent angels sing a new song, more perfect than any hymn before, to the Lamb (Christ), for He has inaugurated the new age (21:1, 5; Is 42:10). (2) The Church joined by all the holy angels—much as the priests are followed by the choir and then by the entire church—sends up to the Lamb a fullness of divine ascriptions in a sevenfold doxology (5:12). (3) All creation, the whole cosmos, joins in a hymn of glory addressed to the Father and to the Son. As heaven's angels sing to God, so do “we who represent the cherubim.” The Church has always been first and foremost a worshiping community; the Divine Liturgy empowers and inspires evangelism, social service, instruction, and all else.
With the Lamb's opening of the seals, John begins a description of the signs of the end, much of it already set forth by Jesus in the Gospels (Mt 24; Mk 13; Lk 21). The seals are consequences of man's condition, an overview of conditions manifest since the birth of the Church, which will continue until Christ's second coming. The four horsemen (see Zec 1:8–17; 6:1–8 for the model of this imagery) personify the scourges which, through the prophets, God has threatened as judgment on the faithless: war, famine, plague, natural disasters.
The first rider (on the white horse, carrying a bow) represents the spirit of conquest, reminiscent of fierce divine judgment in the OT, usually wrought through the military power of adversaries (Jer 27:29; Ezk 5:15). Jesus taught “nation will rise against nation” (Mt 24:7). The figure here probably represents liberators of the oppressed people of God.
The second rider represents war, violent bloodshed, and death—removal of peace from the earth, the result of the conquests of the first rider. Jesus predicted there will be “wars and rumors of wars” (Mt 24:6).
The third rider represents famine and inflation, frequent accompaniments of war.
The fourth horseman represents widespread human death, pale green being the color of rotting flesh. Pestilence and starvation follow the famine of warfare.
The cry of the martyrs for vengeance is not vindictive; they are pleading with God to hasten the end of persecution and the consummation of His plans for the world. In the interim, the martyrs are consoled by the white robe (v. 11)—a Jewish symbol of resurrection from the dead. Elsewhere it is a symbol of blessedness, good deeds, innocence, victory, purity, new and eternal life, transfiguration, a resurrected and glorified body, vesting in Christ, and the wedding garment of salvation (3:5; 7:9, 13–17; 19:8, 9; Is 61:10; Dan 10:5; Mt 22:1–4; Gal 3:27; see also 1En 62:16). The martyrs are called to have patience until the fullness of their number is complete. The vision of the souls of the martyrs under the altar (v. 9) derives from the OT practice of pouring the blood (the physical manifestation of the life of the soul) of sin offerings at the base of the altar of burnt offering. It is a basis for the historic Christian practices of building church buildings over tombs of martyrs, placing relics of saints in the altar when a church is consecrated, and burying baptized people under the altar. Thus, in the Divine Liturgy Orthodox Christians remember “those who lie asleep here and in all the world.”
The sixth seal represents the cosmic disturbances that often accompany descriptions of “the day of the Lord,” the return of Christ (Joel 3:3, 4; Mt 24:29, 30; and parallels). People in rebellion against God (v. 15) are terror-stricken before God's judgmental wrath.
7:1-17 The seventh (and final) seal will yet be opened (8:1). The visions here of the faithful Church form an interlude wherein the Lord's faithful are “sealed” against His wrath. “Who is able to stand?” (6:17). The faithful, who will be sealed and will then assemble for worship.
The four winds are symbolic “winds of judgment,” as in Jewish apocalyptic literature (Jer 25:16; Zec 2:10; Dan 8:8; Mk 13:27; see also 1En 76:1–4). They are restrained until God's servants (Is 44:5; 2Co 1:22; 2Ti 2:19) are sealed (v. 3), that is, given a special protection from the ensuing judgments (Ezk 9:1–11).
The servants of God are sealed (v. 4) by the Holy Spirit. Extensive debates have taken place regarding the 144,000. Some regard the number as symbolizing the entire faithful Church as the new Israel (12 tribes times the churches of the 12 apostles times 1000—a number which means “a great amount”). Thus, the contention is that the number simply stands for completeness and perfection—twelve times twelve equals the perfect square. Slightly differently, some see the 144,000 as the Church militant, the Church on earth, and the white-robed multitude (vv. 9, 10) as the Church triumphant.
The scene shifts to heaven, where an innumerable multitude from all nations worships before the throne of God. Their white robes and palm branches (v. 9) symbolize purity and victory. The vast multitude represents either the entire faithful Church—which lives in the spirit of its baptism (washed . . . in the blood of the Lamb, v. 14)—or the righteous from all nations who were not members of the “12 x 12 x 1000,” old covenant Israel and the Church. These pass victoriously through the great tribulation to inherit the Kingdom. See also note on 22:14.
The heavenly life is pictured as one of unending worship, day and night (v. 15), from which all suffering has been banished. Here we have the ultimate sanctification of time, the consecration of all life to the service and worship of God, carried out along with the heavenly hosts. Is 49:10 inspires the statement of v. 16. John's descriptions of the victorious Church and the blessings of heaven were written to encourage and console Christians of the first century who faced severe persecution for their faith—in which the faithful of all generations may find consolation.
The silence (v. 1), trumpets (v. 2), and offering of incense (vv. 3, 4) were features of the Jewish temple liturgy. The half-hour silence (v. 1) dramatically indicates profound awe at the opening of the seventh seal.
8:2 The seven angels receive the seven trumpets. These bodiless powers represent the OT priests, who also sounded their trumpets during the temple liturgy (see Jos 6:12; 1Ch 16:6; Ps 97:6).
Incense is present in heaven (see 5:8). It symbolizes the prayers of all the saints. Incense is: (1) commanded by God to Moses for use in Israel's worship (Ex 25:6; 20:18; 24:16; Lk 1:9–11); (2) used throughout Israel's history under the old covenant (1Ch 23:13); (3) prophesied by the Lord Himself concerning its use in the Church: incense will be offered “in every place . . . among the Gentiles” (Mal 1:11); (4) brought by the Magi as a gift to Jesus (Mt 2:11); and (5) used in Christian worship from the beginning even till today, in both East and West.
8:5 The casting of the censer to earth (v. 5) shows that the prayers of the saints for vengeance (6:9–11) have been heard. The thunderings and earthquake signify that the judgment of God is imminent.
8:6 The seven angels with the seven trumpets form a double image of the old covenant temple liturgy and the fall of Jericho.

The interrelationship of the “seal judgments” (5:1–8:1), “trumpet judgments” (8:2–11:19), and “bowl judgments” (15:1–16:21) in Revelation is complex. There is some repetition and summarizing. The trumpets and bowls also give increasing specificity to God's judgments. They may not describe a chronological unfolding of events or even actual events. The trumpets speak of God's final warning to the world, especially seen in the “one-third” formula, calling the world to repentance before utter destruction comes. This stage of judgment can be seen to be the prelude—manifested in the natural world—to the great tribulation (Mt 24:15–22), playing a role much like that of the ten plagues of Exodus; the end itself is “not yet.” The Church is not mentioned until ch. 11, where the calamities of earth are overcome by the Kingdom of God (11:15–19).
Only vegetation is affected. The seventh plague in Egypt is recalled (Ex 9:22–26; see also Ezek 5:12; Zec 13:8, 9). The reference to blood most likely comes from Joel (3:3; see Acts 2:19). A mixture of hail, fire, and blood is a typical apocalyptic picture of judgment.
As in the first plague of Egypt (Ex 7:14–25), the sea, marine life, and maritime commerce are affected.
Reminiscent of the first Egyptian plague, this judgment affects fresh waters. Wormwood, an extremely bitter plant that would make water undrinkable, symbolizes the bitter fruits of idolatry and sorrow to those who pursue adulterous liaisons with the heathen Gentiles (see Jer 9:12–16; 23:15).
A three-day period of darkness was the ninth Egyptian plague (Ex 10:21–29). An unnatural darkness is one of the signs of the end of days (Mk 13:24). Darkening of the sun, moon, and stars portends cosmic catastrophe. The darkness is partial to indicate it is a warning.
9:1, 2 While the star may refer to an angel, the same angel as the one of 20:1 (such symbolism was known in Judaism: see Job 38:7; also 1En 21:6), it may also represent the fallen world powers (see Jude 13), a fallen angel (Lk 10:18), or Satan himself (9:11; Is 14:12–15). His “fall” may mean “descent”: an angel is sent from heaven by God to unlock the bottomless pit, the abyss below the earth, the place of confinement for evil spirits (11:7; 17:8; 20:1–3; also Lk 8:31). The smoke from the pit causes a darkness on the earth; this may symbolize the spiritual darkness covering the earth during the last times. Compare with 1:18, in which the key to death and Hades is given to the Risen One.
9:3-4 These new plagues are again reminiscent of the plagues on Egypt (see the eighth and ninth plagues in Ex 9:10). From the smoke come locusts, representing demonic entities who rise from the pit to torture those who do not belong to God's Kingdom. The seal of (the name of) God on their foreheads is given to the 144,000 servants (5:4; 7:2–4; 14:1; 22:3, 4 in contrast with 13:16–18) for their spiritual identity. At chrismation, Orthodox Christians receive “the seal of the gift of the Holy Spirit” through holy oil placed on their foreheads.
The period of torture is limited; it is likened to the sting of the scorpion, one of the most painful known to man. Because of its intensity, the afflicted will seek death, but it is not permitted to them.
A terrifying picture of the demonic oppression of sinners in the last times.
In Hebrew, Abaddon refers to destruction (Job 28:22 and 31:12, Hebrew text). Apollyon is the masculine Greek form for “destroyer.” There may be an allusion here to the Greek god Apollo, with whom the emperors Caligula, Nero, and Domitian claimed a special relationship.
The four-horned altar is based on the OT prototype (Ex 27:2). The voice is a command from God allowing the four angels (v. 14) to create the spiritual conditions for the destruction of a third of mankind (v. 15). The Euphrates (v. 14) was the border of the empire beyond which fierce and menacing peoples were often feared to dwell. The number two hundred million (v. 16) makes it unlikely any earthly army is in view; as with the locusts, another infernal, demonic host is probably envisioned.
The description given is for horse and rider combined. Some may imagine modern armaments, but this would have been completely foreign to the communities for whom the book was written. The various features are intended to present an awesome spectacle of the horrific plagues visited on those who resist God.
9:20-21 Unfortunately, humanity is so addicted to sin that even these terrifying plagues do not cause the survivors to repent (see 1Co 8:4). Paul (1Co 10:20, 21) and early fathers such as Justin Martyr and Irenaeus also connected idol worship with the worship of demons.
A parenthesis between the sixth and seventh trumpets. The passage consists of two visions: (1) the angel with the book; (2) the two witnesses. Dan 12 provides many of the images.
John once again beholds from earth the angel's descent. God's message comes to him in a little book (v. 2) or scroll. The descriptive features of the angel are common symbols for divine glory (Ezk 1:26, 27; Mt 17:2). His feet on the sea and land (v. 2) show his immensity and his authority to speak to the whole earth.
The angel's voice, like a lion's roar, reminds us of God readying Himself for judgment (Jer 27:44; Am 1:2; Joel 4:16). The seven thunders probably refer to the divine voice (Ps 28:3–9; Jn 12:27–33), a fullness of terror, power, and magnificence. In Dan 12:4, God tells the prophet to seal up (v. 4) what has been written in his book. So, too, St. John is told, regarding what the seven thunders have revealed. This command not to write down the utterance shows John's revelation does not exhaust divine decrees for humanity: undisclosed mysteries remain (2Co 12:4).
The angel, lifting his hand in the form for taking an oath (see Gn 14:22; Dan 12:7), swears that the fullness of time has arrived and God's plan for history (the mystery of God, v. 7) is to be completed. This recalls Ps 118:126, proclaimed by the deacon at the beginning of the Divine Liturgy: “It is time for the Lord to act!” as an answer to the question of the martyrs dwelling under the altar (6:10–11). Lives forever and ever (v. 6) is literally “unto ages of ages,” the closing phrase of most Orthodox Christian prayers.
The voice of God directs John to take the book. The symbolism of eating refers to receiving a revelation from God: John's account has many parallels to the commissioning of Ezekiel (Ezk 2:8–3:3; see also Ps 118:103). The contrast between sweetness in the mouth and bitterness in the stomach shows the sweetness of receiving God's revelation (announcing God's victory for His people) as opposed to the bitterness of its message of woe (announcing God's terrible judgments, as well as sufferings for His faithful ones).
The measurement of the temple recalls Ezekiel's vision (Ezk 40–42). Here the measurement indicates the preservation of the temple, not restoration. Commentators variously interpret the temple as (1) a literal temple to be rebuilt in Jerusalem in the future, (2) a symbol of the Church (see Eph 2:19–21; 1Pt 2:5), or (3) the Jewish-Christian Church of the first century. The holy city (v. 2) shows the setting to be Jerusalem. The Synoptic Gospels also taught that Jerusalem would fall (Mt 24; Mk 13; Lk 21); Luke mentioned specifically that the Gentiles would trample Jerusalem for a period (21:24). In patristic tradition the second interpretation is preferable. The court outside (v. 2) is for both Jews and Gentiles. It will not be measured because of the large number of Christians.

The forty-two months (v. 2) is three and a half years, one-half of seven, symbolizing what is not full or final but temporary, incomplete. It derives from Daniel's “a time, two times, and half a time” (12:7), the three-and-a-half-year period when the temple was to be profaned (Dan 9:27). John affirms the true temple, the Church, will be preserved during this Gentile onslaught. “Temple” is a frequent NT symbol for the Church (1Co 3:16, 17; 2Co 6:16; Eph 2:19–22).
The identity of the two witnesses is much disputed. The most common opinion of the church fathers is that they represent Elijah and Enoch, who were believed to have ascended to heaven. In Jewish tradition, Moses is frequently substituted for Enoch on the basis of the tradition that he, too, ascended to heaven. It was Moses who appeared with Elijah at the Transfiguration of Jesus. John most likely drew on the Jewish tradition that Elijah would return to preach in the last days (Mal 3:22; Mt 4:5). Although Jesus identified the Elijah figure with John the Baptist, many continued to believe in an actual appearance of Elijah before the end. Sackcloth was the ancient garb of penitence (see Jer 4:8; Mt 11:21). The prophecy of the two witnesses will continue for 1,260 days (42 months or 3–1/2 years; see Dan 7:25; 12:7). This period may be interpreted as “fullness” (i.e., seven) arrested halfway, imperfect, impermanent, not necessarily to be taken in a numerically literal manner.
These two olive trees and the two lampstands who stand before... God are the eschatological agents of God at work on earth. This symbolic description of the witnesses is derived from Zechariah's vision concerning Zerubbabel the governor and Joshua the high priest, who are described as standing “beside the Lord of all the earth” (Zec 4:14).
These features are reminiscent of Elijah's ministry (3Kg 17) and the plagues God visited upon the Egyptians through Moses (Ex 7–11).
11:7 The beast is either the Antichrist or the Roman Empire (see 13:1–10; Dan 7).
The great city . . . where also our Lord was crucified, is clearly Jerusalem (which kills the prophets; Lk 13:34). Like Sodom and Egypt, Jerusalem becomes self-sufficient and rebels against God.
The peoples, tribes, tongues, and nations represent the whole world in rebellion against God. They rejoice at the sight of the dead prophets because the prophets' preaching had tormented the rebels' consciences.
The breath of life is a biblical term for the animating life-force manifest in the breath. The resurrection of the witnesses is conceivable because of the traditions regarding the ascensions of Enoch, Elijah, and Moses (see, as well, the dry bones of Ezk 37).
These heavenly voices, which introduce an interlude with the scene shifting back to heaven, provide for us the pivotal verse of the whole of Revelation. Once again (as in 10:5–7) the proclamation is made that the fullness of time has arrived: the kingdoms of this world are subject to the Kingdom of God. This is the mystery of mysteries alluded to in 10:7, which our Lord Himself mentioned, as recorded in Jn 12:31: the judgment of the world and the casting out of Satan is effected by the crucifixion. The voices state this has already occurred once and for all, at Calvary. Up to this point, Revelation has recorded only the prelude to God's judgment. From now on, the book records the judgment of God in all its power.
The twenty-four elders concelebrate the consummation of God's Kingdom in the heavenly liturgy. This carries a message of consolation to the Church. Those who destroy the earth (v. 18) are the morally wicked, not merely the ecologically irresponsible—however, ecological irresponsibility is moral wickedness. Perhaps the pagan Roman Empire is in view.
These verses begin an extensive parenthesis in the center of Revelation dealing with the conflict between the Church and the powers of evil (12:1–14:20). The great sign in heaven, the woman, is either the Theotokos or true Israel, the Church (Is 7:14). Orthodoxy sees the Theotokos as the perfect symbol of Israel and the Church. She is the antithesis of the harlot of ch. 17, for she is a radiant bride (SS 6:4, 10) adorned with splendor. The twelve stars indicate the twelve tribes (and possibly the twelve apostles) and the moon under her feet symbolizes her preeminent role over creation. Her birth-giving (“a male Child,” v. 5) is that of the Messiah, and she bears other offspring as well (12:17), a likely reference to the Church.
The dragon is clearly identified as Satan (12:9). A third of the stars of heaven (v. 4) is usually interpreted to mean that Satan drew a third of the angels with him when he fell. His intention is to destroy the Messiah.
True Israel brings forth Christ, who, after completion of His saving work, ascends to heaven (Ps 2:7–9; 46:6).
The flight of the woman may refer to the flight of the Jerusalem Church (embodying true Israel) to Pella before the outbreak of the Roman war. It illustrates there is no place for the Church in this age. The 1260 days, or three and a half years, is the classic period of apocalyptic woe (see 11:2): as bad as it is, it is temporary, not the end of things.
12:7-12  This passage begins an interlude describing Satan's role in stimulating persecution of the Church. The war with Michael and the good angels is usually interpreted to picture an event before the creation of the world. However, the context places it just before the end of the world. Satan has been accusing the brethren (v. 10), the Christians, and his downfall (see Lk 10:18) presages the consummation of the Kingdom (v. 10). Satan is overcome by Christ's self-sacrifice and that of the martyrs (v. 11)—those who did not love their lives to the death. The short time (v. 12) Satan has is the period of tribulation just prior to the end.
12:13-16 Satan hates Christ and His mother. The Virgin Mary was saved by the inspiration of the angel who told Joseph to run into Egypt. Likewise, Satan hates Christ and the Church (Jn 15:21) and attacks the one through the other, since they are identified. One of his first activities is to persecute true Israel. The wings of a great eagle (v. 14) refers to the original Exodus (Ex 19:4; see Dt 32:11), as the flood (vv. 15, 16) may also be the threat of drowning in the Red Sea. However, Satan is unable to prevail. The Jewish Church safely completes its exodus and is preserved during its apocalyptic period. And the Church in general will be preserved: the gates of hell cannot prevail against her (Mt 16:18). For Jesus' warnings about this flight, see Mt 24:15–21.
12:17  Satan then turns his attention to the rest of true Israel's offspring, obviously the Gentile Church, which has inherited from her both the commandments of God and faith in Christ.
13:1, 2 The beast (monster) rising up out of the sea, a composite of the four beasts of Dan 7, is the epitome of worldly kingdoms opposed to God and His Kingdom. For John, this was the Roman Empire: a monstrous creature with ten horns (very powerful), seven heads (the emperors), ten crowns, and on his heads a blasphemous name (emperors who assumed titles of divinity such as “Lord and God,” “Savior,” “Son of God,” etc.). In a parody of 5:12–14, where the sacrificed Lamb is enthroned, the beast is given power, not to bless the Church but to persecute it. One of the heads of this monster was “as though it had been slaughtered to death” (the Greek text), and is another parody of the Lamb, which was standing even though it had been slain (5:6).

The deadly wound might refer to the mad emperor Nero's death (inflicted by a slit throat in the manner of temple sacrifice). For despite his death in AD 68, the empire lived on, revived under Vespasian. Many believed Nero himself would rise from the dead. Domitian (AD 81–96, the emperor at the time of the writing of Revelation) was considered to be “Nero reincarnate” because his cruelty surpassed Nero's. Christian tradition has also seen the beast as an image of the Antichrist, the false messiah who presents himself in the last times as God incarnate and is accepted by the world (see Jn 5:43; 2Th 1:12; 1Jn 2:18). Since there are “many antichrists” (1Jn 2:18), there may be more than one application of the beast figure.
People worshiped the dragon (Satan), for it had given authority to the beast (a reference to emperor worship, which Domitian ruthlessly enforced). “Who is like the beast?” is an allusion to Michael the Archangel, whose name means “Who is like God?” It is also a parody of God, the incomparable (Ex 15:11; Ps 88:7). Citizens are awed by the power and authority of the empire.
Forty-two months is the final period of apocalyptic conflict. It is one-half of seven years, not the final end of things. Thus, the nations trample over the holy city for three and a half years (11:2); the two witnesses prophesy for three and a half years (11:3); they are left unburied for three and a half days (11:9, 11); the woman is protected in the wilderness for three and a half years (12:6, 14). Nero's persecution lasted approximately forty-two months.
The beast, the Roman Empire, utters blasphemy against God, for the emperor came to see himself as god. Domitian demanded to be called divine, and on Roman coins divine titles were associated with the likenesses of deceased emperors. The tabernacle is God's Church; those who dwell in heaven, the angels and glorified saints. Christians saw emperor worship as worship of Satan (v. 2; 2:13); it is the ultimate offense against God that His creatures would worship earthly authority, itself under demonic rule. Nevertheless, by God's permission, the Antichrist rules over the whole earth and apparently vanquishes the Church.
13:10  Better rendered “he who is destined for captivity,” “he who is destined for the sword,” directed to Christians facing persecution (see Jer 15:2).
The beast which rose out of the earth with two horns (power) like a lamb (Christ, gentle and giving), and which spoke like a dragon (Satan, whose speech is seductive), is worldly religion. Its minister of propaganda, so to speak, mimics John the Baptist and the Holy Spirit: a false prophet (see 16:13; 19:20; 20:10; Dan 7:8) calling all to worship the first beast (false divinity). This monster completes the unholy triumvirate: dragon (Satan, false god), beast from the sea (worldly authority and power, false incarnation), and beast from the earth (worldly religion, false prophet): a blasphemous parody of the Holy Trinity.
With a parody of Pentecost, this monstrous cult leader is able to make fire come down from heaven on the earth by means of deception and sorcery (see Mt 24:24; Acts 13:6–12; Didache 16:3–4)—luring people into making an image to the beast (v. 14; the goddess of Rome or the emperor). Statues were often “brought to life” by sorcery. Irenaeus, Clement, Justin, and Eusebius note that the sorcerer Simon Magus (Acts 8:9–24) used illusion and occult practices to make idols seem alive. This beast is able to enforce the sentence of death on those who will not worship him (see Nebuchadnezzar's statue in Dan 3).
A parody of God's seal of 7:3, even alluding to the Hebrew phylactery of Dt 6:8—where God's Law is kept on the forehead and the left hand—and to chrismation (but not the same word as “sealed”). The mark is gained by worshiping the beast (v. 17); it signifies the beast is the owner of those who wear it—their protector and the one to whom they owe their livelihoods. This mark is not necessarily a visible and physical mark on the person, but it is required to do business. There is then an economic bias against those who do not bear the beast's mark (the faithful who will not render demonic worship to the state).
The letters of the alphabet were used as numbers in ancient times (Roman numerals). Thus, the numerical value of names could easily be calculated. “The name of the beast” (v. 17) is the numerical equivalent of the letters of the name of a man (some texts read “616” instead of the well-known 666). John may be purposefully enigmatic, using a secret code to protect against a charge of sedition.

This is a predictably misunderstood passage, for the text itself says it requires wisdom and understanding. In the Bible, the number six stands for falling short, incompleteness, imperfection; seven, for perfection, fullness, completion; eight, for eschatological perfection, a superabundance of fullness (see 2En 33:1). The sixth day, Friday, is the day of preparation; the seventh, the Sabbath, Saturday, a picture of the rest to come; the eighth day, Sunday, the day of the Resurrection, the final establishment of God's Kingdom. The numerical equivalent of “Jesus” in Greek is 888. The numerical equivalent of “Nero Caesar” transliterated from Greek into Hebrew is 666, meaning the epitome of created inadequacy. The numerical equivalent of “Nero Caesar” transliterated from Latin into Hebrew is 616. If John were referring to Domitian, whom some considered to be Nero reincarnated, it would be safer to refer not to the present persecutor but to the one long gone. Some believe that “666” is a symbol rather than a cryptogram, falling short of perfection in each of its digits: failure upon failure upon failure, an evil trinity which always falls short of the Holy Trinity (“777”). Many have attempted to identify “666,” but writing only one hundred years after John, St. Irenaeus had no idea to whom John was referring!
Mount Zion, the location of the temple in Jerusalem, is the Church (Heb 12:22). It is where the Lamb of God and His one hundred and forty-four thousand faithful (see 7:4) assemble. Instead of the mark of the beast (13:16–18) they have the “mark” of the Father (see 7:3).
The voice from heaven that made the voice of many waters, loud thunder, and harps recalls the sounds of the temple liturgy. This voice sings a new song (v. 3; see 5:8–10; Ex 15:1–18; Ps 32:3; 98:1; 149:1; Is 42:10) which only the redeemed faithful from the earth are able to learn.
Virgins: In the OT, prostitution and adultery symbolize idolatry, and virginity signifies faithfulness to God. Thus, the 144,000 have kept themselves pure from the idolatrous worship of the beast. Instead, they are faithful and follow the Lord wherever He goes (Ru 1:16, 17) as sheep follow a shepherd (and here, the Shepherd is the Lamb), unlike adulterous Israel (Hos 3:1). These martyred faithful who love not their lives even unto death are the firstfruits offered to God from among humanity: the faithful remnant. They are truthful (having nothing to do with the father of lies) and unblemished (a technical term in OT temple sacrifice; see Ex 12:5; Eph 5:25–27; 1Pt 1:19). We shall later encounter them as the bride of the Lamb (19:8; 21:2).
14:6, 7 A universal summons to worship the one true God in the face of His approaching judgment.
Babylon the Great, Rome, has fallen (Jer 28:8), an anticipation of the dirge over Babylon in 18:1–19:4 (see Is 21:9). Rome has made the nations, peoples of the empire, subservient through drinking the wine of her fornication, the sensual, unholy eucharist of her idolatry and self-divinization. This wine is intoxicating and results in the wrath of man: corruption, anger, and murder, including the shedding of the blood of the saints (5:20).
The wrath of God (v. 10) shall be poured out like wine, full strength (unmixed, with no water to dilute it), to be drunk by those who compromise with the evil one. Like a smoldering hotpot, this cup is agonizing, the same bath of fire and brimstone (the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah, Gn 19:24) reserved for Satan, the beast, and the false prophet (19:20; 20:10; 21:8). Even the presence of God, the Lamb, and His good servants, the holy angels, is a torment (see the townspeople in Lk 8:37). And, as the refuse piles in the Valley of Hinnom (Gehenna) smoldered unceasingly outside Jerusalem, this agony continues forever and ever, an eternal contrast to the never-ending joy of the worship of God (9:8).
Christians, when persecuted, must exercise patience and faith, with labors and good works (v. 13)—the unity of faith and works. The alternative, eternal damnation, is too horrible (vv. 9–11).
14:14 The Son of Man, royal conqueror (golden crown) and judge (sharp sickle; see Mt 3:12), appears, seated on a cloud (see Mk 13:26), and reaps the harvest of the earth, the beginning of the final judgment (see Mt 13:24–30, 36–43; Mk 4:26–29).
14:18 The angel . . . from the altar with power over fire (see see also 1En 60:11–21) recalls 6:9; 8:3–5; and 11:1, 18. The prayers of the martyrs under the altar and the saints on earth for a hasty destruction of the destroyers are answered.
The trampling of the wicked who were gathered outside the city recalls the bloodshed (the crucifixion, Heb 13:12; the martyrdom of Stephen, Acts 7:58–60) that took place outside the walls of Jerusalem. The whole world is judged as the Jews would judge the Gentiles (Joel 4:2, 12; Zec 14:2–12; see also 1En 5:31). The absurdly large amount of blood (one thousand six hundred furlongs is about 184 miles) suggests the severity and completeness (1600 = 4 x 4 x 100) of God's judgment.
14:14-20 Two images of judgment, a grain harvest (vv. 14–16) and a grape harvest, complete with the treading of a winepress (vv. 17–20).
15:1 An introduction to the bowl plagues, the culmination of God’s judgment of the earth.
The victory celebration for those who refuse to submit to Antichrist, perhaps a hymn used in the liturgy of the early Church. In contrast to the idolatry of the beast, this hymn emphasizes the worthiness of the true God. The song of Moses and the Lamb (v. 3) is prefigured in the hymns of Ex 15:1–18 and Dt 32:1–43, where victory over the oppression of Pharaoh and the Egyptians is celebrated. The Jews incorporated these into the Sabbath liturgy, and the Church also sings them at various times of the year (for example, in Matins, and in the Vespers of Holy Saturday). The Church sings this song of the Lamb in baptism and at the Great Blessing of Water.
The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony is the heavenly prototype of the earthly “tabernacle of testimony” (Nm 17:7), containing the witness of God's covenant, the tablets of the Law brought down from Mt. Sinai by Moses (Ex 32:15)—which was itself the archetype of the temple of Jerusalem (see Ex 25:9, 40; Heb 8:5; 9:11; 13:10; Acts 7:44). Seven angels (v. 6) appear out of the temple in priestly vesture (Ezk 9:2; Dan 10:5; Heb 1:14; Rev 1:13; 19:14). They are given golden bowls (see the vessels used by the priests in the Jerusalem temple, 5:8; Ex 27:3; Nm 7) by one of the living creatures (v. 7; see 4:6). God's judgment is meted out within the framework of this apocalyptic liturgical theophany.
The temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God (see Is 6:4; Ezek 10:3, 4), so that no one was able to enter the temple (see Ex 40:29, where Moses was unable to enter the tabernacle; and 3Kg 8:10, 11 where the priests were unable to enter the temple for the same reason). None may enter to intercede for the earth or to divert the coming catastrophe of God's sworn judgment.
Although they are quite similar, the trumpet plagues are partial, a warning and call to repentance, whereas the bowl judgments are final and total. The difference is that dreadful step from the “beginning of sorrows” to final judgment. This chapter, like ch. 15, contains many elements foreshadowed in Joel 4:9–17, which is read in the Church on the Wednesday before Great Lent.

The loud voice from the celestial temple is presumably God's voice. Pour out is a liturgical term (Lv 4:7, 18, 25, et. al.) referring to the blood and the wine poured out with the offering of the daily sacrifice and the Feast of Dedication. On the Day of Atonement, blood was sprinkled seven times towards the inner veil, more was then smeared upon the horns of the altar, and the remainder was poured out at the altar's base. Here, the seven angelic priests pour out the bowls of God's wrath as a ritual answer to the cry of the martyrs (from under the altar) for vengeance (see Ps 68:25; Jer 10:21; Zep 3:8).
16:2-4  The first bowl is poured out, and the mark of the beast breaks out on those who received it in foul and loathsome sores, like the sixth plague of Ex 9:8–11. The second (v. 3) and third (v. 4) bowls are like the first plague (Ex 7:20–21; see Rev 8:8–11).
This judgment becomes the occasion for a doxology to God from the angel of the waters, the element just affected by God's wrath (vv. 3, 4). In biblical thought, spiritual or angelic powers have charge of the physical realm; all elements of the material world have angelic guardians. In response, the altar itself (the voice of the martyrs? —see 6:9; 8:3–5; 9:13) proclaims that God's judgments are true and righteous (v. 7).

There is a parallel here with “the song of Moses” (15:3, 4). Indeed, there is a parallel here with the musical interlude in the Jerusalem temple liturgy between the preparation and the offering of the sacrificed lamb. It is their just due (v. 6) is literally “they are worthy [axios],” the antithesis of the worthiness of the Lamb sung about in 3:4; 5:9, 12. At the ordination of a deacon, priest, or bishop, the assembly sings “Axios” as an assent to the candidate's worthiness (see WSol 3:5).
The spiritually hardened followers of the beast cannot repent, but only blaspheme at the judgments of God. In contrast to Dan 3:22–24, 46–50, where the holy youths who refuse to worship Nebuchadnezzar's image are not even singed by the furnace's heat, here those who worship the beast and its image are scorched with great heat (v. 9).
The plague of darkness is similar to the ninth Egyptian plague (Ex 10:21–29). Here the throne is Rome (in contrast to 2:13), and the kingdom is the empire. Satan has shared his dominion with “the beast from the land,” the false prophet (13:2).
In 9:13–21 the Parthian Empire threatened the Roman Empire, as it had Israel. In this verse, the historical setting of ch. 9 is clarified: Rome will lose its natural defensive line (the Euphrates) and be punished by the kings from the east, the Parthians (see also 6:2; 17:12, 13). The OT miracles of crossing over a river on dry land (Ex 14:21, 22; Jos 3:17) are repeated (see also Is 11:15; Jer 28:36; Zec 10:11).
An allusion to the second Egyptian plague (Ex 7:26–8:11). The unclean spirits (see 1Ti 4:1; 1Jn 4:3) are like frogs.
Spirits of demons, performing signs are attested by our Lord (Mk 13:22; see also Acts 13:6; 2Th 2:9). The great day of God Almighty (6:17, foreshadowed in Joel 2:11; Zep 1:14; graphically described in 2Pt 3:12) is the eschatological Day of the Lord.
In a parenthetical comment, we are told that this Day of the Lord will see Him coming unexpectedly as a thief in the night (see 3:3; Mt 24:42–44; 1Th 5:2). Like the wise virgins who stand in readiness for the bridegroom who comes at midnight, the Lord exhorts His blessed faithful here to remain vigilant as well. It is said that the officer on duty at the Jerusalem temple was to see that his night guards kept awake during their watch. If they were caught asleep, they were beaten. If caught a second time, they were stripped of their garments, their vesture, then and there (see Mk 14:51). A Christian's garment is his white baptismal robe, “the garment of righteousness,” the putting on of Christ.
Decisive battles in Israel's history were fought in the strategic pass near Megiddo (see 4Kg 9:27). Armageddon—the word is found only here in Scripture—means “the hill of Megiddo”; the nearest hill to Megiddo is Mt. Carmel, where Elijah confronted the prophets of Baal (3Kg 18:19–40). In the final conflict at Armageddon, evil spirits (vv. 13, 14) lead apostate mankind against God. This battle is more fully recorded in 20:7–10, foreshadowed in Ezk 39 and Joel 4.
The last bowl is a conclusive act of judgment; a loud voice from God's throne declares, “It is done!” (repeated at 21:6; see Jn 19:30). Cosmic signs of God's presence are manifest—evoking Mt. Sinai and other theophanies (see 4:5; 8:5; 11:10), quite similar to those of the last trumpet (11:19)—especially great earthquakes, causing worldwide destruction (v. 20). Yet even 75-pound (the equivalent of one talent) hailstones (v. 21) fail to induce repentance. The great city (v. 19) is probably Jerusalem (see 11:8) in that Rome is mentioned separately as great Babylon.
The great harlot is Rome, the empire with its claims of divinity, sovereignty, and eternity (see vv. 9, 18), opposed to God and the Church: symbolic of all evil rule. In the Bible, harlotry frequently symbolizes apostasy and idolatry (see Is 1:21; 23:15; Jer 13:25–27; Ezek 16; Hos 4:12; Nah 3:4). The many waters on which the harlot is seated portray both the waters of Babylon—the canals and tributaries of the Euphrates (Ps 136:1; Jer 28:12, 13)—and the waters of Rome, the seas surrounding Italy. They symbolize the nations who submit to the harlot's rule (v. 15).
Fornication, committed by the kings of the earth with this harlot, is a metaphor for infidelity to the Lord (Jer 3:1–5; Ezek 23; Hos 2). The vassal kingdoms within the Roman Empire have accepted the cults of Rome and her emperors and have solidified their obeisance with political and economic obligations—and have fallen into moral decadence. The wine of this fornication has made the inhabitants of the earth to become drunk, seduced and stupefied by a hideous eucharist of death, focused on the persecution and martyrdom of Christians (v. 6; see Jer 28:7).
17:3 The woman's position on the beast shows the Roman system supported by the Antichrist-emperor. The names of blasphemy may be the divine titles assumed by the emperors.
The harlot is arrayed in abominable luxury: purple (an extremely expensive and rare dye from the murex shellfish of Phoenicia), scarlet, gold, precious stones, and pearls. Contrast this with the pure linen in which the bride is arrayed in 21:2. The harlot's cup contains the spiritual pollutions by which she contaminates humanity. In Jer 28:7, Babylon is pictured as a golden cup in the hand of the Lord which makes all the earth madly intoxicated.
Roman law stated harlots must wear headbands exhibiting their name. This great harlot bears the mysterious name of BABYLON . . . MOTHER OF HARLOTS. For the late-first-century Christians, Babylon was incarnate in Rome (see 1Pt 5:13), but it is primarily a spiritual reality, a “mystery,” transcending concrete manifestations. For Babylon has always stood for rebellion against God (see Gn 11): self-exaltation and idolatry. She is the mother OF THE ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH (lit., “detestable things”), the prostitution of God's creation. And she finds her life in a perverse eucharist, the death of those united with Life Incarnate.
The beast that was, and is not, and yet is represents the Roman Empire or the hellish Antichrist, who seems to have been destroyed only to resurrect, in imitation of the true Christ. The seven mountains or hills (v. 9) was a well-known description of Rome herself. Numerous interpretations have been given of these verses. A likely historical explanation is that the beast is Nero, who was expected to return to life after he died; the five who have fallen (v. 10) are Augustus through Nero; Vespasian is the one who is; and the beast who is himself also the eighth (v. 11) is Domitian, seen as Nero revived. But, again, the reality seems to be transcendent as well. Certainly, at least, the eighth—the number eight signifying complete abundance—is a type of the final Antichrist.
The ten kings may be symbolic of all the nations allied with Antichrist in his war against the Church. They completely give themselves over to the beast, but the authority they receive is of very short duration (symbolically, one hour). Though they join the beast in his persecution fury, ultimately Christ and his faithful triumph (19:11–21). As the seal on the eucharistic bread, from which is taken the mystical “Lamb” (v. 14), reads: “Jesus Christ Victor.”
The peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues represent the diversity of the Roman Empire (see v. 18). Reaping what she sows, Rome will be conquered as she has conquered. That the ten horns (vassal kings) and the beast (false prophet) will rise up against the harlot (v. 16) indicates the self-destructiveness of evil (see Ezek 23:11–35). The Antichrist proves himself (in contrast to the true Christ, v. 14) the traitor of traitors. Rome will be stripped, devoured, and burned (see Lev 21:9, where death by fire is prescribed for a harlot who is the daughter of a priest).
As God is light (4:3; Ps 103:2; 1Ti 6:16), so the angel coming down from heaven exudes a lingering radiance (see Moses in Ex 34:29–35).
This dirge over fallen Babylon is inspired by Is 13:19–22; 34:11–15, where the prophet speaks of the total destruction of the enemies of God's people. The city is a haunt of demonic, foul, and hateful spirits.
18:4-8 God's people are called to come out of her so as not to partake of her punishment, destruction, and devastation (see Nm 33:51–56; Is 52:11; Jer 27:8; 28:6, 46). Separation from this world is spiritual, not necessarily a physical move but a refusal to participate in the works of darkness (2Co 6:14–18). As Babylon (Rome) has proclaimed her own sovereign greatness, sitting as queen (v. 7), so her sins have reached to heaven (v. 5), recalling the Tower of Babel (Gn 11:4), a symbol of excessive arrogance. God's judgment will be swift, in one day (v. 8). In Hebrew day denotes not so much a chronological period as a completed act.
The kings of the earth who committed fornication will mourn (but from a distance), stunned by the judgment of Rome and the specter of their own economic loss, when they see her devastation (see Ps 75:13; Nah 3:4–7). What happened to Sodom (Gn 19:28) and Edom (Is 34:6–10) is befalling Rome.
Like the political leaders (vv. 9, 10), the economic leaders, the merchants, stand astonished at Rome's sudden destruction and their own loss of revenues. Verses 11–13 list luxury items in Rome's flow of trade (see Ezk 27:12–25).

It was said by the rabbis that “ten measures of wealth came down into the world; Rome received nine and all the world received one.” These goods together with their profit made Rome queen (v. 7) of the world. While worldly possessions are not in themselves good or bad, their misuse leads to sin, complacency, and a fatal lack of poverty of spirit (see 3:17–20). Therefore, excessive wealth easily conflicts with authentic Christian discipleship (see Mt 6:24). The last item in this list, bodies and souls (v. 13), refers to slaves sold at auction as human livestock for domestic service, prostitution, and gladiatorial amusements.
18:20 The opposite reaction (see vv. 9–19) in heaven: Justice has prevailed!
The great millstone thrown into the sea recalls Babylon's disasters and annihilation (Jer 28:59, 60; Nah 3:4–7). Her spell of idolatry, vice, and murder bound the whole civilized world with a bewitching belief that she was immortal and secure. But as her influence was total, so her destruction is total. No signs of life are seen or heard; an eerie silence pervades. In her was found the blood of prophets and saints (v. 24) here alludes directly to the massacres of Christians under such as Nero and Domitian. However, Babylon as the center of opposition to God and self-deification of creation continues beyond the immediate incarnation to be seen in the Roman Empire.
In contrast to the song of doom for Babylon (ch. 18), the scene returns to the heavenly liturgy with an outburst of celestial triumph. Alleluia, appearing in the NT only here (vv. 1, 3, 4, 6), is from the Hebrew for “Praise the Lord.” It was used in the Great Hallel (Praise) of the Jerusalem temple liturgy (Ps 104–106; 110–117; 134–135; 145–150) and in the synagogue as a response by the people (see Tb 13:18; 3Mc 7:13). Within Christendom, the Alleluia has been a part of liturgical and private prayers since earliest times.
The judgments of God are righteous, in contrast to the slander of the “accuser of the brethren” (2:9; 12:10), which resulted in persecution of Christians.
19:3-5  Her (the harlot, Rome) smoke rises up forever and ever (contrast 4:9; 15:7), in contrast to the ascent of incense (5:8; 8:4) in eternal heavenly worship. The Church on earth is united with this liturgy in heaven; a deacon calls from the altar, as it were, for all to praise our God (v. 5).
For the use of the term Omnipotent (Gr. pantokrator), see 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7, 14; 19:15; 21:22, as well as Hos 12:6; Am 4:13. It is used in the NT only in Revelation and once in 2Co 6:18, in a quote from the OT. The word means “almighty, all-powerful.”
At the Passover, deliverance from Egypt—the “Babylon” of Moses’ day—was united with the theme of Israel's betrothal to the Lord (for further nuptial imagery, see Song of Songs; Hos 2:19; Rom 7:1–6). For marriage is a symbol of the union of God with His people (see Is 54:1–8; Ezek 16:7–14; Hos 2:1–23), of Christ with His Church (Mt 22:1–14; 2 Cor 11:2; Eph 5:22–32). This union is fulfilled in the rest of Revelation: Jesus, the Passover Lamb (1 Cor 5:7) whose death has ransomed the New Israel, is also the divine Bridegroom (Mt 22:2; 25:1–13).

A wedding in the Middle East consisted of two parts: the betrothal and the wedding proper. The wedding itself began with the procession of the groom to the bride's home and concluded with the procession of all back to the bridegroom's home for the wedding supper. By analogy, the Church is now betrothed to Christ by faith. She awaits the coming of the Bridegroom for the marriage supper of the Lamb (v. 9), the final eschatological union of Christ and His Church.

The recompense to the faithful for having remained steadfast and pure under persecution (see Mt 5:12; 1 Pt 4:13) is to be clothed with fine linen, clean and bright (v. 8; see 3:4, 5; 7:14)—the clothes of grace, holiness, and incorruption—and to participate in this mystical supper both as guest (v. 9) and as bride (in apocalyptic literature it is not uncommon to find mixed images). This supper has already begun in the Eucharist, a foretaste of the Kingdom (see Mt 26:29; Lk 13:29; 22:30). The Orthodox sing on Pascha (Easter): “Shine, shine, O New Jerusalem; the glory of the Lord has shone on you. . . . Grant that we may evermore perfectly partake of You in the never-ending Day of Your Kingdom.”
19:10 Orthodoxy makes a strict distinction between the veneration proper to saints and angels (Gr. doulia) and the worship (Gr. latria) due to God alone (see 22:8, 9).
Heaven is opened: A standard revelatory formula (4:1; Ezk 1:1; Mt 3:16; Jn 1:51; Acts 7:57). Christ is presented as the Warrior-Messiah, a triumphant King. In Semitic thought, name expressed being. Some of the names of the rider are understandable: Faithful and True (see 3:13), Word of God (v. 13; see Jn 1:1, 14), KING OF KINGS (v. 16; see 17:14) AND LORD OF LORDS (see Dt 10:17; 1Ti 6:15). But He also has a secret name only He can understand (v. 12; see 2:17; Dan 2:47), for He is God, and only God can comprehend God (Jn 1:18).
His robe dipped in blood (see Gn 49:11; Is 63:1–6) unites Christ's sacrifice on the Cross, granting forgiveness of sin and fulfilling all righteousness, with His making war “in righteousness” (v. 11), judging sin (see the reaping of the harvest of 14:14–20; Ps 44:3–7; WSol 18:15, 16; Jn 12:31).
19:14 The armies in heaven, clothed in fine linen are likely the 144,000 faithful (14:4) who, having survived the great tribulation in purity, have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb (7:14).
The sharp sword from the mouth is judgment, the prophetic word fulfilled (1:16; 2:12; 11:6; Is 11:4); the rod of iron (2:27; 12:5; Ps 2:9) is rule. He treads the winepress, executing God's wrath on earth (14:19, 20; Is 63:3; Lam 1:15).
A graphic portrayal of the triumph of Christ over Antichrist, forming a macabre contrast with the wedding supper of the Lamb of God (v. 9; 2:17; 3:20). The destruction is total (see Is 34:1–7; Ezek 39:17–20; Mt 24:28).
Worldly authority and worldly religion are overthrown. The first beast (false deity) and the second beast (false prophet) of 13:11–15 are captured and cast alive into the lake of fire, hell. Hell is pictured in Gehenna, the noxious, smoldering garbage dump just outside Jerusalem in the Valley of Hinnom. In the past, pagan rituals, including child sacrifice, had occurred in this valley. It came to be associated with the abode of the wicked dead, either awaiting final judgment or actually experiencing eternal torment (see Mt 18:9). Brimstone, a yellow sulphurous substance that burns easily, exuding a foul odor, is found in the Dead Sea region. The rest were killed (v. 21) so as to await the final judgment.
The bottomless pit (abyss) is the great nether regions (Ps 87:7) where the disobedient are confined awaiting final judgment. The demons fear it (see Lk 8:31; Jude 6). It is reached through a chasm, the key to which is in the hand of the angel. The great chain binds Satan (Mk 5:3).
Though most did not, a few early Fathers and writers believed in a literal thousand year binding of Satan and reign of Christ and the saints on earth (vv. 2–7). The Church, however, authoritatively rejected this teaching (called chiliasm) at the Second Ecumenical Council. In apocalyptic literature, numbers have symbolic significance. “Thousand” is often used in the Scriptures to denote a long period of time, a great quantity, completion, perfection, thoroughness (Job 9:3; 2Pt 3:8). Here, a thousand years (vv. 2–7) is interpreted as the Church age, when Jesus reigns on earth in those who believe. It is that era between the first and second comings of Christ, also called the “last times,” when Satan's effectiveness at deceit is restricted through the Cross and Resurrection of Christ, and the saints share in Christ's earthly reign through the Church. For these persecuted Christians threatened by martyrdom, this is a consoling hope.
The devil is thrown into the pit, which is shut and sealed for a thousand years—meaning a long period of time—to allow the Church to be planted, to grow and to overcome, even in times of persecution and trial. The word “millennium” is synonymous with thousand years, and carries with it no connotations of peace and prosperity. The Bible teaches that Satan was bound at the completion of Christ's saving work (Mt 12:28, 29; Lk 10:17, 18; Jn 12:31, 32; Col 2:15). He is not totally inactive (Acts 5:3; 1Co 5:5; Eph 6:11), but he cannot deceive the nations by keeping the gospel from them. At the close of the millennium or Church age, Satan will be released for a little while (vv. 7, 8).
Those who have died for their witness to Jesus are in heaven living and reigning with Him (5:9, 10; Mt 19:18; 2Ti 2:12) as royal priests (1:6; 5:9, 10; Is 61:6; 1Pt 2:9, 10) while the Church serves Him here on earth. The first resurrection (v. 6) is the heavenly life of souls who have died in Christ before His Second Coming. Those not in Christ who die are in Hades awaiting the resurrection of the body at His coming. For the righteous saints with Christ, the second death has no power (v. 6). These righteous spirits (Heb 12:23) await only the reuniting of soul and body after the final judgment, when all things are made new (21:1). Hell or Hades (Sheol), where sinners' souls are separated from their bodies, will give up its dead to Gehenna (vv. 13, 14), the lake of fire that burns with sulphur (21:8), which is eternal damnation (Mt 25:41). Sinners will be excluded from the blessedness of the age to come. Hell cannot harm the victorious in Christ (2:11).
The lengthy millennial period of Satan's binding and the saints' heavenly reign (vv. 1–6) is concluded by the release of Satan and the final battle of history (probably the same as that of 16:12–16; 19:14–21). Gog and Magog (v. 8; see Ezek 38; 39) are nations hostile to God's people, gathered for one final assault directed against the beloved city (v. 9), Jerusalem as the Church. As Elijah called down fire . . . out of heaven on his persecutors (4Kg 1:10–12), so here God sends a consuming fire (see Gn 19:24; 3Kg 18:38; Ezek 38:22; 39:6). The devil joins the beast and the false prophet in the lake of fire, the second death of eternal damnation, and is no longer a threat to the world.
20:11 God executes judgment from the great white throne (see Dan 7:9; see also 1En 18:8). The One who sits on the throne in Revelation is God the Father (4:2–9; 5:1, 7, 13; 6:16; 7:10; etc.). However, in the rest of the NT Christ is the judge on the throne (Mt 25:31–46; Jn 5:22; Acts 10:42; 17:31; 2Co 5:10). John is about to show their unity: “the throne of God and of the Lamb” (22:1). Earth and heaven flee away (Mt 24:35; 2Pt 3:10–13) in terror, a cosmic sign of the great Day of the Lord and the coming of the new heaven and earth (21:1).
Standing before God at His throne at the final judgment, the dead are confronted with their works. The books of judgment (Dan 7:10) contain a record of men's deeds; their own works will judge them (Ps 61:13; Jer 17:6). This judging of believers' works is a common NT theme (Mt 16:27; Rom 2:6; 2Co 5:10; 1Pt 1:17; see also the Anaphora of the Liturgy of St. Basil and the hymns for the Sunday of the Last Judgment). In contrast is the Book of Life. It contains the names of all saved by grace (see Ex 32:32; Is 4:3; Dan 12:1, 2)—not that they have no works, but that God's mercy is far greater in comparison. The Orthodox liturgy thus petitions God for a “good account before the dread judgment seat of Christ.”
The sea, Death, and Hades—the powers that held men captive—show all the dead are judged. That Christ has the keys to death and Hades (1:18) expresses not His power to put men to death, but His trampling of death by death. He is victorious over death. The sea as a symbol of turbulence, chaos, and the unknown will be no more (21:1). Death, the “last enemy that will be destroyed” (1Co 15:26), and Hades, the intermediate state between death and resurrection, will end. They are cast into hell, the lake of fire (vv. 14, 15), along with all who reject the grace of God.
21:1 The NT teaching that the present world will pass away (see Mt 5:18; Mk 13:31; 1Co 7:31; 2Pt 3:10–13; 1Jn 2:17) does not mean the present creation will be utterly destroyed. It will be totally renewed (5:9; 21:5; Is 65:17–25; Rom 8:19–22; 2Co 5:17; 2Pt 3:13): freed from corruption, purified, transfigured, glorified. The first cosmos will pass away.
The holy city, New Jerusalem is the city built by God (Heb 11:10). It is the perfected Church, the bride ready for her husband, Christ, the abode of the righteous eternally. The OT prophesied a restored and exalted Jerusalem (Is 2:1–4; 54:11–15; 60:1–22; 62:1–12; 65:17–25; Ezek 40–48).
The OT also prophesied that God would dwell with His people. The Immanuel prophecy (Is 7:14; see also Ps 45:5–8) is fulfilled in the Incarnation (Jn 1:14; 17:22), but comes to completion in the messianic age, when God will fully dwell (lit., “in-tent”) with His people, restoring the paradise of old (Gn 2; Lv 26:11, 12; Ezk 37:26, 27; Jer 38:33; 2Co 6:16). Therefore joy displaces sorrows and sufferings, a great consolation for persecuted believers.
The water of life ("living water," Jn 4:10–14; 7:37–39, or "living fountains of waters," Rev 7:17) is the grace of the Holy Spirit, bestowed along with baptism in chrismation. Only the one who thirsts will be given the water forever (v. 6). And, repeating the concluding exhortation of each of the seven letters (chs. 2; 3), only those who overcome (v. 7), who persist in their allegiance to God, inherit, becoming permanent sons of God. Those who fall away through cowardice or unbelief face instead the lake of fire (v. 8). They lose God's inheritance, receiving instead the damning recompense of sin and death (see 20:15; 22:15), along with Satan, the beast, the false prophet, Death, and Hades.
In stark contrast to the harlot arrayed in gaudy finery (17:3), the messianic bride comes from God and so reflects God's splendor.
Like Ezekiel's, John's vantage point is a high mountain (Ezk 40:2); the perfected Church he sees resembles Ezekiel's new temple (Ezk 40–42). The New Jerusalem descends out of heaven from God, for God Himself completes the reunion of heaven and earth. She completes and fulfills the old Jerusalem just as the new covenant fulfills the old.
The splendor described is fitting for the place where God will dwell with His people (vv. 3, 7). As the breastplate of the high priest was adorned with twelve jewels corresponding to the twelve tribes (Ex 28:15–21), so the Church is founded on the twelve precious foundation stones of the apostles (v. 14): Heaven is fundamentally priestly. All who are espoused to Christ, who feast at the wedding supper, and who dwell in the Holy City, are members of the royal priesthood (1:6; 5:10; 20:6; 1Pt 2:9).
As in Ezekiel's vision, the angel measures the city (Ezk 40–42): a colossal cube (12 x 1,000 stadia = 1,500 miles square), recalling the shape of the holy of holies (3 Kg 6:19, 20; Ezk 41:4) and symbolic of its perfection: the multiples of 12 symbolize the people of God, and 1000 shows its greatness. The precious stones portray its glory. As the priests in the Jerusalem temple walked on pavements of gold (3 Kg 6:29), so the new, royal priesthood will walk on a street of pure gold (v. 21).
There is no temple in the old sense in the New Jerusalem (Jn 4:21). Its temple is the presence of God in all (v. 22; 1Co 15:28; Col 3:11; 1Pt 2:4–10). The Church itself is the temple.
The OT prophecies concerning the glorification of Jerusalem are fulfilled in the eternal Kingdom (see Is 60). Created light is unnecessary. For the everlasting Uncreated Light will illumine all (Ps 35:10) with true and clear vision to see things as they really are. The true Light, the Light of the world (Jn 8:12), was incarnate (Jn 1:9), and even while on earth He shone with Uncreated Light (Mk 9:2–8; 2Pt 1:16–18). As prophesied, all the earth will stream to the Holy City to honor it (Is 55:5; Jer 16:19–21; Tb 13:13; see also 1En 10:21; 48:4, 5)—it has no enemies—but only the pure will live within it (Mt 5:8).
The river of water of life manifests the Giver of Life, the Holy Spirit (see 21:6; also Ezk 47:1–12; Zec 14:8; see also 2En 8:5). The OT Feast of Tabernacles, the festival of the Messianic Kingdom, emphasized light and water. As in his Gospel, so here John shows these themes are fulfilled by Christ and His Church. Christ is the Light of the World (21:23–26; 22:5 with Jn 8:12); the Holy Spirit is the Water of Life (22:1, 2; 21:6 with Jn 7:37–39). The Church is the Messianic Kingdom.

God the Father and the Lamb, the Son incarnate, share one throne, for they are consubstantial and one worship is offered them. With the Spirit proceeding from the throne, the entire Trinity is here.
The tree of life, a symbol of Christ Himself, gives immortality. It fulfills the tree of life in Paradise (Gn 3:22) and the other tree of life, the Cross of the Savior, the tree of obedience (1Pt 2:24), a tree of curse (Gal 3:13). But there is no more curse (v. 3) in the Holy City: a reversal of the curse of Gn 3:16–19. The fruits and leaves of the tree are completely and universally therapeutic, reversing the effects of the fruit of the tree of disobedience (Gn 3:6).
The face of God is that of the glorified Christ (see Jn 14:9; 1Jn 3:2). The face which cannot be seen is the hidden essence of God (Jn 1:18; 1Ti 6:16). Normally, even to see His energy is not possible in this life (Ex 33:20–23; Mt 5:8; Jn 1:18; 1Co 13:12; Heb 12:14; 1Jn 3:2). But in the age to come the faithful, who bear Jesus' name . . . on their foreheads, may see Him ceaselessly. In the OT only the high priest bore the unspeakable name of God on his forehead, and that he did externally, on a golden headband around his turban (Ex 28:31–33; see Ezk 9:4–6; Rev 3:12; 7:3). In the NT, all who believe are granted His name.
The Lord God gives them light perfects the priestly blessing of Nm 6:23–26, a concluding benediction of the daily morning and evening sacrifices of the OT temple. When you have God's uncreated light, there can be no night (see 21:23; Is 60:19, 20).
Keeping the words . . . of this book refers to repentance, faithfulness, and steadfastness, no matter the circumstances of life. The “overcomers” are blessed.
John repeats his error of attempting to worship the angel (see 19:10). The fact is, even mature Christians and leaders sometimes err. But we press on to change and to continue with Christ. The command to John is, “Worship God” (v. 9). The angel affirms John is a brother of the prophets (v. 9).
The command not to seal the words of the prophecy is a reversal of 10:4 and Dan 8:26; 12:4, 9. For the time is now, the message is for the contemporary communities John is addressing. Some are unable to repent: those who still persist in their wickedness (see Is 6:9, 10; Ezk 3:27; Dan 12:10; Mk 4:12); the righteous are encouraged to be steadfast.
22:12, 13  For the divine titles, see notes on 1:8 (see also 1:17; 2:8; 21:6; Is 41:4; 43:10; 44:6; 48:12). Divine recompense (Is 40:10; Jer 17:6) will be visited on the earth soon (v. 12).
A clear distinction is drawn between the eternal state of the blessed and that of the damned (see 21:8). Many texts read “wash their robes” (see 3:4; 7:14; 16:15) rather than do His commandments. The point is the same: it is the pure in Christ who enter the Kingdom. Dogs (v. 15) refers to the impure (Dt 23:18, 19; Php 3:2; 2Pt 2:22).
Jesus confirms this is His message. It fulfills the intent of OT prophecy, for He Himself is the prophesied Messiah.
A liturgical dialogue, a reflection of eucharistic theology. The Church as bound to God, the bride in union with the Holy Spirit, invites Christ to “Come!” We plead for His return (see His answer in v. 20). Those who desire God (21:6; Ps 41:2, 3; 63:1; Is 26:8, 9; Jn 6:35; 7:37) but who are not yet overcoming the world are in turn invited to come to Christ.
This severe warning refers to the Book of Revelation, not to the Bible as a whole, and admonishes those in the communities addressed not to distort its message. To do so is to threaten one's very salvation (see Dt 4:2; 12:32; Gal 1:8, 9).
22:20 A liturgical benediction to the book. The bride, recognizing the voice of her Beloved as He testifies to His advent, runs “out to meet Him” (Mt 25:6) and in her joy proclaims,

Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus! This echoes maranatha (“O Lord, come!” in 1Co 16:22), which was part of the eucharistic dialogue of the early Church.
An appropriate final benediction, considering the book was to be read aloud in all seven churches.
Prologue  This introduction was written by the grandson of Jesus ben (son of) Sirach, who translated his grandfather's book from the original Hebrew to Greek in about 132 BC, some fifty years after the book was written. Note how God's gift of wisdom is closely connected with the reading and learning of the Holy Scriptures.
In the first-century Greek world, there was a general pattern by which all letters were begun: name of sender(s), the addressee(s), the greeting itself. As with most of Paul’s epistles, this pattern is followed here but Christianized.
Give thanks in NT Greek is eucharisto, from which we get our English word “Eucharist.” A spirit of thanksgiving constantly pervades the prayers of Paul, as here when he specifically remembers the Christians in Thessalonica.
Remembering and without ceasing describe effective prayer (see 2:13; 5:16–18).

Faith, hope, and love are three Christian virtues Paul links together in other letters (1Co 13:13; Col 1:4, 5). These virtues are connected to actions: faith works, love labors, hope produces patience, showing that salvation goes beyond attitudes to action.
Followers (lit. “imitators”) of Christ also imitate spiritual leaders—pastors, bishops, in this case the apostles—even in their suffering. “Let [others] be instructed by you, at least by your deeds. With their wrath you be mild, with their boastful speech you be humble-minded, with their abuse you offer prayers, with their deceit you be firm in faith, with their cruelty you be gentle, not eager to imitate them” (IgnAnt). The joy of the Holy Spirit is not an easy emotional high, but comes with the struggle proper to spiritual life, including persevering through affliction. The one who suffers is the one who is comforted.
What a tribute to the Thessalonian believers. People everywhere were speaking of them!
The early Christians expected Christ to return in their lifetime. This hope helped purge their lives of sin.
Paul defends his apostolic work, claiming he has served with courage (vv. 1–2), humility (vv. 3–6), love (vv. 7, 8), financial integrity (v. 9), and godly authority (vv. 10–12). Following this example, the Thessalonians can manifest similar holiness amidst hostility (vv. 13–16).
Christians are repeatedly challenged in the NT to be bold in confessing Christ before others (see Acts 4:29–31; Rom 1:16).
Paul has been accused of seeking his own glory, but he knows God does not share His glory with any other (Is 48:11). As His servants, we must step outside the circle of world-pleasers and into the arena of pleasing God, whatever the cost.
Spreading the gospel means putting our lives on the line for those we seek to reach, as a mother sacrifices herself for her children. Thus, the holy martyrs gave their lives with great joy for Christ and His Church.
Note the three verbs Paul uses to describe his apostolic preaching to the Thessalonians: (1) exhorted, which can also mean encouraged; (2) comforted; and (3) charged or implored. These elements are just as important for preaching today!
While the persecution in Thessalonica comes primarily from Greeks, Paul, a Jew, is frank concerning his countrymen of that day who reject their Messiah, noting that they (1) killed ... the Lord Jesus (v. 15), (2) killed their own prophets, (3) persecuted the apostles, (4) do not please God, and (5) act with hostility to all men. This is a strong indictment. But Paul’s love for the Jews never wavers. He wishes himself to be cursed if that could cause his fellow Jews to turn to Christ for salvation (Rom 9:3; 10:1).
Though unable to prevail against the Church (Mt 16:18) or overcome the faithful (Eph 6:11–13; Rev 12:11), the enemy at times is permitted to hinder faithful Christians. It is here that we enact God’s promise: “Resist the devil and he will flee from you” (Jam 4:7).
This passage shows that all the trials and disappointments of the Christian life and ministry are worthwhile.
As healthy as the Thessalonian church is, Paul takes nothing for granted. Even well-grounded, deeply committed Christians need constant encouragement, instruction, and prayer.
Minister is from the Greek diakonon, from which we get “deacon.” Fellow laborer is Greek synergon, from which we get “synergy.” As ministers, we not only represent God, we work together with Him and our fellow Christians.
Always and remembrance probably speak of prayer life.
Paul’s goal here is for all Christians.
Holiness includes sexual purity (vv. 3–8), mutual love (vv. 9, 10), and honest labor (vv. 11, 12). As for knowing God’s will, this passage comes through in brilliant simplicity. God’s will is our sanctification (v. 3), our being set apart to the Lord as His special possession. We are being sanctified as we walk with Him in faith and obedience.
His own vessel speaks of the entire human being (Rom 9:20–23; 2Co 4:7; 2Ti 2:20, 21)—probably one’s own self, perhaps one’s wife (or husband). In either case one’s vessel must be possessed with purity, self-control, and chastity.
The bedrock practicality of the Scriptures: In Paul’s time and ours, we are to live quietly, mind our own business, and work hard.
One of the clearest NT passages on the Second Coming of Christ. The first-century document, The Didache, lists three signs that will mark the return of the Lord: (1) “the sign spread out in the heavens”—Christ and His hosts; (2) “the sign of the trumpet”; and (3) “the resurrection of the dead.” For the righteous, the return of Christ is a comfort (v. 18), not a threat.
The Thessalonian Christians had been speculating about the return of the Lord and making their own predictions. Paul tells them, you have no need (v. 1) for that kind of information (indeed, it is not available!). Does a thief in the night (v. 2) announce his coming? The disciples had gotten the same kind of answers to their questions on the Second Coming from Christ Himself (Mt 24:36; Acts 1:6, 7). And suppose we know the end; what is this to us? Christians are called not to set dates but to make themselves ready to meet the Lord by being watchful and sober (v. 6). Our place is to be ceaselessly aware of the primacy of God’s Kingdom and to have full control over our spiritual faculties.
The requirements of harmonious life in community include the honoring of sacramental leadership (vv. 12–14), pursuit of good works (v. 15), continual prayer and thanksgiving in worship (vv. 16–18), and proper regard for the prophetic gift and spiritual discernment (vv. 19–22).

The Greek term for over you has a liturgical connotation. It refers to the leader of the congregation in the eucharistic assembly. To recognize is a weaker translation of “to know” (see 4:5). In a healthy church, the people recognize their pastor as their leader in Christ and willingly follow his admonitions.
When is it proper to return evil for evil? From the Sermon on the Mount (Mt 5:44) to the end of the NT, the answer is, “Never.”

In Paul’s writings, words such as rejoice, always (v. 16), without ceasing or “constantly” (v. 17), and give thanks (v. 18) refer primarily to prayer. The spiritual Fathers of the Church teach that unceasing prayer is a proper goal, for spiritual growth comes through such discipline. For centuries, Christian people have used the “Jesus Prayer” as a way to pray unceasingly from the heart: “O Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy on me, a sinner.”
The Holy Spirit is to be actively present in the life of the Church. But there is constant need of discernment and testing so as to avoid being misled (see 1Co 12–14).
Note the liturgical overtones with regard to the corporate meetings. There is (1) the benediction (v. 23), (2) intercessory prayer (v. 25), (3) the kiss of peace (v. 26), and (4) the public reading of the Scriptures (v. 27). The practice of a holy kiss (v. 26) very early became a part of the worship liturgy (see Rom 16:16; 1Co 16:20; 2Co 13:12; 1Pt 5:14). Just prior to Communion, the faithful would exchange the kiss of peace, on one cheek and then the other, to show their reconciliation in Christ. Thus, Christ is in our midst and ever shall be!
The Bible is to be read aloud during corporate worship.
This passage on God’s judgment teaches that (1) suffering is redemptive for the Christian (v. 5); (2) God promises to return tribulation to our enemies (vv. 6, 8); (3) punishment of the wicked is everlasting (v. 9); and (4) God’s glory will be displayed in His saints (v. 10), for as Christ was transfigured, so will be His faithful (see Mt 13:43; Col 3:4).

Why does God reveal His dread judgment and His glory to us? To help us toward righteousness. “If the fear of an earthly king withdraws us from so many evils, how much more the fear of the King Eternal!” (JohnChr). How we bear up under unjust persecution now is manifest evidence (v. 5) of how we will stand at the final judgment.
1:11, 12 Some say Paul and James contradict each other, but here is the essence of James 2. Paul teaches that God’s calling and the work of faith are a unity through our cooperation with God’s power.
While we are warned against predicting the Day of the Lord (Mt 24:36; Acts 1:7; 1Th 5:1), there will be signs preceding His Coming. Paul instructs the Thessalonians concerning two such signs: (1) a general falling away (v. 3; apostasy) from Christ and the Church and (2) the revealing of the man of sin, the son of perdition (v. 3), who is the Antichrist of 1 and 2 John, similar to the Dragon and the Beast of Rev 13. This lawless one is described in the OT (Dan 7:25; 8:25; 11:36), mentioned by Christ (Mt 24:15), and discussed by Paul on his first visit to Thessalonica (v. 5). The devil incites divisions among people so they will readily receive the Antichrist when he comes. The man of sin is a counterfeit messiah with a counterfeit kingdom. He (1) exalts himself above God (v. 4), (2) performs deceptive miracles and wonders through satanic power (v. 9), (3) will fool the unrighteous into following him (vv. 10–12), and (4) will be removed from power by Christ Himself at His Second Coming (v. 8).

Paul instructs that when the world gets worse, Christians must not be distressed or deceived (vv. 11, 12), but rather persevere as good stewards (vv. 13–17).
In the NT we read of two types of traditions: (1) The tradition of men (Mt 15:1–9; Col 2:8) is soundly condemned. Jesus (quoting Is 29:13) describes this as “teaching as doctrines the commandments of men” (Mt 15:9). (2) The tradition of the apostles or “Holy Tradition,” by contrast, is to be preserved by the Church, for God is its source. Holy Tradition is that which Jesus taught to the apostles, and which they in turn taught the Church under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit in (a) their instructions as they visited the churches and (b) their writings. Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit we adhere to Holy Tradition as it is present in the apostles’ writings and as it is resident in the Church to which the truth is promised (Jn 16:13).
3:6 See 2:15.
A warning filled with great wisdom. While sin is burdensome, we can also grow tired and fatigued by doing good. Paul, as our spiritual director, cautions us not to cease or tire of good works.
Paul's authorship is emphasized here because of the fraudulent letters mentioned in 2:2.

The use of the word till does not imply that Joseph had marital relations with Mary after the Savior's birth. In the Bible, this word (sometimes translated “to”) is often used to express a situation that actually continues after the event mentioned (see 28:20; Gn 8:7; Dt 34:6; 2Kg 6:23). The witness of the entire Church throughout history is that Mary remained a virgin for life. Firstborn: See note on Lk 2:7.
Herod: See note on Lk 1:5. The wise men, or magi, who come from the East (most likely Persia), were the scholars of their time. In the OT, Balaam (Nm 23; 24) was one of their predecessors, a Gentile who anticipated the Messiah. These foreigners prefigure the Church, in which membership is determined by faith and not by ethnic lineage.
3:10  See note at 3:8. Fire here refers to divine judgment (see Is 33:11; 66:24; Ezek 38:22; 39:6; 2Th 1:6–9). See also fire in v. 11.
Christ's first word, like that of John the Baptist, is “Repent.” (See note on 3:1–3.)

The kingdom of heaven is present wherever Christ is.
Righteousness that leads to salvation must exceed that of the Pharisees because theirs was an outward, works-based righteousness. The righteousness of salvation is the communion of the heart, soul, mind, and body in Jesus Christ. (See notes on Rom 1:17; 3:26.)
This imagery is not to be taken literally, but refers to decisive action to avoid sin and to continue in purity. (See note for 18:8.)
See note on Lk 6:46–49.
See note at Lk 12:53. To carry his cross, a true disciple must be ready, if necessary, to sacrifice even family relationships.
12:34  Brood of vipers: See note on 3:7. Brood means “offspring.”
After so many signs, the Pharisees show their wickedness by demanding yet another. Jesus does not cater to those who demand a sign out of wicked intent. The only sign to them will be His Passion and Resurrection. (See note at Lk. 23:8, 9.)
See note at Lk 4:22–27.
13:55  Brothers: See note at 12:46–50.
See note at Mk 6:17–29. The Beheading of St. John the Baptist is remembered in the Church on August 29 with a day of fasting. As part of God's plan of salvation, John's martyrdom allowed the coming of the Messiah to be announced to the souls in Hades, for John was the forerunner of Christ there as well as on earth. At Matins on this day we sing, “Your tongue which constantly speaks of God has preceded Christ into death, and is sent to preach Him to those in Hades.”

St. John is further remembered for his obedience to the Law in general, and as a defender of marriage in particular, in condemning Herod's unlawful marriage to his brother's wife (vv. 3, 4). St. John's obedience to God was one that preferred death over compromise. At Vespers on this day, we sing, “When your head was cut off, you revealed to us the Law of God, abolishing man's disobedience to the Law.”
16:4  Adulterous generation: See note on 12:39. Jesus refuses to prove Himself in a spectacular way, for a sign is never given to those whose motive is to test God. See also 4:5–7. The sign of the prophet Jonah is a veiled prediction of Christ's death and Resurrection (12:40), the ultimate sign that Jesus is the Christ.
Little ones: See note for v. 6. Angels: St. John Chrysostom teaches that not only the saints, but all people have guardian angels. However, the angels of humble people have greater boldness and greater honor before the face of God because of the humility of the person they guard. It is not the nature of God, but the weakness of men, that requires the angels' service.
The basis of the Pharisees' test is Dt 24:1–4. God's condescension, or allowance for human weakness, does not override the original principle of permanent monogamous marriage as revealed in Gn 1; 2. With authority, Christ adds His own clear prohibition against divorce in vv. 6 and 9. (See note at 5:31, 32; Mal 2:15, 16.)
The permissible reasons for divorce were expanded in the ancient Church to include threat to a spouse's or child's life and desertion, in all cases acknowledging the spiritual tragedy of such a situation. See note at 5:31, 32.
The disciples rebuked the mothers for bringing little children to Christ both because their manner was “unruly” and because they thought children “diminished His dignity as Teacher and Master” (Theoph). Christ rejects this thinking, setting little children as an example of those who inherit the kingdom of heaven. Therefore, children are invited (even as an example to adults) to participate in the Kingdom through prayer, worship, baptism, chrismation, and Communion. See note at Lk 18:15–17.
Judging: See note at Lk 22:30.
See note at Lk 22:24–27. For many (v. 28) is an Aramaic expression meaning “for all.”
21:41 Again, the Jewish leaders convict themselves. See note for 21:31.
See note at Lk 20:20–26. The distinction between things that are Caesar's and things that are God's does not imply the division of a believer's life into the secular and the sacred. Rather, God is Lord over all of life, including the secular. We do, however, fulfill governmental requirements that do not conflict with our first responsibility to God (Rom 13:1–7; contrast Acts 4:19; 5:29). Paying taxes and similar civil duties are not detrimental to holiness.
Zechariah: See note at Lk 11:51.
See note at Lk 23:29.
See note at Lk 17:37.
Jesus institutes the Eucharist, the long-awaited messianic banquet, to which He admits even Judas (compare Est 7), seeking by all means to save Him. Because of his wicked heart, Judas' participation leads to his condemnation (1Co 11:27–30).

Christ's words are repeated in the Divine Liturgy, inviting the faithful to receive His body and blood. In Holy Communion, we are truly united to Christ. (See note at Lk 22:19, 20.) He gave thanks (from the Greek word for “eucharist”) to teach us (1) how we are to celebrate this sacrament, (2) that He comes willingly to His Passion, and (3) to accept sufferings with thankfulness, knowing that God can use sufferings for ultimate good.

The Old Covenant was sealed with the blood of bulls and goats. The New is sealed by the gift of Christ, who shed His own blood to conquer sin and death and to reconcile us with God. Christ calls it the blood of the new covenant, which is God's promise and the fulfillment of the Law. By new, He means this covenant brings immortality and incorruptible life; this covenant will always have the quality of newness. For many: See note at 20:24–28.

1:1  Gospel (lit. “good news” or “good tidings”) refers not to Mark's writings per se, but to the story of the life, death, and Resurrection of Jesus Christ, the good news of our salvation. Beginning points to the opening events of Christ's public ministry, namely the preparation by His forerunner, St. John the Baptist, and Christ's encounter with him.

See notes at Mt 4:1–10 and Lk 4:1–13.
He did not allow the demons to speak, because they knew Him: See note at Mt 12:16–21.
See note at Mt 9:2–8. Note that one purpose of Christ’s coming into the world is to forgive sins (v. 10), freeing humanity from its bondage. Forgiving sins is a greater power than physical healing, for, as the scribes correctly note, God alone can forgive sins (v. 7).
Thus, the easier task (v. 9) is to grant physical healing. Though Christ is fully God and holds the authority to forgive, He condescends to those gathered and heals this man in order to draw people to God, whom they glorified.

This double response of being both astonished (v. 2) and offended (v. 3) occurs frequently with those who encounter Christ (Lk 11:14–16; Jn 9:16). Christ's rejection in his own country foreshadows His rejection by the whole Jewish nation at His trial before Pilate (Jn 19:14, 15). Brother: See note at Mt 12:46–50.

9:49 Being seasoned with fire means being tested to see if one's faith and works are genuine (see 1Co 3:11–15). In saying every sacrifice will be seasoned with salt, Jesus is quoting Lv 2:13, in which salt stands for the remembrance of God's covenant with His people. See note at Mt 5:13–16.

The Herodians were Jewish political supporters of the ruling house of Herod the Great and thus willing servants of Rome. See note at Mt 22:15–22.
The Sadducees represent landowners and other wealthy families in Jerusalem. They held many high offices in Israel, controlling the temple and the Sanhedrin. They differed from the Pharisees in that they were politically prudent and adapted to the presence of the Romans. The Sadducees interpreted the law even more rigidly than the Pharisees and, unlike them, rejected belief in angels and in the resurrection from the dead at the end of the age. The Sadducees completely disappeared after the destruction of Jerusalem. (See notes on Mt 22:23, 29).
In His response to one of the scribes, Jesus quotes Dt 6:4, 5, the greatest Jewish confession of faith, called the shema' (meaning “hear,” the first word of the confession). In v. 31, He quotes Lv 19:18, combining what is already present in the OT to create a new understanding: love of neighbor is an expression of love of God. See notes at Mt 22:35–40.
See notes at Mt 24:3–31. The account of the end times is given here in a reverse parallel (or chiastic) form, in which the topics mentioned in the first half of the passage are repeated and amplified in reverse order in the second half. Thus, the passage both begins and ends with a warning to take heed about false christs (vv. 5, 23). The second warning is about wars (v. 7), while the second-to-last warning is about tribulation (v. 19). The third warning concerns being delivered up to councils (v. 9), while the third-to-last warning is also about being delivered up, this time by family members (v. 12). At the center of this discourse is the prophecy that the gospel must first be preached to all the nations (v. 10), which is at the heart of the apostolic ministry and mission of the Church (Mt 28:19, 20).
See note at Mt 26:6–13.
14:12  When they killed the Passover lamb: See note at Jn 19:14.
Gethsemane, meaning “oil press,” is an orchard of olive trees at the foot of the Mount of Olives. See note at Jn 18:2.
One of the twelve: See note for v. 20. The fact that a kiss is needed to signal the mob is a commentary on those who comprised that mob. The Jewish leaders and even the most common people would have recognized Him. This shows these soldiers were mercenaries, dispatched by the chief priests and the scribes and the elders, a group which according to John's Gospel included Romans (Jn 18:3). Orthodox Christians pray at every Liturgy for the strength not to kiss Jesus in betrayal as did Judas.
See note at Mt 26:52–54.
The chief priests stirred up the crowd (v. 11): Pilate was hoping to release Jesus, a Man he knew to be innocent (vv. 10, 14; Jn 18:38; 19:4, 6). Thus, he turns to the crowd for support, hoping they will ask for Jesus in spite of the chief priests. Barabbas: See note at Mt 27:16.

Because Christ died so close in time to the Sabbath, the burial customs of the Jews could not be completed. Therefore, these faithful women went as early as possible to complete the rites of burial. Mary the mother of James: See note at Lk 24:10. See the notes at Mt 5–7. This Sermon on the Plain (level place, v. 17) is similar in content to the Sermon on the Mount (Mt 5–7), though not as extensive. Jesus repeated many of His teachings over a period of three years (see note at Jn 2:23).
See note at Mt 12:46–50. It was not Christ's will to deny His mother and brothers. Rather, Jesus is correcting both them and His hearers “to the right idea concerning Himself,” that the family of His Kingdom “is not by nature but by virtue” (JohnChr; see also 11:27, 28).
8:26-39 See note on Mt 8:28–34.
See note at 7:11–17.
Little child: See note on Mt 18:1–4. Theophylact sees John's comment as a regret, his conscience having been pricked by what Christ said about the least and the great. St. Ambrose, on the other hand, sees John as expecting full obedience to accompany such blessings. In either interpretation, Christ's response shows those acting in good faith are not excluded, even if they are not currently numbered among the disciples. “See how divine grace is at work even in those who are not His disciples” (Theoph; see also Nm 11:24–30). On those using Christ's name without good faith, see 11:23; Acts 19:13–16.

18:15-17 Infants are the standard of faith by which adults receive the kingdom of God, and not the other way around. “A little child is not arrogant, he does not despise anyone, he is innocent and guileless. He does not inflate himself in the presence of important people, nor withdraw from those in sorrows. Instead, he lives in complete simplicity” (Theoph). See note at Mt 19:13–15.

However, the crowd's understanding of the Messiah is flawed in that they are expecting a political leader, a king, whereas Christ comes to establish a Kingdom “not of this world” (Jn 18:36).

See note at v. 1. The term Passover (Gr. Pascha) can refer to the original event itself, the celebration of that event, the food that is eaten, or the lamb that is slain. According to the Fathers, Peter represents zeal and John represents spiritual understanding, the virtues with which we are to partake of the Lord's Supper.
The veil of the temple was torn in two: See note at Mt 27:51.
The first day of the week was the day after the Sabbath—Sunday—which in the Christian tradition is called the Lord's Day, the day of worship (Acts 20:7). Spices: See note at 23:55, 56.
See note for vv. 26, 27.
See note on the cleansing of the temple at Mt 21:12, 13. In the synoptic Gospels (Matthew, Mark, Luke), this event occurs at the end of Christ's ministry, while John places it at the beginning. Certain Fathers teach Christ performed this act twice.
The feeding of the multitude is the fourth of our Lord's signs reported by John (see note 2:1–11) and is recorded in all four Gospels. On the parallel between this sign and the story of Israel's Exodus, see note 6:1–71 above. The description of Christ as He took the loaves, gave thanks (Gr. eucharisto), and distributed them (v. 11) prefigures the celebration of the Eucharist. See notes at Mt 14:14–21.
6:26  See note on 6:14, 15.
My own will: Since Christ has two natures, He has two wills—the divine will and a human will. The Sixth Ecumenical Council, held at Constantinople (AD 680–681), proclaims these two wills of Christ do not work contrary to one another, but rather “His human will follows, not resisting nor reluctant, but subject to His divinity and to His omnipotent will.” See notes at 1:14; 5:30.
The eucharistic significance of this passage is indisputable. Our Lord's declaration that He is Himself the living bread that gives life reveals the Mystical Supper of the NT Church. John never reports the details of the Last Supper (such as the "words of institution" recorded in Lk 22:19, 20); instead, he reveals the significance and truth of these events (events that were already known to his hearers) by reporting here Christ's own words. See notes at Mt 26:26–28 and Lk 22:19, 20.
Even His disciples took Christ's teaching on His Body and Blood as a hard saying (v. 60), and many walked with Him no more (v. 66). To this day, there are still those who reject Christ's own words concerning the sacramental eating of His Body and drinking of His Blood, and thus do not walk in His teaching. Because of the difficulty of grasping the depth of this Mystery, many attempt either to define its nature rationally or to explain away Christ's words altogether, giving them a purely metaphorical meaning. Either extreme is dubious; to reject this sacramental teaching is to reject the witness of the Scriptures and the unanimous teaching of the Church throughout history. See note at Lk 22:19, 20.

We have confidence in the Church because the Holy Spirit is our Instructor as well from Pentecost until today, leading us into all truth (16:13). “Where the Church is, there is the Holy Spirit and the fullness of grace” (Iren).

The former account is the Gospel of Luke (see Lk 1:3). The Gospel covers over 30 years of Christ's earthly life; Acts covers over 30 years of early Church life. Theophilus: See note at Lk 1:3.

See note at 2:44, 45. The mandate for the Church is not communal living per se, but to be willing to do what is necessary for the good of the community. Barnabas (v. 36) is highlighted as an example of Christian generosity.
The power of God rests in His Church. While many people had great faith, Peter is given a particular grace to heal in order to draw people to the unity of the Church (see also Jn 14:12). Furthermore, this passage reveals how God works through physical creation, for even light and shadow are given divine power. See note at 19:11–19.

Baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus: See note at 8:16, 17. The laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit (chrismation) is a distinct sacrament from baptism, though always united to it. In the Church today, chrismation can be administered not only by the bishop, but also by presbyters who anoint with a special oil consecrated by the bishop.

21:8 We: See note at 16:10. This Philip the evangelist is one of the seven deacons whose selection was recorded in 6:5, not the apostle of the twelve.
Reasoned: See note at 17:2, 3. Felix was afraid: According to the historian Josephus, Felix had an adulterous marriage and was prone to accepting bribes (v. 26), and thus he responds negatively to Paul's teachings about righteousness, self-control, and the judgment to come. Paul does not back off from proclaiming the truth, even though it means remaining in prison.
We: See note at 16:10.
1:7  Called to be saints refers to the present time; it is not something limited to the future. In the NT, all who are true Christians are saints even while they live (see note at 16:1, 2; see also Eph 1:1; 3:8; Php 1:1; Col 1:2; 2Th 1:10; Jude 3). From among all the saints, meaning those “set apart to God,” the Church canonizes or glorifies certain exemplary saints as having lived such dedicated and faithful lives that they are worthy for us to follow and imitate (1Co 11:1). See note at Acts 9:32.
3:9  See note for vv. 1, 2.
5:18 One Man's righteous act refers primarily to Christ's death and Resurrection, but also to His incarnate life as a whole, which reunites human nature with God.

6:18  Set free from sin: See vv. 1–14 and notes. Slaves of righteousness: See note for v. 16.

See note for 11:36. Service (Gr. latreia, lit. “bow down”) refers to liturgical service and is better translated “worship” (see 1:9, 25; Heb 9:14). Just as man's failure to worship God led to his downfall (1:20–25), so now true worship is the first expression of mankind's renewal. This true worship is:

(1) Physical: We are called to present our bodies for worship, meaning both the physical aspect of our nature and our whole human nature in general.

(2) Living: A contrast to the old covenant, under which sacrifices were put to death. Under the new covenant, to die sacrificially means also to be resurrected. Thus true worship is a living, dynamic expression of both the believer's faith and the community's faith.

(3) Holy: True worship is set apart from the world, both in its form and its expression. Worship that is acceptable is patterned after the Kingdom of Heaven (see Is 6:1–7; Heb 8:5) and filled with virtue that transcends earthly existence.

(4) Reasonable (Gr. logike): This term means more than “logical.” As Jesus Christ is the Logos of God (Jn 1:1), true worship must be “Logos-like,” which means it must be in Christ and according to Christ (see Jn 4:24). True worship is filled with the wisdom and truth of the Son of God, the Word made flesh. To worship reasonably means both to worship and to live according to Christ.
See Mt 22:39, 40.
See Mt 5:48. The cleanliness code (Lv 11–15) instructed Israel how to prepare for worship (Lv 1–10).

Holiness belongs to God, and we, who cannot attain holiness on our own but receive it from Him, are called to live a holy life before Him. Indeed, Christians are called to holiness in every area of their lives. In the Lord's Prayer we say, “Hallowed be Your Name.” It is not that we want God's name to be made holy by our prayers, but that His name may be made holy in us.
1:23  See Jn 1:12, 13. The Lord's suffering and death is incorruptible and abides forever, and is the foundation of our baptism through which we are born again (see Jn 3:1–6; Rom 6:3–5).
Patmos: A small rocky island 40 miles off the western coast of modern Turkey, fifty miles south of Ephesus, to which the Romans exiled criminals. John's preaching must have been considered a seditious threat to the public interest if he was indeed a prisoner there.
This was approximately one day's wage for a worker.
